(20) Ellis Purlee, of Coffeyville, came to Kansas from Illinois about thirteen years ago, and has served as pastor at Potwin, Pawnee Rock, Stafford, and in his present field for the past seven and one-half years, during which time the church has grown from about 200 to more than 500 members. Both school and church are doing substantial work in the city, and ours has the second largest membership. The building is a frame structure about eleven years old, with a seating capacity of 600, and located on the best corner in the city. Things look bright for Bro. Purlee and his congregation. The baptistry here is kept filled all the time.

(21) Christian Church, Wellington.

(22) G. M. Weimar is a graduate of Oskaloosa College, and has been preaching about 20 years. He has held pastorates in Iowa, Oregon and Kansas, and was father of the revival work in Iola. At present he is in the difficult field at Larned, which, organized in 1876 with 20 members, now has 300. For years the services at this place were held in a hall, but a building was erected in 1885. During the past three years a handsome new home was built. Some who have been especially prominent in late years are R. J. C. Poitius, C. W. Smith, J. W. Stokes, and Brother Athey. Marked success has attended Brother Weimar's labors, his strong points being pastoral work, a knowledge of the Bible, and pulpit ability. He has had two thousand additions to his churches, seventeen hundred of them baptisms. The Larned church is the best in the southwest portion of the state.

(23) J. A. Longston, who will soon complete his eighth year at Independence, is among our most successful pastors. He began his work there with a membership of 200. This has been increased to about 500, and a live Bible school taxes the capacity of the building to its utmost. An up-to-date building is being erected, which will accommodate one thousand people. When all is thrown together the Bible school can take care of 500. There are twenty-three different rooms for class purposes. The cost of the building will be $23,000. The church was organized some time prior to 1873, and had at that time fourteen members. Peter Schick and J. D. McBrian and Brother Jacobs were the ministers. A reorganization took place in 1880. The old church was built in 1883, under the leadership of A. Maynard. In 1893 the church building was enlarged. Brother Longston is an Englishman by birth, but located in Kansas in 1884. He graduated from the Bible College at Lexington, preached for the church at Oswego, Kan., and in addition to pastoral duties, for several years edited the Kansas Christian Endeavor quarterly.

(24) Newton Hill has worked hard for thirty years in the Kansas ministry, but has not been much in the limelight. He was born in Terre Haute, Ind., in 1854, but from babyhood to manhood he was a resident of Charleston, Ill., and since the autumn of 1877 has been in Kansas. Formerly a member of the Presbyterian church he later served as a minister for ten years in the Church of God, uniting with the Christian Church under M. T. Howe, and being called in 1894 to Elk county, he served successively the churches of Moline, Grenola and Elk Falls. In 1900 he was compelled to seek other means of support, yet continued in the ministry, like hundreds of other ministers comforting the weary and heavy laden, and striving earnestly to win men to Christ. The congregation at Elk Falls is small, but there are a few earnest workers. Brother Hill has three children, all in the work of the church. He has been a reader of "The Christian-Evangelist" for sixteen years and prizes its weekly visits highly.

(25) L. T. Faulders hails from Illinois, receiving part of his education at Eureka College. He served the church at Cantrall for two years, returning to Eureka for further study. After graduation he served at Athens, Harristown and Sidell, lifting the debt at the latter place. Being persuaded to move to Arcola, he found a congregation of 153 members with an out-of-date building. Before the close of a second year a new church costing $16,000 was well under way. Brother Faulders remained a little over five years and raised the membership to 460. His present field is at Wellington, Kan., whither he went on his record, April 1, 1906. Here, too, was there need of a modern building, and in September of this year a beautiful church building was dedicated, as recently reported in "The Christian-Evangelist." A meeting led by the pastor resulted in 125 additions, making a total of 225 in his two and a half years' work. He has many invitations to evangelize elsewhere, and has always been successful, but the growing work at home now demands all his attention.

(26) Christian Church, Lewis.

(27) S. W. Nay, of the Central Church, Kansas City, Kan., was born in Illinois, taking his ministerial education at Eureka and Christian University. Fifteen years in the ministry, his most important pastorates have been at Hamilton, Ill., Leavenworth and Kansas City, Kan. At these two latter fields he has especially done good work. He had much to do with the building up of the Leavenworth church. While in Kansas City he has received over 700 into the membership, and through his efforts was erected the handsome building now used. There is here a membership of about 660, and a Bible school attendance of almost 300. This school is a living link in city missions. Besides bringing the work to its present happy condition out of chaos, Brother Nay had much to do with the affiliation of the city mission interests of Kansas City, Kan., and Kansas City, Mo. He is a very hard worker.

(28) David S. Shields is one of the best known Kansas ministers. He spent nine years of his early life in Missouri, and afterwards took a business college course. His avocation was as farmer and carpenter. He united with the Christian Church in 1891. Graduating in 1887 he accepted the pastorate at Salina, Kan., where he is now in his twelfth year of service. He is active in all city affairs, has made speeches all over the state on law enforcement, and served as mayor of his city for two years. He has been president of the state ministerial institute, and has held all kinds of political, temperance and religious offices. The Kansas Wesleyan University recently conferred upon him the degree of doctor of divinity for "notable service to the city."

(29) Christian Church, Manhattan.

(30) Guy B. Williamson has recently become assistant pastor and musical director in association with E. W. Allen, at Wichita. He has occupied this position in several strong churches and with his wife had been successful in special evangelistic work.

(31) V. E. Ridenour has achieved much success as singing evangelist, having been in this work for 16 years. He began under the State Board when W. Chenault was president, and his first meeting was with Sumner T. Martin at a place called Pardee, named after Pardee Butler. Brother Ridenour has assisted some of the most successful evangelists, and during his career has seen over ten thousand people added to the church.

(32) W. J. Dodge, who is minister of the church at Leavenworth, is a graduate of Drake and the College of the Bible. He has been preaching fourteen years, part of the time having been state secretary for South Dakota, and missionary evangelist under the Kentucky State Board. He has been in his present pastorate seventeen months, during which time there have been added to the church 91 persons by baptism, and almost as many by letter. His wife holds the peculiar honor of being the first woman to graduate from the College of the Bible. The Leavenworth congregation celebrated its jubilee anniversary last year. In its early history it was one of the strongest churches in the state, and had in its employ some of the most prominent preachers. In the eighties for several years the building was closed. S. W. Nay reorganized it in 1891. The congregation now numbers 425, and every department of the work flourishes. It occupies the oldest church building of our brotherhood in the state.

KANSAS AND BIBLE SCHOOL WORK

A Review of the Past Year and a Preview of the Year to Come

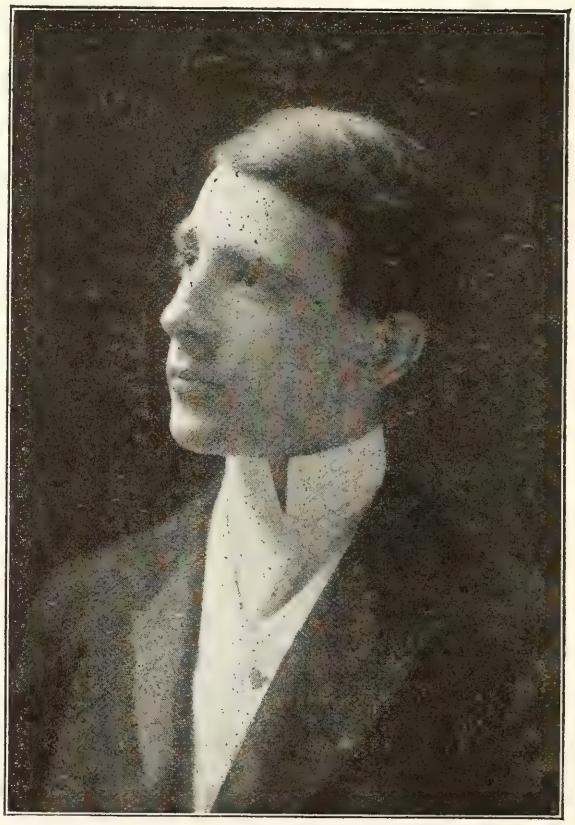
By Myron C. Settle

September 30 marks the close of the first year of Bible school work in Kansas under the direction of a paid worker for some years. The present incumbent of the office of Superintendent of Bible Schools began his official labors September 1, 1907, in the office of the Kansas Christian Missionary Society, in an effort to become familiar with the schools, their location, records, needs, etc. One month was thus spent, so that his field duties really began with the beginning of the missionary year, October 1. In the twelve months that have elapsed he is able to report himself used to the great good of the work and to the great glory of Him whose we are and whom we serve.

At the beginning of the year just closed there were 343 Bible schools on our records. To-day there are 362 schools. Some of these were organized or revived through the efforts of the state superintendent and the state evangelists, and some were "discovered." Our efforts have been centered not so much on the organization of new schools as on the improvement and conservation of what we already have. This, we believe, is a more lasting policy. There are places where we would like to see schools planted, but which, from the very nature of conditions, could not support a school permanently.

Perhaps the most encouraging feature of the work of the past year has been the success with which the teacher training movement has been attended. One year ago there were not more than three classes organized for the purpose of training the teacher, so far as we have been able to ascertain. These were studying some approved course and doing good work. But at our last state convention at Wichita steps were taken looking to the establishment of training classes in all the schools. At that convention pledges were taken from forty-eight schools, which totaled 1,842 students. Eighteen other individuals signified their intention of studying the course alone, making in all 1,855 pupils enrolled to take up this very important phase of Bible school work. That was the beginning, and from it the work of organizing training classes has gone on until to-day we are able to report 303 classes organized in the past year, with a total enrollment of 10,500. Kansas stands to-day second in the list of states having training classes. It is only fair to say that the great Sunflower State is first in point of number of classes in proportion to the number of schools in the state. Our aim in the future with regard to these classes will be to urge them to complete the course and take diplomas. We are fully aware of the fact that a class organized is not a class graduated. We, therefore, call upon all teachers of training classes in the state to urge in the strongest possible terms that the members of their classes finish the course. We are expecting not less than 5,000 graduates by May 1 of next year. At that time the State Sunday-school Convention will be held in Topeka, and at that convention we hope to be able to report one-half of our pledges graduated. The class of 1908-09 will be organized there and officers elected, and we want our classes to be represented in that class in a way that will cast only honor upon our work.

Another most encouraging feature of the past year's work has been the progress of the Adult Bible Class movement. It has been extremely difficult to say which of the two movements—this and teacher training—is the more important. If we could number among our Bible school members every adult of the congregation, the work of the Bible school in many communities would take on life such as was never before dreamed of.



Myron C. Settle, Superintendent of Kansas Bible Schools.

Among the many large and efficient classes of men and women in the state we would name the Shields class for young men (see cut and description on another page) and Howard C. Rash's class for young women, both of Salina; the Brotherhood of Christian Workers, Belleville (see article on another page); the Young Men's Bible class, Atchison, Mrs. Louise Rahrig, teacher; the "Live Cole" class, Abilene; the Philathea class of young women, Lawrence, George O. Foster, teacher; the Alpha Beta class of young men, Columbus, A. C. Boudreau, teacher; the Young Men's class, Hartford, P. E. Hawkins, teacher; the F. A. of A. class, White Cloud, A. D. Connelly, teacher; the Baraca class of young men, Independence, etc.

Bonner Springs, Farmington, Ottawa, Manhattan, Concordia, LaCrosse, Chanute, Parsons, Eureka, Osborne and El Dorado are among the many schools that have organized classes.

This movement is one which we are anxious to see pushed to the front in our beloved state. Any school can have an organized class of adults that wants one. And it beats the old-fashioned Bible class because it puts the responsibility for the success of the class upon the members of the class. They are "it" instead of the teacher being "it." The plan of organizing a class is so simple that we deem it unnecessary to take the space here to explain it, since it has appeared in these columns before so many times.

Space will not permit us to take notice at any great length of the work done in organizing cradle rolls, home departments, etc. Nor can we enter into details concerning those schools that have been helped to a wider vision of the Bible school, its purpose and scope. Suffice it to say that there are some schools in Kansas that are doing as good work as will be found in any large eastern city. Especially worthy of notice is the White Cloud school, which is introducing a high grade of hand work in several of the classes. This is a small school, but it has grown considerably since undertaking the better things. The Lyons Bible school is another splendid example of what a school can do when it puts itself in line with the best Bible school practice of the day.

What we want to see is more of this sort of willingness to take up with the newest and best methods. The improvement in this direction during the past year has been very satisfactory, but we are impatient to see it become more general. It can be so if we will make it so. We have the ability and the workers. Let's go to work and do things.

For the year just beginning we have very high hopes. Let no one think that because we are to be out of the state for a few short months that we will not hold a hand on the lines. We expect to exercise the same supervision of the work that we have all along been exercising. We shall not be able to visit the schools for a little while, but with that one exception we shall keep up the work just the same as usual. By far the best part of our work during the past year has been done entirely by correspondence. In these days of rapid mail service and telegraph and telephone service it is possible to do very, very much for the 362 schools of the state.

We would re-emphasize here the Centennial aim of our brotherhood, namely, "All the church in the Bible school and as many more." With this aim set up in our midst there would be something worth working for, something that would enlist the talent and energy of every Disciple of Christ. And with the Cradle Roll and Home Department and main school it is easily possible to get every member of the church in the Bible school and as many more. It is a striking fact that up to the present time not one Kansas Bible school has achieved the Centennial aim. And there is but one more year in which to do it. Brethren, let us get busy and see if we can not have three hundred to report when we go to Pittsburg, 1909.

Let us also push the training of our teachers to a satisfactory conclusion. To date 32 classes have graduated and taken diplomas. Thirty more are about to finish and take the examination. Let the many classes that were compelled to "vacate" this past summer resume now and finish before next May. Let us show the brotherhood a splendid record of graduating classes. That's what counts.

Don't forget the splendid Jubilee convention, Ocober 22-28, at Topeka. This is our fiftieth year of organized effort, and we ought to mark the year with a convention that shall be epoch-making, both in its influence and results. The Recognition Service in honor of teacher training graduates will be worth your coming. And the feast of good things provided both for Bible school workers and workers in every other department of the church will be such as will tempt the palate of all.

Kansas Bible Schools and Home Missions.

Lord's day, November 22, is Children's Day for American Missions in the Bible schools of the brotherhood.

We are hoping that this day will be a record-breaker in the history of Kansas schools. We believe that it will be.

For years the Bible schools of our state have taken great pride in their offerings to missions. This is especially true of the offering to foreign missions on Children's Day, in June. We have some schools in the state that give very largely indeed to foreign missions. We have one school particularly in mind that is a most royal giver on this great day. It would put to shame many a big city school. It has surpassed its own record of previous years in its last offering. We withhold its name.

There are many such schools in Kansas. Large offerings are the rule rather than the exception. Our schools have certainly made a record for themselves in missionary giving. States with more than twice our numerical strength are giving only about one fourth to one-half more than we are giving.

But with all our giving one fact is strikingly evident in it all—that is, we are giving too one-sidedly. In Kansas last year 35 Bible schools gave $343.25 for home missions while 265 schools gave $3992.35 for foreign missions. And this is not just one year's record, but an investigation shows that our schools have been pursuing this scheme of giving for at least the last eight years.

Now this is manifestly not fair and right. We need to give American missions a "square deal." Not that we ought to give less to foreign missions, for we believe that we are not giving too much to that, but that we ought to give more largely to American missions. Think of it! Only $340 for American missions from Kansas Bible schools in a whole year. And that in "automobile" Kansas, where plenty is the never-failing rule. Do you know that if each one of the 30,000 members of our Bible schools would give only five cents per year we should have $1500 to give to American missions? Where is there one in all our great state that can not give that little? Even then we should be giving less than we now give to foreign missions.

November 22 is the day when we hope our Kansas Bible schools will "about face" and take a new tack. Brethren, this state of affairs has existed too long. We must make amends by increasing our offerings to home missions this year tenfold. And we can do it. Kansans can do anything they set out to do. What do you say, my brother? Will you see to it that your school is lined up next November? Thank you! I knew you would say "yes."

Myron C. Settle.

"Live Cole" Class of Abilene.

The "Live Cole" class of young men and the "Golden Rule" class of young ladies, both of the Abilene Bible school, recently closed a contest with a banquet to the young ladies. The classes have about twenty-five young men and thirty-five young women, and, when organized, numbered two and ten, respectively. The teacher of the "Live Coles," Brother C. A. Cole, writes: "We believe in the contest. It is scriptural, for the Bible teaches that it is right to 'strive for the mastery,' if it be done lawfully. We have been able to conserve the material brought to us by the contest, with but very few exceptions. The class banquet given at the close of the contest may be used very profitably to this end."

On this occasion the young ladies were the guests at a two-course banquet, served by a younger class of girls as waitresses, and followed by appropriate toasts. Below we show a copy of the menu, with the toasts and the speakers, which was printed in the class colors, thus proving very acceptable mementoes of the occasion.

Brother Cole says of these classes: "They are the life of the school. Every adult class ought to organize, now. Get your certificate and go to work."

CLASS MOTTOES

MATTHEW 7:12 ROMANS 12:20

The Biggest Home Department in Kansas.

The Home Department is not a new feature of our school. It is an old feature, inaugurated many years ago. It has always been difficult for us to keep the right kind of superintendent of this department. Some months ago when the superintendent moved away we seemed to find it unusually difficult to elect a satisfactory successor. We finally made a plea before the whole school for volunteers with the statement that from the list of volunteers the teachers and officers would make a selection. We were very fortunate in having among the volunteers Mrs. M. A. Gray, who was elected to the position. The pastor, Brother Shields, gave her valuable assistance in helping her to select a corp of visitors and outline districts for them. The department was greatly enlarged in one week and now numbers 107.

The department is a help to the school in many ways. It is a help especially to the pastor and the church in the pastoral work done by the visitors. Of course the increased biblical study in the homes which it brings about is helpful to the homes, the church and the community.—Howard C. Rash, Supt. of School, Salina, Kan.

So far as we have been able to ascertain, this is the largest Home Department in the state. First Church, Lawrence, is second, with 102; Topeka, third, has 75; Emporia First, 75; Topeka First, 72; Abilene, 51; Kansas City Central, 50; Iola, 50; Eureka, 50; Belleville, 45; Columbus, 38; Chanute, 35; Lyons, 35, and others too numerous to mention.

Baraca Class of LaCrosse, Kan.

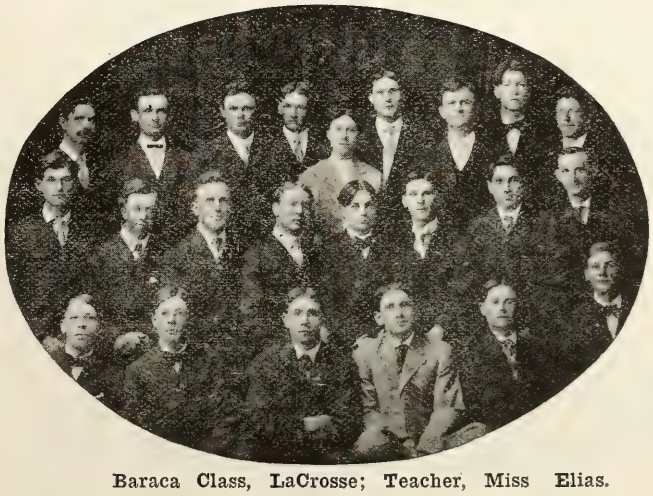
This class was organized in June, 1907, with a membership of three, and has steadily grown until the membership at present is thirty-five, The average attendance for the last three months has been twenty.

The class has fitted the church with the best electric lights of any of the churches, and at a recent meeting of the class it voted to clean up the church properly.

This is the largest class of young men in the county, and we are being watched from all sides. The teacher is one of our finest young ladies, and is a big influence for good with her young men. Altogether, we are very proud of this bunch of young men, and feel that it has a wonderful influence for good in our community, especially with the other young men of the locality.

By the Bible school Sup't.

Here is a live, wide-awake school, composed almost altogether of young people.



Baraca Class, LaCrosse; Teacher, Miss Elias.

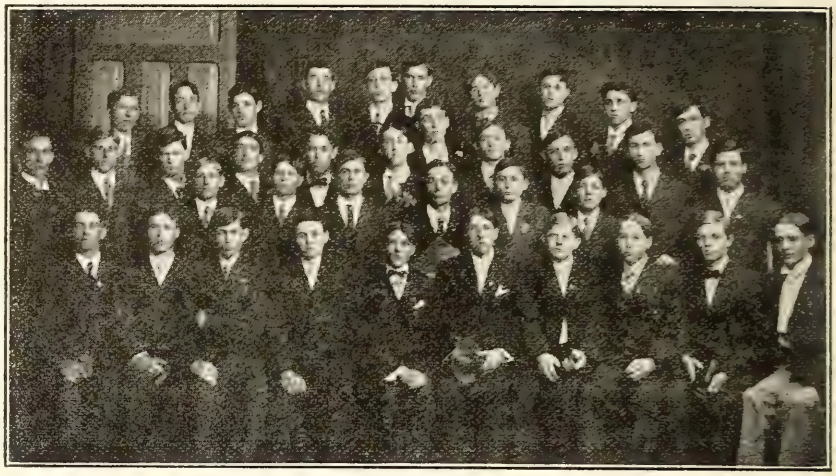
The superintendent of the school is only 21 years of age, but he is a hustler. Here is what he himself says of his school: "I wish you could see this school only once. It is certainly a nice thing to see so many young people doing the Master's work."

Kansas is proud of the LaCrosse school and congratulates it on having such a goodly lot of young people and such a live superintendent. M. C. S.

Parsons Teacher Training Class —"The Pride of Kansas."

The teacher training class of Parsons, Kan., was organized December 2, 1907, with a membership the first night of 302, which rapidly grew until the membership reached 725, and would have grown larger only that the membership was limited to 700. However, the last night members were taken into the class it ran 25 over the 700 mark, and these were accepted. The question has been asked by many how we did it. How did you get so many people to enter the class? How did you hold them after you had them? And how could you teach so many people? These are the questions which have been asked many times. In the first place, the pastor of the Christian church, J. M. Kersey, who was also the teacher of the class, had conducted a Bible class in Parsons for two winters previous to last winter, and all those who had attended knew he was a good teacher. This fact, coupled with the work done in the Bible school in the way of Bible question contests and getting all the Sunday-school workers interested, was how we got so many people to enter the class. And in the second place we held them by making the lessons interesting with an occasional contest; and, lastly, I will say it is easier to teach 700 people than it is to teach 17; that is, if you do it by drilling, which we think is the most successful way of teaching a training class. Drill, drill, drill, from start to finish, and the enthusiasm it will create will surprise you; and even if there are some in the audience who do not take part, they can not help but learn the lesson if it is but properly drilled. It certainly is an experience to hear 700 people repeating in concert the answers to the questions. If you don't think so, organize a class and try it.

The Parsons class expects to be busy again the first part of October, and the aim this year is to start out with a class of 1,000 people. Brethren, the Lord wants us to aim high in his work and then work until our aim is reached.



Baraca Class, Independence, Kan.

Young Men's Class, Hartford, Kan.

"The Pride of Kansas"—The great Teacher Training Class at Parsons.

The Shields Class of Salina.

David H. Shields, Teacher.

The "Shields' Bible Class" for young men was organized according to the International Standard in June, 1906, with a membership of six or seven. None but young men, sixteen years and up, were eligible to membership. Owing to the fact that the class has a large enrollment of college students, the attendance fluctuates very much from winter to summer. The highest enrollment was 130.

The greater part of the time the class has had to rent a room outside of the church for recitation, as there was no room in the church. The class has had the usual socials, banquets, contests, etc., and has used considerable printed matter. It has been a power for good in the Sunday-school and the church. Many of the men have come into the church from the class. In this class, the men are receiving a training for civic righteousness and work in the Kingdom of God.

The Shields Class at Salina, Kan.

The Shields' Bible class is made up of clerks, bookkeepers, teachers, stenographers, farmers, college students, as well as young men engaged in other lines of work. We have members scattered all over the state, all over the United States, and as far as the Philippine Islands.

The class stands for spirituality, philanthropy, sociability and general helpfulness. The teachings and influences of teacher and class, as they try to exemplify the life that Jesus Christ taught, help each member to get more out of life, himself, as well as fit him to help others. We are glad to know that with the scattering of our members, our influence reaches out into farther circles. A member never leaves our class without taking something new into his life, something that will help him perform the duties of life more nobly than ever before.—By the Secretary.

Brotherhood of Christian Workmen, Belleville, Kan.

The Brotherhood of Christian Workers.

Previous to February 11, 1906, there was no class in our Bible school for men of any age. But on that date the men of the "Old People's Bible Class" were placed in a class by themselves and started off with eight men. On June 6 the young men were taken out of the "Young People's Class," and thus the first young men's class started with four young men. This plan was continued for some time with some success, but not what we hoped, so we thought of the Adult Bible Class for men, but we had no place in which to meet and we knew that a separate room was indispensable.

When the church was built, the building committee had an excavation made under the auditorium which they thought would be large enough for a furnace when they were ready to install one. With this hole to begin with, we proposed that the men dig the dirt out and fix up a room there for their class room. This proposition took well with them, and they "got busy" and moved about 1,000 cubic feet of dirt, hauled the sand and put in a cement floor, lathed and plastered the walls and ceiling, put in the doors and windows and we had a room 24x30, and every bit of the work was donated by the men. However, the L. A. S. gave $30 and the Y. P. S. C. E. gave $25 on the material, the men paying the rest.

After we had talked the class up for some time we came to the date which we had set for the organization, and on that day we had 25 present. This was on October 6, 1907. We took for our motto 100 men in 100 days. Of course, we did not reach that mark, but we ran considerably over the 50 mark. The first work we did was to assist in the big revival meeting held by Fife and son, in which 125 persons were added to the church. Many of our men proved splendid personal workers and were the means of bringing many unto obedience to the Gospel.

In January last we had a banquet, to which we invited all of our friends who were not in some other Bible class, and there were about 100 men to listen to the inspiring address of David H. Shields, of Salina. This so stirred and enthused them that they entered heartily into the cleaning up campaign in our city election last spring.

We have the diploma of recognition from the state organization as a regular organized Adult Bible Class.

In our constitution there are two peculiarities. The first provides for a class Home Department in which any man who can not attend the class on the Lord's day may belong, providing he will study the lesson each week and attend all of the monthly class meetings he can. In this class we have several splendid fellows—railroad men—who can not attend on account of Sunday work. The other peculiarity is the clause that provides for sick benefits for the members of the class—something on the order of the 22 club.

At the present time we have a regular membership of about 70 and a Home Department of about five or six.

On an average, half of the entire offering comes from our class. We have never run below 85 cents and have reached as high as $4.26, all of which goes into the school treasury. We have a treasury of our own, however, and at the present time there is over $200 in it.

The ages of our men vary from 16 to 78 years and, contrary to the supposition of some of the young men, feel big, and the old men feel young, and hence the friendliest feeling pervades the entire membership.

The city of Belleville has less than 2,500 population, and there are four other Sunday-schools in town, besides several out only three miles.

We take our name from our motto, which is II Tim. 2:15.

In closing I would like to hint to other schools that "What men have done men may do."—R. C. Harding, teacher of the class and pastor of the church.

The Big Kansas City (Kan.) Cradle Roll.

Mrs. C. F. Garwood, Superintendent.

Our Cradle Roll was organized January 1, 1907. I gave out application cards at the close of Sunday-school and asked all who accepted one to return it with a baby's name, and if they had no baby in their own home to hand it to a neighbor. As a result of this we had about 40 babies with which to start. The rest were not so easily secured, as we did that by personal calls. We appointed a committee of eight ladies to canvass the city, having divided it into districts, and started to work. Now we have 106 babies on our Cradle Roll. It is the personal call that has the best effect. I keep a record book of all the babies' names, addresses and birthdays. Birthday cards are addressed to the baby, and I find that mothers appreciate this kindly attention shown their little ones.

We send special invitations to mothers and babies on such days as Easter, Children's Day and Christmas. On one occasion we had a special program for them. One little girl from our Primary Department held a little white cradle with the babies' name-cards tied around it—the boys' cards being tied with pink ribbons and the girls' cards with blue—while she repeated a welcome verse. Twelve little girls sang "Christ was once a little baby, just like you and me."

Every Sunday morning in the Primary Department we have a sentence prayer and welcome song for the Cradle Roll babies.

The influence of this kind of work in arresting the attention of mothers of babies and the subsequent enlistment of their sympathy and co-operation can not be estimated. The Cradle Roll is a fixture in our Bible school.

THE CHILDREN OF THE KINGDOM.

Topic October 14: Mark 10:13-16; Zech. 8:3-5.

"Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, he shall in no wise enter therein." The "whosoever nots" are fully as important in the Bible as the "whosoevers" of divine grace and mercy. There are some things that in the very nature of things can not be. Humility, meekness, faith, teachableness, willingness, are the conditions of entrance into the kingdom of God. The children of the kingdom are not slaves, but free. They enter the kingdom from choice and not from necessity; they are "free born." This is the glorious light and liberty of the children of God of which Paul speaks.

"Ye must be born again," the Master said. It is a moral and spiritual necessity. It is not a great mystery. It is a matter of simple intelligence, of mental and spiritual receptiveness. "Art thou a teacher in Israel and knowest not these things?" It is the question, asked in surprise, by the Master of Nicodemus. The new birth is the simple, sincere, supreme acceptance of the truth as it is in Jesus Christ. And this acceptance is in "the obedience of the faith," from the heart. The marvelous thing is that all are not willing to accept of the Christ, through whom we come into such a rich inheritance of "all spiritual blessings in heavenly places." For this inheritance is in him, and not apart from him, since he is the revelation of the Father, and "no man cometh unto the Father" save by him. This, too, because no one ever came to show us the Father excepting the Son of God, who came forth from the bosom of the Father and whom the Father sent into the world. If we are to become heirs of the kingdom, we must become the children of the Heavenly Father. We must be born "not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God." The law was given through Moses; grace and truth came through Jesus Christ. No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son, who is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him. "The acceptance of the declaration with all our heart is faith. Obedience from the heart to that form of doctrine delivered unto us (Rom. 6th chapter) is the consummation of the new birth of the Spirit. It is then we come into sonship. And as we become sons we also become servants. And "now, being made free from sin, and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto sanctification, and the end eternal life." (Rom. 6:22).

According to the prophecy of Zechariah, the new dispensation is to be marked by a great zeal for the truth. "Jerusalem shall be called the city of truth; and the mountain of Jehovah of hosts the holy mountain." Another characteristic of the kingdom, as foretold by the prophet, is thus indicated: "There shall yet old men and old women dwell in the streets of Jerusalem, every man with his staff in his hand for very age. And the streets of the city shall be full of boys and girls playing in the streets thereof; . . . and they shall be my people and I will be their God in truth and in righteousness." These are the things that ye shall do: "Speak ye every man the truth with his neighbor; execute the judgment of truth and peace in your gates; and let none of you devise evil in his heart against his neighbor; and love no false oath; for all these are things that I hate, saith Jehovah."

To be the children of the kingdom we must hate the things that God hates and love the things that he loves. To be a good hater may be a heavenly trait. Good lovers are perforce good haters. "Thus saith Jehovah of hosts: I am jealous of Zion with a great jealousy, and I am jealous for her with great wrath." O for a great jealousy of a godly sort for the Church of the living God—such a jealousy, such a righteous zeal, as will strip us of our pettiness, our pretense, our selfishness and our shams, and stir us up to right living and ardent loving, that we may be worthy to be called the children of God, in the midst of a crooked and perverse generation, among whom we ought to shine as lights in the world, holding forth the word of God. Then, indeed, would men take hold of us, as the prophet declared they would of the Jew, saying, "We will go with you, for we have heard that God is with you."

The Home Department

If all the skies were sunshine,
Our faces would be fain
To feel once more upon them
The cooling plash of rain.

If all the world were music,
Our hearts would often long
For one sweet strain of silence
To break the endless song.

If life were always merry,
Our souls would seek relief
And rest from weary laughter
In the quiet arms of grief.

Opportunity.

A sculptor once showed a visitor his studio. It was full of gods. One was very curious. The face was concealed by being covered with hair, and there were wings on each foot.

"What is his name?" asked the spectator.

"Opportunity," was the reply.

"Why is his face hidden?"

"Because men seldom know him when he comes to them."

"Why has he wings on his feet?"

"Because he is soon gone, and once gone, he can never be overtaken."

Suited Both Claimants.

A Nevada man having extensive mining claims in the gold-field region tells of a lucky "strike" that was made last year near Carson City, a strike that proved to be of such promise that a goodly sized camp immediately sprang up around it.

The two principal mine owners were, respectively, an Irishman and a Jew; and as a compliment to these leading citizens the camp decided to leave to them the bestowal of a suitable name upon the new community.

There followed many conferences between the two, each of which resulted in an argument. The Irishman stood out for a name that should suggest his native isle, while the Jew was just as insistent, on his part, for a name that should be suggestive of the chosen people. This deadlock continued so long that the rest of the camp grew restless, and finally insisted that there should be a compromise. So the new camp was called "Tipperuslem."

Looking Up.

"How many fine rainbows we have had this season!" remarked one woman to another who had been summering in the same place. "Why, I haven't seen any!" was the reply. Individuals vary greatly in respect to this particular habit of observation. One knows whole families where the sunset is noticed and commented on almost as a matter of course, where special sunsets are remembered and compared for months, while others, with west windows equally favoring, only realize that it is "time to light up." A display of Northern Lights gives intense pleasure to some; others will not step out into the cold to look at it. No doubt the difference is largely one of early training. The children are fortunate whose father's or mother's taste inclines them to watch for the beauties of the sky. Astronomy is one of the slowest of the outdoor sciences in coming into popular favor, but it is one of the most ennobling, and it repays even superficial study. The constellations learned in childhood will look down with friendly eyes all through life.—Congregationalist.

Don't Grip the Thorns.

A novice, working among prickly plants, noticed how deftly the Scotch gardener handled them, and commented upon the fact. "Aye, there's many a scratch ye get at the first," answered the old man, "but if ye're canny, ye soon learn not to grip the thorns." It is a lesson of life as well as of gardening. The prickly, disagreeable things are plentiful; the uncomfortable happenings, the little slights and offenses, the cross-grained tempers and unreasonable words, are everywhere pushing themselves into unpleasant notice, but it is not necessary to "grip" them. There are those who do that all their days, and go about in a continual state of hurt, soreness and complaint. He who is "canny" will learn to pull them aside with light touch, and for the most part avoid their sting. They are not worth taking seriously enough to bring torn hands or heart.

Lord Bless My Pennies.

A little girl six years old was desirous of putting her pennies into the missionary box with others. When saying her prayers at her papa's knee she hesitated a moment, and then added: "Lord bless my two pennies for Jesus' sake, Amen." After the child had gone to bed, her father asked his wife: "What made Gracie say that?" "She has prayed thus every night since giving her pennies to the missionary box," was the mother's reply. Do you, dear young reader, pray, "God bless my pennies," when you give your mite to some ragged school child? If not, pray earnestly for the blessing, and you will soon find that prayer will do more than your pennies.

THE SECRET OF THE LORD.

God sometimes shuts the door and shuts us in,
That he may speak, perchance through grief or pain,
And softly, heart to heart, above the din,
May tell some precious thought to us again.

God sometimes shuts the door and keeps us still,
That so our feverish haste, or deep unrest,
Beneath his gentle touch may quiet, till
He whispers what our weary hearts love best.

God sometimes shuts the door, and though shut in,
If 'tis His hand shall we not wait and see?
If worry lies without, and toil and sin,
God's word may wait within for you and me.

The Wrong Way to Do It.

Suppose some cold morning you should go ino a neighbor's house and find him busy at work on his windows, scratching away, and should ask him what he is doing, and he should reply: "Why, I am trying to remove the frost; but as fast as I get off one square, it comes onto another."

Would you not say: "Why, let your window alone, and kindle a fire in the stove, and the frost will come off."

Let the fire of love to God, kindled by prayer, burn in your heart, and the bad habits will soon melt away.

"God Bless the Choir.

Under this head a precentor gathers up the following observations:

Many choirs receive more criticisms than prayers.

The choir-hater and the choir-worshiper are both at fault.

The church should show its appreciation of the choir, and deal liberally with it. Parsimony is most fatal to musical progress.

The choir should have a right conception of its place. It does not exist to exploit its own ability, but to lead the worship.

The choir should consider its audience. Music, to be effective, must be adapted to its hearers' capacities.

The choir should be willing to learn, and the minister should know what to teach it as to its duties.

There is no substitute for congregational singing. Its effect is electrical. A good choir seeks to develop it, and keeps in touch with the congregation.

The spirit of a choir should be devout and reverent.—Central Christian Advocate.

The Presentation That Didn't Present

Wherein is related a Near-Tragic Episode in the life of a trusting young man

By Frank L. Stanton

All that evening I was in a fluttering state of preparation—for all that year I had been giving free space in the paper to what I thought was a worthy cause, and the president of the same had caused me no end of trouble. And this is just exactly how it all came about:

I was preparing to leave the paper for another in a distant town. I didn't tell my friend, the president, about it, but he came to the knowledge of it somehow; and then he came to me.

I was alone in the office when he entered. I recall now that it was a beautiful April morning, and the doors and windows of heaven and earth were wide. The president tip-toed toward me—a warning finger on his lips, and closed the earthly doors, and was in the act of going through the same performance with all the windows, when I rose and said—

No; I didn't say anything—but he said: "Sh!—Not a word, my dear boy—not a word. Are we alone?"

"I think we are," I said. "You seem to have shut us up pretty tight! What's the matter? Has anybody been murdered—or just about to be?"

He smiled a cunning, maniacal smile, and I—edged toward the door.

He caught me in the act, and said, reassuringly—though in a suspicious whisper:

"I was about to tell you here, but I won't. It is better that you see for yourself. Come!"

I came. And down the street we walked, and halted not until we ran against the town jewelry store, which we entered.

"Do you see that watch there," he said, "the one with the diamond glittering in the center of the case?"

"Impossible to miss it," I replied. "What of it?"

He told me on the way back to the office. He had heard, with sorrow, of my intended departure. I had been good to the Cause he represented, and he and the Cause were going to give me that watch for time-keeping purposes. He—they—had designed to take me by surprise, but that seemed a heartless thing to do, especially as I might wish to respond to the presentation speech, and incidentally bring his name into my remarks, and enlarge upon the work he had done for the Cause, and thereby help the Cause along; and then, too, this whole affair would show up well, under appropriate headlines, in the next issue of the paper!

"Go ahead, now," he concluded, "and fix you up a good speech, and get it by heart, so that you can deliver it offhand—with apologies for having been taken 'completely by surprise,' and knocked clean off your feet, as it were; and ring in a rhyme that will take in all the members of the Cause, and don't forget me! We'll be here at 8:30 sharp, Wednesday evening next. And now the cat's out o' the bag, go ahead and get ready!"

And that confidential disclosure was my reason for beginning this true story about being "in a fluttering state of preparation" on a certain evening.

For three solid days and dreamless nights I labored on my remarks-to-be when that watch should show up, accompanied by the diamond in the center of the case, and engraved with my name, "as a token of affection and esteem," etc., etc."

"Like a guilty thing," I stole into the secret woods, and spoke my speech before birds, the helpless trees and, occasionally, stray cattle—when they couldn't get away convenient; and I thought I had the speech down pretty fine when—

The fatal night came!

I don't think I lost a gesture on my way to the office, but, as I said in the beginning, I was in a flutter when I got there.

On this particular night I had on a white vest which had been purchased for the occasion on the installment plan, and the pearl buttons thereon glittered in the lamplight.

I consulted my Waterbury watch, and it registered 7 o'clock. The time didn't seem to hustle at all; it just dragged itself along. But 8 o'clock showed up at last!

The grand finale was at hand—only 30 minutes more, and then—

Footsteps. The presentation committee was at hand!—But no; only a tired printer, who had returned to the office to "throw in" the remaining forms of the last issue.

Then 8:30 came and went.

No committee!

The Waterbury and the office clock together registered 9.

No committee!

At 10:30 I began to get hungry and lonesome. I was about to jerk my coat and white vest off and go to work for my living, when—the door was opened, and the president came in.

He nodded to me—coldly, I thought, and left a little complimentary notice of himself and his work on the editor's desk. He hadn't done that previously—he always brought his little notices to me. I was the associate editor.

Not a single word about that expected watch, with the diamond—not a shadow of the presentation committee.

And he was in the act of leaving, too,—had got himself as far as the door, when I called to him: "What time is it?"

He stopped—started—came softly toward me.

"By Jove!" he exclaimed, "that reminds me! And I'm so sorry about it, too! But the fact is, my dear fellow—" he bent his head and whispered: "the committee decided it would be best not to give you a watch at all, and the money subscribed has been refunded to the subscribers. Lots of good men who have worked on this paper have left—without a watch; and the sense of the committee is that, to give you a watch would violate all precedent, and cause the departed ones to think unkindly of us. But you've got a watch anyway, haven't you?"

I don't know how I pulled through with my department that week; but the paper came out as usual on Saturday—but it didn't contain that little complimentary notice the president had written about himself, and laid so gently on the Editor's desk!

For three days and nights I held dark counsel with the editor as to just what should be done with a man like the president of that new Lost Cause.

He suggested killing, but upon reflection we decided that we couldn't afford to waste powder, and so we resolved to hire a man to sandbag him privately.

This also was given over, and we resolved to leave him to Time.

I afterwards sold my speech for two dollars, to a fellow who really got a gold watch—though I don't know whether it had a diamond in it or not. I guess he got through with the speech all right. But I never made any inquiries. I had lost all interest in it!—Uncle Remus's Home Magazine.

J. D. Benedict, the superintendent of the Indian Territory schools, nodded toward a sturdy and grave young Indian girl.

"She is a maid," he said, "in the house of a friend of mine, and the other day she was left in charge of the children while her mistress went on a long visit.

"The mistress, on her return, said to the maid:

"How did the children behave during my absence, Caroline? Well, I hope."

"Beautifully, madam," Caroline answered. "And at the end they fought terribly together."

"Why did they fight?" the mother asked.

"To decide," Caroline said, "which was behaving the best."

Albert's Victory

By Edith Bradley

In the early pioneer days of long ago, out in western Kansas, where the natural scenery is most enchanting, James Gordon located and took up a claim for a homestead. After preparing a rude house of sod and logs, he went back to Ohio and made due preparations for an early move in the spring to his western claim. It meant quite a little to the Gordons to give up their eastern friends and advantages and move so far west with their two children, a boy of twelve, and a girl, Elizabeth, ten years of age. Yet it had to be done, and done cheerfully, for Jim Gordon was a man of few words, and when he spoke, it was law. Mrs. Gordon was of a splendid family, ambitious, cultivated and a Christian. I am inclined to emphasize this last-mentioned fact, for it was that beautiful grace which won her friends everywhere. It was contrary to her wishes to make this change, chiefly on account of the children. How was their education to be obtained, and where could they look for religious privileges? Her heart seemed very, very sad as she parted from her old friends, and the goodbyes were not easily said. Not so with Jim Gordon. In his rough, kind-hearted way he said: "No time now for tears; you'll get used to it." So his wife, Mary Gordon, wiped her eyes with the corner of her apron, and with a grim smile made up her mind to face the music, and endure the hardships without a murmur.

Springtime was glorious with song-bird and glow of sunshine. Mary sang a snatch of an old song as she tried to make the rude hut look home-like and cosy. "I must be brave and do it for the children's sake," she said. Oh, the comfort in that thought! She forgot self entirely, the little people were so enchanted by the acres and acres of grass and flowers, the big blue sky and the cattle lowing in the meadow. Never a care, never a fear, and Jim toiled all day long, breaking the sod with a true and steady yoke of oxen, so tired when night came, that anything that offered shelter seemed like home, sweet home to him.

Thus he lived in his own little world, never seeing the weary or tired look which his wife could not hide. Day by day the field grew larger, and was soon ready to be planted. They all turned out to plant the corn, that it might be in and ready for the early rains. Thus the time passed and autumn was approaching. They were in that forerunner of the season that we call "Indian summer," when all things put on a hallowed, soft light, when the brook's murmur is echoed by the bees' song, and the trees put on tints of red and gold. All nature seems to respond to the Creator in soft and mellow tones of harmony. These were days of deep meditation for Mary Gordon. She often sought the Master in secret prayer for help to bear her burdens, to let her light shine, and for strength to overcome self. She always came out of these little talks with God all new, ready to smile or sing, and the children never guessed that she knew much of real heartaches. Their crops were good, cribs must be built to hold the grain, and every day seemed full of work and care. After the crops were gathered, Jim Gordon worked with energy to prepare timber and lumber for an addition to their present home, for he never wearied of planning to improve the little homestead. Mary was always busy with butter making, baking and raising chickens and turkeys. This was quite an industry at that time, as a buyer made a regular trip through their region every few weeks, buying all extra products in exchange for groceries and tinware.

A short time before Christmas little Elizabeth was taken very ill. Over at the mission there was a doctor, and when he came he found that the little sufferer had reached the dangerous stage of diphtheria. They did all they could, but in a short time they laid her little body to rest under the old oak tree where she had spent so many hours with her dolls and books. This was a severe blow to the family, and the father, especially, refused to be comforted. So far away from the real Comforter, he could not understand Mary's sweet submission, or why the hours spent under the old oak tree could be a help to her.

The minister came out to see them as often as he could, and, taking a great liking to Albert, loaned him books. Albert proved to be a great student, and looked forward to a time when he might go east to college. One day, just before sunset, his mother stepped out into the yard for a deep breath and to cool her brow, for it had been a hard day. As she looked up, she saw Albert coming out of the orchard with a water jug in his hand. A great, big fellow, he was the pride of his mother's heart. The troubled look on his face caused her to ask him,

"What is it now, son?"

"Well, he owes me a show to make a man of myself, and I am going to go, and without his consent, if I can't get it. I don't see how father found it out, but he knows that I wish to go to college, and he is down on it. He says I'd better put the money in stock. I have to leave you here, little mother, but I am going."

"God bless you, my boy! Settle the question by your own prayerful convictions and I am sure the way will be opened."

The water jug filled, Albert returned to the hay field. The mother started for the house, as she saw a team drive into the door yard. A man about forty years of age asked for shelter for himself and son, a boy about sixteen. They were traveling for the father's health from eastern Kansas to Colorado, overland. He was a minister of the gospel, named William Wood, and said that "Gordon" was a family name to him. Upon inquiry, they found they were own cousins to his wife, and that his boy's given name was Gordon. The brief conversation transformed the travelers from casual strangers into welcome kinsmen and guests. When Jim Gordon came in to supper and met the strangers, he eyed them with astonishment too great for words. "Well, I'm beat!" he ejaculated at last. "Glad to see you. You find this a land of heathen, nearly, don't you?"

"Well, not exactly," said the kind-hearted minister. "Nothing right here would indicate it, do you think so?"

"Well, don't know as I do, as that boy of mine has done little but talk college and the ministry for the past five months. You don't see anything like a preacher in him, do you?"

Albert sent an appealing look in the minister's direction which gained the victory for him. He actually asked him to go back home with him, since it was all in the family. His own son would enter college this year also, and no reason why he should not have a home with them and try a pull at college and see how it would go. "Well, I'm beat again!" declared Jim Gordon. "I don't seem to figure in the business around here. Told 'em I thought the money would be better spent in stock."

"I guess you will not be sorry when this young man comes out of college a winner," said the minister.

In a few days he and his son started on their journey with a promise to return in six weeks and take Albert with them. Mrs.

God's Almoners.

BY E. E. BROWN.

God's almoners are we,—
From out his store
He gives to thee, to me
(Now less, now more),
Some gift, some sacred trust
That we alone
Of all his children must Bear swiftly on

To those who watch and pray
In bitter need,— Doubting, while we delay,
If God doth heed,
Doubting because the hand
That holds the gift
Comes not to succor and
The burden lift.

God's almoners!—Untold
The honor given
To us that we should hold
The gifts of heaven
In sacred trust like this!
Then let it not,
The deed forgot,
Be ours the joy to miss.

Gordon seemed to take on a new lease of life, and was never too tired nor too busy to help in the plans for the start to college. As for Albert, his quick step and merry whistle was something like an inspiration to the father. Gordon actually woke up and declared that there must be something in it, after all, for he never saw Mary more happy, and as for the boy—well, the mystery of it all was a problem too deep for him to solve at present, save that it did stir up his own mind not a little on the subject of religion.

The morning of Albert's departure is at hand. "Mother, dear, do not feel lonely. I shall work hard to meet your high ideal. Just pray for me." This kind of a parting made it so much easier for Mary, and she even smiled as she wiped away a stray tear. To his father Albert said: "Goodbye, father! Let little mother teach you how to live, while I am away. You have one lesson yet to learn, and she is a good teacher." Jim Gordon looked amazed, and said: "Well, I'm beat! You're right, my boy. Goodbye! Write to us often!"

Mrs. Wood was very kind and took pleasure in preparing a room for her cousin's son, and he was made to feel at home. He was a general favorite at college because of his sincerity and hearty good will for his fellow students. No one could excel him at foot-ball, and he was the pet of the team. The girls knew just whom to call upon when they needed a friend in the society, and no one could raise the college yell on the campus as full or as quickly. The first year soon passed. He spent the vacation selling stereopticon views for a big wholesale house, and cleared expenses and the next year's tuition, and also spent some time at home. The next year he earned a scholarship, and continued to prosper. Finally, when the close of his college course came, he stood first in his class, and was a general favorite with the faculty. He sent for his parents to attend the commencement. The mother came, and was received royally by him, and taken to all the sports and college functions with pride and careful attention. When he came out victorious in the Field Day exercises, the crowd stormed and his fellow-students rushed at him, crying, "Gordon! Gordon! What's the matter with Gordon!" He stepped to the front, took off his cap, and said: "Stand back, boys! My queen is first!" and he led to the front a little woman, neatly clad in gray. Three hearty cheers greeted her, followed by the repeated cry of "Gordon! Gordon!" and the accompanying college yell. Albert had won the victory.

That Matter of Eating, Again.

Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, the government food expert, has given out a few simple rules for eating and drinking in the heated term, which he says will offset the high temperatures. The rules are excellent, including the poetry, and are as follows:

Eat one-fourth less in summer than in winter.

Eat meat in moderation.

Banish all alcoholic beverages.

Eat most largely of cooked fruits and vegetables.

Drink nothing below 60 degrees in temperature, and drink sparingly.

Be careful to seek the society of cheerful friends.

Practice moderation in eating, drinking and open air exercise.

Don't fret.

Don't worry.

Has gone to his sarcophagus
By pouring water, icy cold,
A-down his hot esophagus.

THE SOURCE OF JOY

IN Christ the principle of self-denial became conscious, voluntary, and delightful. He entered into the work of redemption with clearest knowledge, entire sympathy, absolute willingness and overflowing love. In all His doing and suffering for our salvation are freedom, readiness and joyfulness. His true disciples share His spirit of intelligent self-sacrifice: consciously, willingly, lovingly, they serve the world and one another. Self-immolation, which is unconscious in the brute, which dimly awakes to the knowledge of itself in reflective humanity, realizes itself lucidly and joyously in the light, love and liberty of Christ. "Lo, I come to do Thy will, O My God." "I delight to do Thy will, O My God." Such was the spirit and language of the Master in the hour of Gethsemane, in the presence of Calvary. The disciple must not rest until he attains something of the same conscious surrender and joy. Let us not ignorantly and murmuringly carry the cross with Simon, but with St. Paul "glory in the cross." Our Lord showed us that the highest joy of existence is in limiting and renouncing ourselves that we may help and save others.

WHAT WE STAND FOR.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

Current Events

The trade situation in England seems to be very bad. In large centers of population, hundreds of thousands of people are idle, and can get nothing to do. With winter approaching, the pinch of poverty is being felt. The situation is aggravated by the teaching of the Socialist party, which has produced a deep and widespread conviction of what is called "the right to work"; that is, that the local authorities must provide work for all who can work, and food and shelter and raiment for those who can not. This has led to a union of unemployed, as well as unemployable, in which the loafers and tramps may be counted, to force the city authorities and the government to carry out their program. Other cities have followed the example of Glasgow, where mobs have assailed the council chambers, and have tried in every way to harrass the better-to-do portion of the population. Just what the issue will be can not be foreseen. The British government has, in the past, been very sympathetic to those out of employment, and has, on occasions, provided governmental work to tide them over periods of distress. It is a satisfaction to know that the churches are alive to the situation, and are organizing their own agencies, to look after the members of their own folds, and to extend their assistance in any possible way that will be helpful. Of course, the churches will not get what is due them, in the way of thanks, but they are not working for the recommendation of men who have no belief in the program they present.

Churches and Unemployed.

Representatives of nineteen of the world's parliaments have been meeting at Berlin, to discuss anew the peace of the world, and how to maintain it by arbitration. The address of welcome was made by Prince von Bulow, who assured the delegates that Germany is thoroughly agreed to any measures establishing harmonious relations between the nations. "Those are real patriots," he said, "who attempt to prevent wars by endeavoring to overcome ignorance, which is always mischievous; bitterness, which is destructive; hatred, which is blind; and ambition, which is often misguided." A statement like that deserves the consideration of some of the hot-headed war advocates in our own country. Germany, with its immense army, has every reason to want peace, and despite the fact that suspicion has often attached to any statement of a specific nature coming from the emperor or his ministers, we believe that this is the real feeling of those in authority, in nearly all governments, at the present day. The situation in the Balkans, and the attitude of the Powers toward it, but emphasizes the fact that all civilized nations are in dread of any war on a large scale.

A Word for Peace.

The World's Sunday-School Association, which assembled in Rome, Italy, recommended that the third Sunday in October in each year be observed by evangelical churches everywhere as a day of prayer for Sunday-schools. Hence the invitation is to every child of God to contribute a link in the chain of prayer which is intended to circle the globe.

Sunday-school Prayer Day.

One of the staple arguments against temperance legislation is that it will cut down municipal receipts. Mr. H. C. Dungan, of Jackson, Ohio, recently wrote to Governor Wilson, of Kentucky, asking him in regard to the statement that the revenues of Kentucky have been seriously reduced by the cutting off of liquor licenses. The governor's secretary replied: "The decreasing of the treasury in Kentucky is not attributed to curtailed liquor license. The revenues have been increasing yearly in the state. It is the unusual expense in the construction of the $2,000,000 capitol and the heavy appropriations made by the legislature which has caused a deficit, the liquor license having had nothing whatever to do with it." This is one more testimony to hundreds of others that liquor does not mean prosperity to a community.

The Kentucky Revenue.

Some months ago effort was made by the liquor interests to get Mr. Trickett, assistant attorney general of Kansas, into trouble. He had been speaking and writing about the good effects of prohibition. So some bribery charges were trumped up and the report spread that he was found guilty. On the contrary, Governor Hoch instructed the attorney-general to institute a full investigation, and the case against Mr. Trickett has been dismissed as frivolous. It was an infamous conspiracy and shows to what length the evil forces of the liquor dealers will go.

Vindicated.

"Did you ever read the Bible?" This was the question asked by a Chicago judge of a girl brought into the Juvenile Court. "Never heard of it," answered the child, "but we got an almanac."

"How do you expect to go to heaven if you never read the Bible?" queried the court.

"Don't know anything about heaven," answered Lottie, "but pa promised to take us to Lincoln Park when he gets to work and gets car fare."

We can hardly realize such ignorance exists in American cities, yet this is no doubt one case in thousands. Another striking example is brought forth in another court case where a young man of 17 years was accused of malicious mischief.

When Thomas was called to the stand the Justice asked:

"Do you know what an oath means?"

"No," was the reply.

"Ever hear of heaven?"

"Nope."

"Were you never at Sunday-school?"

"No; never went to Sunday-school. Never was at church. Never went to school."

"Can you read or write?"

"Nope."

"This witness is not competent," said the Justice and Thomas was dismissed. Young Thomas was born near Butler and has had the usual advantages of an American boy.

Is any comment needed?

Astonishing Ignorance.

It appears that a decision was recently set aside for a very foolish reason. The members of a sheriff's jury received fifty cents a hearing instead of twenty-five, as the law prescribes, and on this ground the Appellate Division of the New York court ordered a new trial in an insanity case. This is the kind of technical triviality that brings the law into contempt. Had it any bearing on the decision, the public would not complain; but it is this kind of foolishness that impedes progress.

Trivial Technicalities.

Jerusalem has had another sensation. A motor car, the first ever seen in the Holy City, carrying a Boston gentleman, recently arrived from Mafia, Syria.

Editorial

An Illuminating Experience.

Few things are more valuable to young ministers than the experience of older men in the ministry, whose education, ability and character give assurance of their sincerity in dealing with the problems of the ministry. In his "Positive Preaching and the Modern Mind," Dr. P. T. Forsyth, addressing the ministerial students of Yale, gives the following bit of illuminating experience which we are sure in these critical times will prove helpful to many of our scholarly young men. He says:

"Might I venture here to speak of myself, and of more than thirty years given to progressive thought in connexion, for the most part, with a pulpit and the care of souls? Will you forgive me? I am addressing young men who have the ministry before them, as most of mine is behind, strewn, indeed, with mistakes, yet led up of the Spirit.

"There was a time when I was interested in the first degree with purely scientific criticism. Bred among academic scholarship of the classics and philosophy, I carried these habits to the Bible, and I found in the subject a new fascination, in proportion as the stakes were so much higher. But fortunately for me, I was not condemned to the mere scholar's cloistered life. I could not treat the matter as an academic quest. I was kept close to practical conditions. I was in a relation of life, duty, and responsibility for others. I could not contemplate conclusions without asking how they would affect these people, and my word to them, in doubt, death, grief, or repentance. I could not call on them to accept my verdict on points that come so near their souls. That is not our conception of the ministry. And there were people in the press and care of life. They could not give their minds to such critical questions. If they had had the time, they had not the training. I saw amateurs making the attempt, either in the pew or in the pulpit. And the result was a warning. Yet there were Christian matters which men must decide for themselves, trained or not. Therefore, these matters could not be the things which were at issue in historic criticism taken alone. Moreover, I looked beyond my immediate charge, and viewed the state of mind and faith in the Church at large—especially in those sections of it nearest to myself. And I became convinced that they were in no spiritual condition to have forced on them those questions in which scholars so delighted and differed. They were not entrenched in that reality of experience and that certainty of salvation which is the position of safety and command in all critical matters. It also pleased God, by the revelation of his holiness and grace, which the great theologians taught me to find in the Bible, to bring home to me my sin in a way that submerged all the school questions of weight, urgency, and poignancy. I was turned from a Christian to a believer, from a lover of love to an object of grace. And so, whereas I first thought that what the churches needed was enlightened instruction and liberal theology, I came to be sure that what they needed was evangelization, in something more than the conventional sense of that word. 'What we need is not the dechurching of Christianity, but the Christianizing of the Church.' For the sake of critical freedom, in the long run that is so. Religion without an experimental foundation in grace, readily feels panic in the presence of criticism, and is apt to do wild and unjust things in its terror. The churches are not, in the main, in the spiritual condition of certainty which enables them to be composed and fair to critical methods. They either expect too much from them, and then round upon them in disappointed anger when it is not forthcoming, or they expect so little from them that they despise them as only ignorance can. They run either to rationalism or to obscurantism. There was something to be done, I felt, before they could freely handle the work of the scholars on the central positions.

"And that something was to revive the faith of the churches in what made them churches; to turn them from the ill-found sentiment which had sapped faith; to reopen their eyes to the meaning of their own salvation; to rectify their Christian charity by more concern for Christian truth; to banish the amiable religiosity which had taken possession of them in the name of Christian love; and to restore some sense not only of love's severity, but of the unsparing moral mordancy in the cross and its judgment, which means salvation to the uttermost; to recreate an experience of redemption, both profound and poignant, which should enable them to deal reasonably, without extravagance and without panic, with the scholars' results as these came in. What was needed before we discussed the evidence for the resurrection was a revival of the sense of God's judgment-grace in the cross, a renewal of the sense of holiness, and so of sin, as the cross set forth the one and exposed the other in its light. We needed to restore their Christian footing to many in the churches who were far within the zone which criticism occupied. In a word, it seemed to me that what the critical movement called for was not a mere palliation of orthodoxy, in the shape of liberal views, but a new positivity of Gospel. It was not a new comprehensiveness, but a new concentration, a new evangelization, that was demanded by the situation."

Dr. Forsyth is eminently right. The chief trouble with Christians of to-day is not the lack of proper critical views of the Bible. It is much deeper. "For what is needed," as this writer truly says, "is no mere change of view, but a change and a deepening in the type of personal religion, amounting in cases to a new conversion. There is that amiss with the churches which free criticism can never cure, and no breadth or freshness of view amend. There is a lack of depth and height, an attenuation of experience, a slackness of grasp, a displacement of the center, a false realism, a dislocation of perspective, amid which the things that make Christianity permanently Christian are in danger of fading from power, if not from view." The deeper one has pondered over the condition of the Church to-day, the less disposed he will be to take issue with this conclusion of this able scholar and thinker.

We confess to similar experience in relation to our advocacy of Christian union. We have come to feel that back of any successful plea for the unity of believers there must be a closer personal union with Christ; a deeper experience of his saving grace and power. Here is where the church of to-day is lacking. It is too worldly, too carnal, too sectarian, too unspiritual and undevout, to enter into sympathy with Jesus' prayer for the oneness of his followers in order to the conversion of the world. This means that we must go back to primary, original and fundamental New Testament teaching concerning the rebirth of the soul in righteousness and true holiness. A really converted Church, in vital union with Jesus Christ, could readily be taught proper views about the Bible, and could easily be brought into unity and co-operation for the world's conversion. This, therefore, is the supreme need of the times.

Uniformitarianism and Miracle.

The modern view of miracle is not that it is impossible, but that it is improbable, since it breaks in upon the law of uniformity. It is contended that this law of uniformity prevails everywhere in nature, and consequently we have no right to suppose that it will be suspended even for a moment of time. But as a matter of fact this law is suspended very frequently, as is the case whenever we lift a hand or make a movement of any kind, and if man's will can do as much as this, is it not possible, and even probable, that God's will can do whatever he chooses without in any way interfering with other laws that may be in operation. We are constantly opposing the law of gravity. Indeed, the whole struggle of life is to some extent against certain laws which actually exist, and which we are seeking to overcome, and by which overcoming we gain the mastery in matters of the greatest importance. The law of uniformity is undoubtedly one side of the whole case, but there is another side equally important, viz., the law of catastrophism. With respect to this law Professor LeConte deposes as follows:

"Nearly all evolutionists have assumed and even insisted on uniformity, as the opposite of catastrophism, and of supernaturalism, and therefore as essential to the idea of evolution. They say that the constancy of the action of the forces of change necessitates the uniformity of the rate of change, but in fact this is not always, not even usually true; causes or forces are constant, but phenomena everywhere and in every department of nature are paroxysmal. The forces producing storms and lightning and earthquakes are or may be constant; yet the phenomena are in the highest degree paroxysmal. Whenever in nature we have a constant force and a strong resistance we find more or less paroxysmal action. Water running with great resistance in small pipes is checked, but soon accumulates additional force, which overcomes the resistance, only to be checked again, and so on, and so runs in pulses. Now the course of evolution of the whole earth may be likened to such a current; there are forces of movement and forces of resistance—progressive forces and forces conservative. The progressive force is accumulative, the resisting force is constant. Thus, in all evolution of history, whether of the earth or of society, there are periods of comparative quiet during which the forces of change are gathering strength, and periods of revolution or rapid change during which these forces show themselves in conspicuous effects. Now, that there have been such periods of rapid revolutionary change in the history of the earth there can be no doubt. Here form the division lines between the great eras of the earth's history, and are always marked by extensive uniformity of the strata, showing the changes of physical geography above spoken of and by apparent sudden and sweeping change in life forms, showing the great change of climate and other physical conditions."

Now, this puts the whole matter in its true light, and at once makes a place for miracle, without which we would have only a half truth with respect to the operation of nature's laws. But it is, perhaps, better to say that no law of nature is really "suspended" by the introduction of miracle. A better view is the idea that the natural is, for the moment, carried into the sphere of the supernatural, or the supernatural is brought into the sphere of the natural. The vista is opened so that we can see across the line which separates one of these spheres from the other. But, however this may be, we can not deny the plain statements of scripture on the ground that these statements contradict the laws of nature, since it is abundantly evident that the laws of nature are not uniform, if by uniformity we mean that there are no "breaks" anywhere in the growth of nature. There is nothing clearer than that these "breaks" occur continually; and, furthermore, there is nothing clearer than that the introduction of man into the affairs of this world has produced innumerable and also radical changes, breaking up the uniformity of natural development and producing results which really contradict the law of uniformity at almost every step of human progress. Many of our scientists are constantly making the mistake of not reckoning with the human will as a factor in the problem of development. It is doubtless true that the law of uniformity must be reckoned with, for it evidently prevails through certain stages of development; but there are times when, and places where, this uniformity is broken, and where an exhausted force is reinforced by a power from without; and this reinforcement is only another name for miracle, such as the miracles of the Bible are represented to have been. From this point of view it is evident that miracle is not only reasonable, but is absolutely essential as a part of the great process of development in both natural and spiritual things, though we may some day call this miracle by some other name. W. T. M.

Notes and Comments

The article in this week's issue by the late Robert Moffett will be read with an added interest because it is, perhaps, the last article he ever wrote for the press. But the article is worthy of being read on its own merits. Everything relating to the early days of our religious movement has a value just at this time. As we are approaching our Centenary all these reminiscences by our old pioneer preachers will be read with more than an ordinary interest. Brother Moffett was well informed with respect to the principles and aims which that movement represents. He was in the front of the battle for many years, was a clear thinker, a good worker, and a wise general of our forces. The success of our cause in Ohio is much indebted to his fine leadership. There is nothing especially new in his article, yet it goes over a ground which is just now claiming the attention of all that love the cause we plead. It would be a valuable contribution to our literature, if some of our ablest men who have been in the movement almost from the beginning would write down their impressions of how they have been influenced by it. Anyway, personal reminiscences, with respect to their lives, would be of special value at this particular time. We will be glad to publish such reminiscences as far as we can find room for them.

We are glad to give considerable space this week, as we do each year at this time, to the subject of state missions. We invite attention to the articles which we print in this number on that subject. It is important to remember that whether we speak of state missions, or general home missions, or foreign missions, the work is one. These are but the names for certain convenient divisions of the work, but they are all one, and are mutually interdependent. Especially is it true that state missions is at the bottom of our co-operative work, and has much to do in the planting and keeping alive all the local congregations which furnish the sinews of war for our wider missionary operations. Too many churches have been neglecting the day set apart for the annual offering to state missions under the impression, doubtless, that this is less important than the offerings for the national missionary societies. It is to be hoped that such churches will consider how vitally related the work in the states is to our national and world-wide missionary interests. The day set apart is the first Lord's day in November, or any following Lord's day in November, if circumstances make the first Lord's day an inconvenient time.

It is encouraging to remember that in less than a month the presidential contest will be ended, and in spite of what the partisan newspapers are telling us, we shall be certain to have a distinguished, able and honorable citizen of the United States as President of the republic, who will dignify his office and seek to serve the best interests of the American people. It may make some difference in stock quotations and in the length of time in which prosperity will be resumed as to which of the leading candidates is elected, but let no one believe for a moment that the country is going to ruin if the election does not go the way he is going to vote. Let us try to be sensible and reasonable, even in these times of political excitement, and in a month from now we shall be able to look at these questions in a much calmer mood.

At this writing our great national missionary and benevolent organizations are in convention at New Orleans, giving an account of the work they have each accomplished during the year past, so far as such work can be tabulated, and planning for enlargement in their respective fields. These organizations are the practical expression of the organic unity of the brotherhood in its efforts to carry out Christ's commission to evangelize the world. They are entitled to the support and sympathy of all who believe in the principles of unity and co-operation, and who approve of the plea of our people for the restoration of New Testament Christianity. Those of us who are denied the privilege of meeting with our brethren in convention are remembering them, no doubt, in our prayers, that the spirit of wisdom and of liberality and of unity may mark their deliberations, and that larger plans may be formed for the work of the coming year.

No little interest is felt in the session of the convention at New Orleans, in which the conference between Baptists and our own people will take place. No one, of course, expects an immediate union between these two bodies of Christians, but there is an increasing number in each body who are ready for union, and the purpose is to cultivate the spirit of fraternity, and especially to remove misunderstandings which have grown up concerning each other's position. It is, of course, to be expected, that our own churches, committed as they are to the plea for Christian union, would be more favorable to union than the Baptists. But not a few of their leaders see, with great clearness, what tremendous advantages would come from the union of the two peoples on a true scriptural basis. But such a union will require time, patience and spiritual growth.

The Baptist Theological Seminary at Louisville has been a target for some small critics in that religious body for some time. "The Religious Herald," referring to this fact, says:

"Reactionaries can not hurt the seminary. Let President Mullins possess his soul in patience. The disturbers of denominational peace and the fomenters of denominational strife have had their day. They are no longer listened to except by small groups of incorrigibles. We are all too busy these days with the great affairs of Christ's kingdom to take any account of the scowling, complaining, querulous brethren. Texas Baptists have won their fight, Arkansas Baptists have won theirs, and a great state like Kentucky will not submit to the dominance of a body of reactionaries."

We congratulate our Baptist brethren.

Editor's Easy Chair.

The Easy Chair is glad to report encouraging progress on the part of its occupant. Last week we spoke of the affliction of imprisonment in one's room on these glorious October days. Since then the prison doors have been opened by the hand of increasing health, and we have been walking forth, under God's blue skies, enjoying the beautiful sunshine and bracing air. It seemed good to renew our acquaintance with the trees about our Rose Hill home, and to note the improvements in the neighborhood. We have even visited the barber shop for a shave, for we have had to resort to that custom since this illness, but hitherto we have had the barber to visit us. It has been six weeks to-day since the swelling on the face first appeared, but during the last week we have been decidedly on the upgrade. In five weeks there was a loss of twenty-five pounds in weight, or five pounds a week, which indicates something of the severity of the suffering we have passed through. With the returning tide of health we have had opportunity of looking over the piles of letters from loving and sympathetic friends in all parts of the country, and have read them with misty eyes. What have we ever done to entitle us to such expressions of brotherly love, appreciation and sympathy? It isn't anything we have done; it is what Christ has done for us all in bringing us into this blessed relationship which we sustain to each other in Him. Never have we felt so deeply the debt of gratitude we owe to Christ for bringing us into this tender relationship with himself and with each other. What are fame, or wealth, or earthly honors, compared to these enduring friendships and fraternal relationships which we have in Christ? O that we might be worthy of such love, such sympathy, and such generous appreciation, for all of which we give thanks to Him, who, by the strength and tenderness of His love, has drawn us into communion with Himself and with each other!

It is a strange experience with us to be writing these Easy Chair paragraphs in the quietness of our own home when our brethren, through their representatives, are gathered in national convention. It has been our delight to be in the midst of these conventions, meeting and greeting familiar friends and those whose faces we had not seen before, and to join with the great hosts in prayer and praise to Almighty God, and to participate in their deliberations for the advancement of the work. This privilege can not be ours now, but we submit without a murmur at the providence of God. We have the privilege, however, of praying for God's blessing to rest upon those who have gathered in convention, and this we do without ceasing. It is the first time in our history that we have gone so far South with one of our conventions, and while this will, no doubt, affect the attendance, we can not doubt that the same spirit of enthusiasm, of optimism, of loyalty to Christ, and of unity, will characterize this convention as it has others. We can imagine what a pleasure it will be to many brethren in the South, who have never before had the privilege of attending one of our national conventions, to catch the spirit of this great national convocation, and feel the thrill of coming victory as it seems to echo in all the songs and prayers and addresses and reports. Especially will it be inspiring to them to meet and hear the representatives from the foreign field tell of the wonderful works which God has wrought in these far-away lands. They will go home to their local work with a new sense of the dignity and value and strength of the Cause with which they are identified, and will labor henceforth with new heart and hope.

The year following the New Orleans convention will, perhaps, be the most important one in our history thus far. It will be our Centennial year. A score or more of great tasks and enterprises are to be pushed toward complete or partial realization during this missionary year. Missionary offerings are to be greatly enlarged, our educational and benevolent work advanced and better fortified. New church buildings are to be erected and old church debts paid. Our ministry is to be enlarged and our membership greatly increased. Pastorless churches are to find shepherds, and churchless preachers are to find useful fields of labor. The family altar, which has been allowed to fall into ruin in many cases, is to be re-erected, and family worship established. A new sense of our responsibility as a religious movement is to send us all to our knees in profoundest humility, seeking God's grace and strength, that we may be equal to the work which he has given us to do. All notes of discord and strife must be hushed that the melody of divine music may fill all hearts. The circulation of our religious journals are to be greatly increased, while these journals seek to become more worthy exponents of so holy and just a Cause. A revival of Bible study and of teacher training as a preparation for individual soul-winning must pervade all our churches and schools. Even a serious effort on the part of our members to realize these great aims will make the year historic, and will bring down God's blessing upon us in such a measure as we have never witnessed before. Once our divine Lord sees all our hearts bent on doing His work and carrying out His plans on the earth, seeking to make this movement of ours a worthy instrument for hastening the unity of His disciples and the conversion of the world, He will come to our aid with such divine re-enforcement, such plenitude of grace and truth and power, as will make us an irresistible force in the world.

Whatever the New Orleans convention can do to help in the consummation of these worthy aims will, no doubt, be done; but, after all, it remains for each local church, each minister of the gospel, and each individual member to determine the success or failure of our Centennial aims. Hence, it is of the utmost importance that this matter be taken up at once by local churches and individuals, and definite plans formed for accomplishing something worthy of our coming Centennial. If it is a shabby, unpainted, dilapidated church building that is to be repaired and made a decent place for the meeting of God's people, let the work be planned and executed vigorously. If it is an old church debt that has been hanging like a millstone about the neck of the church for many years, get it out of the way, even if it requires prayer and fasting. If there be local feuds, divisions in the church, get together in prayer and mutual confession and put these divisions out of the way. If a new and worthy house of God needs to be erected in your community, as an expression of your interest in this Centennial work, let it be done, though it cost many sacrifices. If your church has been neglectful of your missionary offerings, you ought to be ashamed to go to the Centennial without correcting that fault and making liberal offerings to all our missionary interests. If the members of your church are unacquainted with the great enterprises of the brotherhood because they are not patronizing our religious journals, see to it that some worthy representative paper is put into their hands where they may be quickened by coming in touch with the great forward movements of the brotherhood. Put new life into your prayer-meetings and Lord's day services by putting a deeper spirit of consecration into your worship. In a word, begin at once to plan for larger and better things than you have ever done for the kingdom of God, and see how God will bless you.

Remember, it is not going to Pittsburg that is going to celebrate worthily our Centennial. It is doing something to make our going to Pittsburg worth while that counts. If you are not a better Christian because of this Centennial year, if you have not made greater sacrifices in view of it, if your church has not undertaken and accomplished some worthy enterprise that has tested its faith and courage, there will be, we should think, but little pleasure in being present in the great triumphant throngs that will gather at our Centennial convention. Those who have undertaken and have striven and have sacrificed and have accomplished something for Christ and his Cause—these will strike the highest notes of praise at the Centennial and feel the deepest thrill of joy in the high and holy fellowship of that great gathering. We are saying these things because our Centennial year begins now, and now is the time for every member and every church to begin to plan and to execute something that shall be a worthy expression of appreciation of what this Centennial means. Immediately following the New Orleans convention, plans should be formed and forces mobilized for making the coming missionary year by far the greatest in our history. To fail to do this would show that some foundation work is needed to put us into sympathy with the great Cause whose Centennial we are to celebrate, and with our Centennial aims. The Easy Chair offers its hand, its head, and its heart to the making of this missionary year upon which we have now entered glorious in splendid deeds and worthy sacrifices in behalf of a great Cause.

The Union Movement By Robert Moffett

The Washington Christian Association, organized by Thomas Campbell in 1809, was intended to serve as a propaganda. It was specially stated that it was in no sense a church. While the "Declaration and Address" clearly indicated that their main purpose was to emphasize the possibility of Christian union by the restoration of the church to the model church planted and trained by the apostles, they did not intend to form new churches, but to support a ministry which would give special advocacy to this plan of union. To them it was so simple and reasonable, and the purpose so scriptural and desirable, that they were not at all prepared for the opposition that met them on all hands. They had a vision of all the denominations falling in line with this purpose and plan, and rejoicing in the union for which the Master prayed and toward which apostolic teaching led them. This union, of course, would be graduai, and largely by a coalescence.

I have never learned what became of that association, nor whether similar organizations were organized. However, two years later they organized the church at Brush Run. It was composed of immersed believers, and accepted an invitation to ally themselves with the Redstone Baptist Association, with an expressed understanding that they need bind themselves by no human creed. This gave the Campbells the rights and privileges of Christ's freemen. From all we can learn, they were not happy in this affiliation. It was, however, a time in life when every young man needs time for study. In May, 1823, the church was organized in Wellsburg, Va., and joined the Mahoning Association. Mr. Campbell had begun, the first of this year, the publication of the "Christian Baptist," which, in 1830, was changed into the "Millennial Harbinger." In 1830, by the editorials of the "Christian Baptist," and especially by the successful work of Walter Scott as evangelist for the Mahoning Association, the church had become so leavened with the new teaching and practice, that the association adjourned as such, and henceforth the churches were known as Churches of Christ, and the promoters of the reform as Disciples of Christ. In Kentucky, under the lead of B. W. Stone, the reformers were known as Christians, and had been in a union movement six years before Thomas Campbell published his "Declaration and Address."

There are few living now who remember the stirring times of seventy-five years ago. Even ten years later I was too young to set any value on the movement, but I can remember how the preachers made much of Christian union. We had preaching only as the traveling evangelist visited us, once or twice a year, and every one of them had a special sermon on Christian union. Gradually this subject has been dropped from the list, until now we seldom hear a sermon on this subject. It was common for sectarian preachers to justify divisions. They seldom do this at the present time. Our preachers found plenty of work in defending the New Testament plan of salvation. Sectarianism had led the people so far from the "ancient order" that it became a difficult task to bring them into harmony with New Testament teaching. Necessarily the themes discussed were suited to the times and circumstances. I can remember some of the themes handled in the decades beginning with 1840, such as "The Law and the Gospel," "The Right Division of the Word," "The Plan of Salvation," "The Inspired Word," "The Word, Quick and Powerful," "The Scheme of Redemption," "Faith, and How It Comes," "Man's Personal Responsibility," "What Shall I Do to Be Saved?" "The Subject, Mode and Design of Baptism," "Prayer," "The Great Commission," "The Atonement," "The Holy Spirit." Some of these and many others were old themes, but the Disciples handled them, not according to scholastic theology, but as they understood the Bible. "Thus saith the Lord" was the keynote of every sermon. It must not be forgotten that the proposition that the Disciples occupy apostolic ground, drew the fire of the opposition, and forced the leadership of each denomination to declare that they, too, stood on apostolic ground. In this opposition they were substantially united, and declared that the Disciples were Ishmaelites, with "their hands against every man, and every man's hand against them." And there was some truth in this, for a New Testament survey of almost every subject crossed the sectarian survey at one or more points. In fact, every preacher's view of Biblical theology gives color to his sermon, even when he handles subjects on which we are quite in agreement. The views of the scholastic were always in marked contrast with New Testament teaching. The Disciples came before the people with "Thus saith the Lord," and the sectarian preachers with "Thus saith the schools." Our preachers said, "Hear ye the word of the Lord, for faith comes by hearing and hearing by the word of God." Sectarians prayed the Lord to send his Spirit to give men faith as the direct gift of God. The Disciples told the people that conversion is a hearty turning to the Lord by faith, repentance and obedience; the sectarians said conversion is as great a miracle as raising Lazarus from the dead, and that obedience had nothing to do with the salvation of the sinner. The Disciples taught that the Gospel is the power of God unto salvation, because it reaches the mind and heart and will, and stirs men to action by facts, precepts, promises and warnings. The sectarians said man was so depraved that he could not think a good thought, nor do a good deed, only as moved by the work of the Holy Spirit. The Disciples taught that Jesus Christ is the all powerful King who must be obeyed in all things, and that condemnation will be the doom of all who wilfully disobey the gospel. Sectarians taught that "Doing is a deadly thing," and that if salvation depended on obedience God would be robbed of the glory of saving man. And so the contention went on, with much heat and not unfrequently with bitterness. Without exception, the denominations called us heretics, deceivers, water regenerationists, and nicknamed us Campbellites and Stoneites.

The reader will see how such a war illy prepared the people to consider the matter of union, and how such a contention could have no other effect than to build up another denomination as defined by our standard dictionaries. Our claim, that we were free from denominationalism because our churches were organized and trained according to the apostolic model, was nowhere admitted by thoughtful people outside our fold.

Fifty years have made significant changes. The speculative theology, which was the fruitful cause of all these divisions, is no longer preached—in fact, no longer held as bonds of church fellowship. The days of the old-fashioned revival and camp-meeting, with all the attendant extravagance of dream-telling and vision-seeing, are forever past. The work of the Holy Spirit in conversion is now seen from another angle. Nearly all these religious denominations have come more nearly to the ground occupied by our people from the beginning of the movement. The belief of all the dogmas of human creeds is no longer insisted on as necessary to church membership. "Christ for all the world, and all the world for Christ" is rapidly becoming the one creed of American Christendom. And the Disciples have changed the spirit of their preaching in giving greater prominence to providence, the Holy Spirit, prayer and organized missionary activity. Christian people of every name are tired of war and are praying for peace—the peace that comes from the closest possible union with Christ.

The greatest hindrance to union is not the fact that we do not see the apostolic church alike, but the deeper and more significant fact that we have not prayed and labored that His church "should be holy and without blemish." I have passed through much of this war. I have not found God's people all in one denominational fold. Christ's prayer for the union of his people is being answered, for they are coming closer together. A full union may not come your way nor my way, but it will come in God's own time and in his own way. Meanwhile let us welcome every opportunity of fellowship with true followers of Christ, and pray God to give us more and more the spirit of that charity which "suffers long and is kind, envieth not, vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, and never faileth." Christ left his church apostles and prophets, pastors and teachers for the perfecting of the saints for the work of the ministry, "till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ. But speaking the truth in love may grow up into him in all things."

But the church has not yet grown tall enough to be on this high plane of heavenly fellowship.

Coming to Our Own at Last By William Durban

I have been young, but now I am old—a very familiar experience with those who wait but a short time on the quickly rolling years. How much I have seen in the way of startling changes! It is gratifying indeed to be able to recall any change that is absolutely for the better. Of some of these I will proceed to treat, because possibly thus some little encouragement may be ministered to minds disposed to pessimism. It seems only like yesterday, though it is over a quarter of a century ago, at least in this old country, we who are known as Disciples of Christ were absolutely an unknown quantity. When we really became in some degree recognized, it was for the most part only in order that amusement mingled with contempt might be expressed. And in ecclesiastical circles opportunities were eagerly seized of showing us that if any privileges were being granted or favors shown, the poor Disciples were made to understand that their place was in the rear. Sero venientibus ossa, as the old Romans said. The bones were for those that came late to the feast. Truly a change is coming over the prospect. We used to be regarded—and that by most excellent and estimable persons—as dissenters from dissenters. Now dissenters are usually extremely indignant with the state church folk who call them dissenters and snub them as such. Yet many of these aggrieved noncomformists have no patience with any of their fellow Christians who tend to dissent from themselves. I note that to-day, wherever we succeed in planting a Church of Christ, that church, if it is willing to respond to it, receives a cordial overture for fellowship. There may perhaps be still an occasional exhibition of denominational suspicion or of sectarian shyness, but the old sudden aloofness is rapidly becoming a thing of the past.

Despised Dissidents.

As I write these lines information comes to London from Berlin concerning certain unpleasant treatment of the great Baptist convention by the German ministers of public worship and education. These dignitaries, or at any rate others to represent them, were looked for to attend the meeting of the Baptist delegates from all lands. But they coldly absented themselves. And the Lutheran clergy were equally conspicuous by their absence. The German papers have not failed to animadvert on this fact, explaining that the state church clergy regard Baptists as a body of dissidents from exact spiritual truth. I have known some Baptists who uniformly greeted Disciples of Christ as dissidents—I know not exactly from what. The day will come when all such folly as this will be recognized as a very low grade of stultification. I am thankful to say that the day seems to be not far distant. But there may be hindrances. Before I specify these as possible, may I be permitted to make an analogy?

It seems to me that we have been performing a function very much like that of the wonderful Young Turks. Who until the recent stupendous upheaval in the Near East ever imagined the extent of the sapping and mining that was proceeding year after year ever since the faithful crisis of 1876? When Midhat Pasha proposed the famous constitution it was accepted by the Sultan and a parliament was convened, but all was soon undone, the Pasha was exiled and soon met his fate by strangling. Gloom followed gloom. Atrocities followed atrocities. Bulgaria bled almost to death. So did Armenia. So did Macedonia. What was there on the Oriental horizon to indicate anything but a future of desolation and despair? Nevertheless God was behind the whole scene, although the whole world saw only the Devil in front. Never has humanity received a more wonderful object lesson. Suddenly the people in that empire of oppression have come to their own.

Communities that Wait.

The history of progress and success among nations is precisely this of preliminary struggle and darkness, martyrdom and desolation, accompanied under the surface by a series of divinely inspired impulses that can not be suppressed but bring glorious victory at last. Bulgaria and Servia long since leaped into freedom. That thrilling emancipation was celebrated in the days of my youth. I watched the tremendous drama as I did the awful conflict in America between North and South, and as I saw the red episode of the Franco-German war. How much has happened since! But one thing always results. God sets the oppressed free. They come to their own.

In that beautiful but sad country just across the narrow sea on the west from England a lesser but significant drama is being at this moment enacted. The British government is persistently seeking to avoid granting home rule to Ireland, and is substituting well-meant subterfuges for the autonomy demanded day after day by the great majority of the Irish. Here comes in the eternal question of racial superstition. Popery in Ireland has created such determined opposition on the part of England, Scotland and Wales simply because the Protestants of Britain are convinced that home rule for Ireland would mean Rome Rule. This prejudice even Mr. Gladstone could not, with all his wonderful popularity, ever manage to overcome in the majority of the people. At the height of his power he brought in a bill for granting a National Catholic University for Ireland, and wrecked the government by doing so. But at length it seems to be dawning to some extent on the mind of large numbers of the British people that Home Rule for Ireland will have to be granted. Only it must be given by installments. Therefore Mr. Augustine Birrell has succeeded in passing a bill granting a Catholic University. His scheme is a very ingenious one, and he managed to conciliate all parties to a sufficient extent to carry it through. Ireland is coming to

The Efficient Church By Louis S. Cupp

A certain factory discovered that its work was being done by one-third of its employees. The remaining two-thirds were living in idleness, void of any vital interest in the success of the factory. The owner did not discharge this large company of luxurious idlers, as many an employer would have done. He was a wise business man. He determined to set every man to work. He resolved to find a congenial task for each employee. He therefore sought to discover the special bent of each worker, and then set him to doing the thing he was best fitted to do. Each man was urged to the closest self-examination, to discover for himself, if possible, the kind of work he could do with the greatest happiness and efficiency. The owner foresaw that to accomplish such a desired result, it would be necessary to greatly enlarge the sphere of the factory's activity, and that, in time, it would become necessary to enlarge the factory itself. He did not, however, begin his enlargement with brick and stone; he began it in the hearts of the people.

This is a parable of the Kingdom. The factory is the church. The employees are the church members. The owner of the factory is Jesus Christ. Paul, as one of the overseers, expounds in the twelfth chapter of Romans the leading principles of the efficient church. The application of the parable to almost any church in Christendom would prove to be true to existing conditions.

In the efficient church everybody will pull; nobody will ride. Every member will do something, and the highest efficiency will be attained when each does the thing he is fitted to do best. God has endowed every man with a particular bent, which may be put to a religious use. Your particular bent is not merely the means of making a living, but the means of making a life.

There are some things all Christians can do. All can attend church. A part can attend all the time. All can attend part of the time. All can participate in the worship of song. All can read the Word of God and pray daily. All can give something every week for the support of the church at home and abroad. A father can not o to church or to heaven for his family. He can not do all their praying—why should he do all their paying?

As each member enlists himself in these elementary duties of Christians, he will gradually discover the particular work in which he is strongest. When found, let him devote himself with complete and reckless abandon to the special work which God has fitted him to do.

Christianity, thus viewed, becomes an unfolding process of self-discovery and self-development. No[illegible] Christians make this self-discovery, because they are not accustomed to yield to the inner promptings of the Spirit. The efficient church must hold itself responsive to the Spirit's pleadings. Each member must be "led by the Spirit." All personal plans and ambitions must be held subject to the Spirit's constant revision.

Selfishness is the greatest hindrance to efficiency. Submissiveness to the Spirit within the believer is the sure antidote for selfishness. The Spirit-guided man will discover his bent. He will develop remarkable efficiency, both as a man and as a Christian. Here is the secret of growth in the Christian life. A man grows by doing the things he is best fitted to do. There is room in the Christian service to allow free play for an infinite variety of talents. There will be no undue duplication of gifts. The Holy Spirit does not make mistakes. He will create in every church diversity of gifts sufficient for the performance of every needed service, if only he can gain the attention of Christians. He must, however, get a hearing. The number who will be thus equipped for special service will be indefinitely increased, as the members hold themselves responsive to the Spirit's voice. A very good rule for the beginner is, the thing you can do is the thing you ought to do.

If a church lacks workers it is due to self-seeking. It is because men and women love their own ease better than the cause of Christ. They have become accustomed to pleasing themselves, rather than God. They have habitually refused to obey the voice of the Spirit and deafened their ears to duty's trumpet call. So long as they thus act their spiritual nature remains dwarfed and stunted, and their church languishes for want of efficient and sufficient workers. Their religious influence is a tiny rill, when it might be a mighty, rushing river.

The Spirit-led life is the secret of joy in the Christian service. The Spirit leads one to do the work God has best fitted him to do. Only he who does the work he loves and is fitted for can be happy in his work. The meager service which the selfish man renders is reluctant and painful. He shifts uneasily on burning desert sands, when he might rejoice beside flowing fountains.

Every man is a specialist, "Having gifts differing," or differing gifts, says Paul. If guidance is sought, Christ's Spirit will teach each man, not only concerning the thing he is best fitted to do in the church, but also concerning the thing he is best fitted to do in life. There is no distinction between sacred and secular to the Spirit-led man. Every day is a holy day. Every calling is a work of God. Whatsoever is not a work of God is criminal, and has no right for protection under the law. The Christian's business must not be divorced from his religion. Your business and your personality will attain their fullest development and acquire their subtlest influence for your own advancement only as you round out both with a full-orbed Christian character. You will grow in efficiency and influence only in proportion as you make your business a real service to the race. Let men learn from Christ that Christianity is simply the best way to live; that the Golden Rule is the only safe business rule.

It will most likely be revealed that the particular influence God wishes you Christian men and women to exert for Him is to be looked for in your daily work. In your business you have an influence all your own. In your office and your home you fill a place peculiar to yourself. There are no extra cogs in this wheel. There is no overlapping of duties. Each office and each business has just enough persons to do the work needed, and no more. The diversity of gifts needed for carrying on the world's work gives ample opportunity for each church member to stamp his work with distinctive Christian character. Put your spiritual trademark upon your work.

In the twelfth of Romans Paul gives a suggestive list of at least thirty different forms of activity in which Christians may profitably engage. This is not a catalog of gifts found in each believer, but a catalog of gifts found in each normal church of Christ. Each gift listed will become the dominant trait of some individual member. The catalog is by no means exhaustive. The individual types of spiritual activity will be as varied as the membership of the church. God makes a Christian, then breaks the mold. Find your special work, then do it with all your heart and soul.

In following the course suggested, two things will become apparent: First, there will be increased efficiency in the work chosen; second, there will be gradual enlargement of the sphere of your religious activity. By learning to do one thing well, you learn to do many things better. Increased responsibility always accompanies increased ability.

Let every church member begin to do something definite. Let us have no waste material in the church, no idlers or loafers, no careless company of hangers-on. Do not wait to be assigned something to do. Find something yourself and begin to-day. Every member listening to the Spirit's voice; giving something every week to the support of the church; praying and reading his Bible daily; exercising his particular gift every day in his own way to win friends for Christ. This will make the efficient church.

The First Centennial Offering By T. A. Abbott

On the very first day of November, being the first Lord's day in that month, and it having four more, for good measure—occurs the first of the Centennial offerings for missions. Is it not in keeping with the fitness of things that it should be for state missions, thus "beginning at Jerusalem"? It is the initial offering of a series in the interest of missions, which, we trust, shall be far and away beyond any thing our people have ever done for missions before. In a race a good start is everything, and we are hoping that this offering shall inject such impetus into the mission giving that we shall have strong grounds for believing that the most ambitious desire of the missionary secretaries may be more than realized.

It is but right that state missions should lead, because it lies at the very base of all missionary efforts. Heretofore this great interest has not been given its rightful place, but we believe that the people are coming more and more to see its great power and importance, and to rectify the mistake which will, if persisted in, assuredly bring us disaster.

It is quite easy of demonstration that in order that our other mission interests may have larger means for the carrying on of their work, there must be constantly increasing contributions from churches already existent, or there must be constantly added new organizations which shall become contributors to the mission treasuries, or both; and, say what you will, in order to either enlarge offerings from already existing churches, or to the increase of the number of churches by planting new ones, the State missionary organization is an indispensable factor.

Upon the vigor and activity of the State organization in the prosecution of its work depends the enlargement of the resources for every other mission interest among us. It would be, then, a shortsighted policy on the part of these other mission interests if they failed to give state missions their heartiest and most enthusiastic support.

In our strong states this is especially true. In the weaker states it is the province of the American Board to see to the enlargement and extension of the cause. This, in connection with the work in the great cities, is her especial field of labor. But in the stronger states, like Missouri, Illinois, Kentucky, Indiana, Ohio, etc., the state organization is the only one that can do this work economically and effectively.

Take it in the case of our own state. Here we have a vast number of churches, and among so many are hundreds that in their childhood, or weakness, must have the most careful nursing lest they perish. Let the state organization, by neglect or opposition, be put in such condition that it can not do this, and the larger portion of them must inevitably perish. Or, take the territory yet unoccupied. What of the two hundred towns and villages, and the hundreds of country places where we have no organization? Whose business is it to see that these places are taken for our King? There is absolutely no organization whose business it is to enter these places, except our State Missionary Society. Oppose it, weaken it, suffer its appeals to go by default, put it out of business, and instantly the work of enlargement ends and the work of shrinkage begins, and "a disappearing brotherhood" will become an accomplished fact.

Is it not time, then, that we were giving this great interest its rightful place? Is it not just that we ask that its claims be recognized in the most generous way? Is it not right that we ask that in this Centennial year every church shall come with an offering? And, in view of what the Lord has done for us, that we make this a thank offering for state missions and double anything we have ever done before? What will this great brotherhood say? Let the answer come in the greatness of your offering.

PRAYER.

A FOOD LESSON

That the Teacher Won't Forget.

Teaching school is sometimes very arduous work. If the teacher is not robust and in good health, she can't do her best for her scholars or for her own satisfaction.

When it becomes a question of proper food for brain work, as in school teaching, many teachers have found Grape-Nuts ideal.

"I have been for many years a teacher, and several months ago found myself in such a condition that I feared I should have to give up work," writes a N. Y. teacher.

"So nervous was I, that dizziness and spells of fainting were frequent and my head and stomach gave me much trouble.

"Several physicians who treated me gave me only temporary relief and the old ails returned.

"About three months ago I dropped all medicine and began eating Grape-Nuts morning and night. Now, my head is clear, pain in stomach entirely gone, and I have gained in flesh. I am not only continuing in school but have engaged to teach another year.

"I owe my restored health, a brighter outlook on life, and relief from doctor bills, to Grape-Nuts." "There's a Reason."

To Evangelize the State By W. A. Baldwin

No ministry is more important, no work more directly productive of results, than what we call state missions. It brings immediate returns to gladden the hearts of the workers, and lays a foundation for the future. The day of large things is upon us, and in no field more so than in this great work. Not a state in the union is wholly covered by our call for unity. The major part of our towns are without the voice that pleads for the New Testament basis of fellowship in Christ. Even in our most populous states this is true. To make the plea fully effective, it should be made universal. Every village and city and community should be made to hear it. And why not? If the fathers could cover so much territory in a generation when they were but a handful, how much more are we able to reach every place in all our country when we consider our great numbers and our splendid equipment? Then, we have the money—plenty of it in the hands of our brethren. And if our gold and our silver be cankered, it will prove a blight upon our lives, and this will check the progress of the whole movement. The Lord has never blessed the ungenerous and the stingy. He may permit us to grow into a smug and comfortable denomination, but our work will be caught up by more willing hands and carried on by swifter feet, and told by lips that still burn with holy zeal for the great gospel of salvation.

There are two ways in which state missions operate, generally. New fields are sought out and opened by evangelists employed by the societies. Then they are fostered till they can become self-supporting. Such churches are made the especial charge of the state boards. Then there are churches that for various reasons have become weak and unable to carry on the work in their communities. The state societies help to employ a pastor for them, paying a regular stipend into the treasury of the church for that purpose. We have many churches in Nebraska now strong and effective and growing, that a very few years ago were not having services, or were thinking of closing their doors. Surely this work of making strength where weakness flourished, of lending a helping hand when most needed, of being a big brother to the distressed churches in the fullest sense—this is surely a great work demanding the heartiest prayers and the largest giving.

But this is not all. The secretary of the society becomes the pastor-at-large for all the state. His time and thought are mostly given to the things making for the well-being of the churches. Some of the strongest may never call upon, but in the western part of Nebraska there is, perhaps, not a dozen that have not in some way conferred with the secretary concerning matters entirely local. But the discouraged and distressed from within and without; the helpless and the dying, appeal to him again and again, and within the limits of the means put in his hands, and the strength and wisdom he has, he renders the assistance fully and freely. His help to churches in securing preachers and to preachers in securing places of labor suitable to them, is invaluable.

But why more argument? The mighty advances made by our states in their organized work the last decade speaks for the work as nothing else can do. Our little organization in Nebraska brought over seven hundred into the churches the last missionary year. We are trying to nearly double our offerings the current year, in order to do greater things.

There should not be a church in all the land that does not take an offering for this vastly important work.

THE CALL OF THE STATES

East Washington.

The outlook for a splendid work this year in East Washington is most excellent, in spite of the fact that this is campaign year. A number of the churches are preparing for special efforts in evangelistic work this winter. Garfield has secured the services of S. M. Martin; Walla Walla and Waitsburg have secured John L. Brandt; Dayton has secured Victor Dorris. Other engagements are being made. Other good evangelistic fields are open. Those churches that have not made engagements should do so at once. I will here suggest the names of our own evangelists, tried men: T. S. Handsaker and wife, 407 N. 3d street, Walla Walla, Wash.; S. W. Jackson and wife, Castle Rock, Wash.; W. T. Adams, Wenatchee, Wash. We also have several good evangelistic pastors. Write some of these men at once, if you need an evangelist. Brother Adams is "living link" for the churches on the upper Columbia. His time will probably be fully taken in that region.

We are hopeful that arrangements are about to be made for the most of our pastorless churches to have regular preaching. The trouble during the past year has been with the churches. We have a number of good men, who can be secured at reasonable salaries, but the churches have been apathetic. This is too bad. I am very glad to announce that Ed Bright, of Payette, Ida., is now located at Ritzville, and we have reason to believe that he is the right man in the right place. I also report that O. J. Gist, of Coeur d'Alene, Ida., is located at Colville, and that B. H. Gwinn, lately from Illinois, I believe, is located at Goldendale, as the result of the splendid evangelistic work done there by S. W. Jackson and wife, this summer. If any of our churches wish to be put in communication with a good man at a salary of from $900 to $1,200, let them write me at once.

The Pomeroy church expects to move into its splendid new building October 11. A. A. Doak, our state worker, is doing a fine work at Colfax. He reports the largest Sunday-school for years, and also a number of additions to the church. Steps have been taken to organize a new church at Malden. The work is under the direction of the state secretary at present. Malden is the new town on the Milwaukee railroad. We have about forty Disciples in the community, and the prospect is bright for a good church there. Seventeen fields, in all, have asked help of the state board. These fields are ripe for a good harvest, but we lack both men and money. Wenatchee church is making good progress this summer, a number of additions being reported. The new churches at Pasco and Kennewick are struggling under their heavy obligations in the new work there. They are waiting for a loan to finish their buildings. These are two of our most important new fields. Are there not a number of brethren, blessed in store of God, who will open their hearts and pocket books toward these two churches? Send them five or ten dollars—twenty-five would be even better—addressed to the Corresponding Secretary, J. A. Pine, Dayton, Wash. Many other items of interest to the several congregations should be mentioned, but they must be passed by.

Brethren in East Washington: There is before us at the present time one great, absorbing, imperative need—the financial support of the state work. It takes money to win souls and build churches and extend the Kingdom, just as it does to do anything else. The Lord recognized this in sending out his disciples to preach the gospel. We must all preach the gospel, and it never will be preached properly until we all do preach it. You who are not going in person must sustain the bodily needs of those who do go. You must give the tithe of the Lord's material blessings to you. With all the magnificent prospect before us, and the splendid corps of workers now ready for a forward movement, we are at present several hundred dollars behind. Shall we dismiss these men, and cancel our plans? I do not believe you will consent to that. We have a number of men in the state who would be greatly blessed, spiritually, in giving hundreds of dollars to this work. There are many more who should give from $10 to $25. We must have such contributions as these before we can adequately finance the Lord's work in East Washington.

The convention at Walla Walla established the first Lord's day in November as

A POLICEMAN'S LOT
May Be a Happy One After All.

An Ill. Ex. Chief of Police found an easy and safe way out of his ills caused by coffee. He says:

"I suffered intensely from heart trouble and nervousness for five years, and though treated by some of the best physicians in this city, did not get permanent relief until I changed from coffee to Postum.

"A friend of my family was visiting at our house, and seeing my condition insisted that coffee was at the bottom of my trouble. I confess I was skeptical, but promised to try Postum in place of coffee.

"It was nearly three weeks before I noticed much of any change, as my case was a bad one. Then I saw that my nervousness was gradually disappearing. A little later I was able to sleep a part of the night on my left side, something I had been unable to do for 5 years at least.

"I kept on using Postum, and the result is, so far as heart trouble and nervousness are concerned, I am a well man.

"The best proof is that I am writing this with my own hand, a thing I was unable to do for several years prior to the change from coffee to Postum."

state missionary day, when all who have not already made their contribution should do so for the evangelization of East Washington. Now is your time, brethren, to come to the rescue of this great work. You need not wait until the first of November. Send the money direct to the Corresponding Secretary, J. A. Pine, Dayton, Wash.

We here and now make a most earnest call upon all the Sunday-school superintendents and teachers to plan a splendid home missionary rally for the last Lord's day before Thanksgiving and encourage a large offering from the Sunday-schools for home missions, the half of which will come back to the state work. J. A. Pine, Cor. Sec.

It is to be hoped that our ambition to have twenty-five Living Link churches for this year may be realized. It will enable us to support twenty-five ministers at that many missionary points. Then, it is worth much to a congregation that links with us to know when they meet that they are also preaching to another church in another town.

We need to push the project of an evangelist in each district in order that many perishing churches may be saved by kindly aid and friendly advice.

The offerings for state and district missions should be large because the opportunities are great. J. Fred Jones, Florida State Missions.

Having written a short article on conditions in Florida, I now add a few words on our needs.

Most of all, we need an awakening of the scattered Disciples and weak churches to a sense of their responsibility and a knowledge of their power. In explaining the parable of the wheat and the tares, the Savior said, "The field is the world, and the good seed, these are the sons of the kingdom." When the winds carry the downy seed of the thistle over the fields, the thistle springs up, wherever the seed rests. So, wherever the disciples are dispersed over the world, the kingdom of heaven should spring up. When scattered disciples fulfill their mission, subtraction will become addition, and division will be multiplication.

Scattered Disciples and weak churches too often underrate their power. They are apt to think that they can do little, or nothing. But their very isolation is an excellent opportunity. They can do a greater work now than when they were members of large, flourishing congregations. Then not so much depended upon them; now, all depends upon them. Will there be any stars in their crowns? If they rise to the occasion, their stars will be many. "When I am weak, then am I strong." Was this true of Paul, and is it not of you and me? O, that the isolated Disciples and weak churches would awake to a sense of their responsibility and a knowledge of their power. A little band of Christians, even if poor in goods, yet rich in faith, and all helping, can work wonders.

Another of our needs is that the Disciples should be so thoroughly grounded in apostolic teaching and practice that they will never give it up, but make a heroic struggle to build it up.

We need preachers who will come here to stay, who will be patient with meager results and meager support, who are willing to make heavy sacrifices for Christ's sake. We need more liberal, regular giving, the entire membership helping—we certainly need this.

We need a liberal offering from every church, and every disciple in the state, early in November, so we can report it at our state convention at Tampa, November 12-15. It will be sacredly used in helping weak churches and isolated brethren and sisters. T. A. Cox, Cor. Sec.

Michigan.

The most of Michigan is pioneer ground for the Disciples of Christ.. Although we entered this state over fifty years ago, yet the progress has been slow, for reasons that can not be fully understood. In my judgment very much of our slow growth has been from the lack of plan and management. Some churches have been started within a few years that demonstrate what can be done in Michigan. Traverse City is scarcely ten years old and yet they number more than five hundred members, with a Bible school of nearly four hundred—the largest in the state. The Woodward Avenue Church in Detroit is the most costly and beautiful plant that we have among the younger churches; but it is paid for—at a cost of $27,000—and a growing church is the result. The "Soo" is scarcely one year old, and yet they have purchased a fine church and engaged one of our best preachers, H. E. Rossell, and have 200 members. Fifth Avenue, Grand Rapids, is yet a young church. W. A. Bellamy, the efficient pastor, is leading them in a noble work. Some institutional features have been introduced into this church and it brings good returns, they think.

Last year the state board began their work in Muskegon. A chapel was built and a church was organized. This was the first movement of this kind we have made for some time. I mean the selecting of a point, the purchasing of a site and the taking of the initiative on the part of the board. It has its dangers, but it saves much time, where it can be done. It saves burdening the young work with debt. It makes a good introduction to the city where we go. The danger lies largely in giving the new church the idea that some one else will do their work for them. This must be avoided as far as possible.

A fine opportunity is before us in this state. Bay City, Lansing, Jackson, Detroit, Grand Rapids, Marquette, Houghton and other cities are open to the Disciples. We must enter these points and take possession in the name of the King. We are hoping and praying that our people of means will learn to give liberally to Michigan. Some have done well in this regard; others are considering the matter. We should be able to enter these cities with some degree of dignity and strength. Let us prepare for it and study the problem more closely. The starting of churches in our cities with efficiency and success is a question that we have scarcely touched in Michigan.

The outlook for the year is good. Let every Disciple in Michigan remember Michigan day, November 1. Send an offering to F. P. Arthur, Cor. Sec.
Grand Rapids, Mich.

New England.

There has been substantial progress in the New England states during the past year. It has been chiefly in the form of church building. The church at Springfield, Mass., completed and dedicated a fine building in one of the best locations in that thriving city. A new work has also been started in Springfield, as a mission, in the old church, which the present church left when it moved into the new building.

At Bridgeport, Conn., a new building has been started, and the work of building is rapidly progressing. The church at West Rupert, Vt., has nearly completed a new house of worship, which will be the best church building in that place. In the church at Brockton, Mass., improvements have been made which substantially increase the accommodations for the work.

One of the important works started during the year has been in the city of Providence, R. I. We have had a small church in Manton, a suburb of Providence, for many years, but its location was not good. Now that work has been started in the city, it is very important that a large amount of aid be given so that it may go along rapidly. Nothing succeeds like success. Aid given at the right time is what counts. Now is the time in Providence.

It is encouraging to be able to report that all of our churches that are able to support pastors are supplied with able and efficient men, who are likely to stay with their churches for some time.

R. H. Bolton.

Southern California.

We rejoice that the inspiration pertaining to men that do things belongs to the fellowship of Disciples in southern California and Arizona. During the year ending July 31 they organized three new churches —Tucson, Oceanside and Japanese, Los Angeles. Three were brought to self-support —Anaheim, Imperial and Rialto. Our 12,000 in this off year for finance again raised and expended in the maintenance of mission churches in our state an average of one dollar per member. This money was expended in 32 places, mostly to sustain pastors.

These missionaries added to the Church 350 by baptism and enrolled 525 otherwise, making a total increase of 875. In southern California and Arizona the Disciples have 67 regularly organized congregations, with a membership of 12,000. Of these 67 churches, all but three were served by pastors located on the field, and giving full time service.

We challenge Christendom—even the sections under episcopal rule—to show a better record in this respect! To those 67 churches 1,336 were added by baptism and 2,263 otherwise. These churches raised for foreign missions $8,000, for home missions $12,000, and for other enterprises outside of local work $2,000, which approximates an average of $2 per member for work away from home.

They raised for local work, including property, $160,000, which is an average of $15.33 per member. This makes a grand total average of $15.33 per member from these churches for the various enterprises of the kingdom.

The average for the whole brotherhood, figured by the official statistics, was a little less than $5.66 per member. So in the Grand March at the Centennial Review, southern California expects to march at the head of the procession and carry the banner! Grant K. Lewis, Sec.

South Idaho Christian Missionary Society.

Since the organization of the work in South Idaho we have never entered upon a year that promised so much for our cause as the present. Amidst the rapidly settling districts as well as from some of the older settled places doors are swinging open to us and we are invited, yea, urged, to enter. Many of these fields must be entered now or it will be very difficult to get a start there after awhile. In many promising new towns we are offered church lots if we will put up buildings on them. Other churches are availing themselves of the opportunity. It will be expensive to buy our way into these little cities after a while. We have tried this, to our sorrow.

During the last two and one-half years one-half of our churches in Idaho have been organized, three have procured church houses, one is being built, and three churches have been helped by the board to become self-supporting. In some of these new churches the situation is critical. They must have help from our board or will go backward, or close up entirely. With some of these only a little help from the board for one or two years would put them on a self-supporting basis, while with others it must take a long pull of several years.

This year we must raise at least $1,500 from our churches in Idaho. We have carefully gone over the field and do not see where we can get along with a dollar less. The committee, with these facts before them, at our last convention, made the apportionment among the churches. We are now dependent upon the churches to act in the matter, and either raise the apportionment themselves during October and November, or invite the Secretary to come and hold a missionary rally and take the pledges. Brethren of Idaho, you must attend to this matter in its time, or other collections of the year will crowd it out. We were compelled to close last year in debt, and but little has been paid in since the convention. All expressed a readiness to do their best at the convention. But now complete the doing, also, that as there was a readiness of will, so there may be the completion also of your ability.

Wisconsin.

Wisconsin is a needy field. No section of our country is in greater need of the pure gospel.

Our contention for unity and freedom appeals to a people who see weak, struggling churches on every hand; but the population is so mixed, being so largely foreign, and their moving about from one lumbering or manufacturing town to another makes it difficult to crystallize the sentiment we make; or if we do, some have soon moved on to some place where we have no church.

We have, for forty years, been baptizing 100 to 300 persons a year, and yet there can not be found more than 2,000 Disciples in the state. These conditions make it necessary to do much preaching that appears to be lost. The work of the preacher is largely seed-sowing, and the seed is carried here and there with little opportunity given for watering and cultivating. I look for a rich harvest after awhile. We have the seed, but not enough sowers nor the money to hire them. I have thought it would be a good plan to inaugurate a seed-sowing campaign next summer. My plan is, let one of our strong churches having a strong preacher adopt one of the large cities of this state as its mission, sent its preacher with a singer and means sufficient to rent a hall and preach "liberty and union" for two weeks. We'll furnish you as many cities as you want. Write me, churches, that you will do this.

The First Church, Milwaukee, Claire L. Waite, minister, entertained the state convention September 18-21. The fellowship was sweet, the hospitality lavish, the addresses inspiring and heart-searching. We had with us Secretaries Mohorter, Warren, Denton and C. C. Smith. Mrs. Effie Cunningham was there in the interest of the C. W. B. M., and Brother Emerson of Freeport gave us a stirring sermon. J. H. Bullock, of Footville, stirred the convention to a better interest in the Bible school and "Teacher Training;" J. S. Stone told of his work with the mixed congregation at Chippewa Falls, English and Scandinavian, and L. L. Mann, pastor of the union church at Waupun, preached Christian union. The Milwaukee and Ladysmith churches reported the best evangelistic meetings. The Milwaukee church swarmed during the year, the new swarm settling in another part of the city, and working under the direction of R. A. Nourse, a business man of the city.

J. C. Thurman, of Green Bay, presided over the sessions of the W. C. M. A. with dignity and dispatch. Mettie Monroe, Ida Towne and Mrs. E. W. Tucker, familiar figures at our conventions for twenty years piloted the sessions of the C. W. B. M. They are pushing the Centennial interests, and urging better organization of children. Richland Center takes us next year.

The Russian Work in New York

Our Russian work here is taking on interesting phases. Besides three young men just sent to Kimberlin Heights, we hope to get several more off to our more advanced colleges. Our two native preachers are at work and baptisms are frequent. H. Norton, who has been in charge of this work for the Baptists, as pastor of the Emmanuel Church, is in a fair way of getting the use of that church building for a term of years, as the Baptist committee is inclined to hand over to us this Russian work, building and all. They can not do anything with it, and recognize that we can. Brother Norton's salary ceased October 1. The Baptist committee paid it until that time. It would simply be a calamity to let him seek work elsewhere. He can handle this work as no one else can. There are three other places at our disposal for housing settlement work without expenses. He thinks he can get all the money he needs for carrying on this work here, as it appeals to people of means. The urgent point is money to pay the salaries of these three preachers. We ought not to ask Brother Norton to take less than $1,500 per year here where expenses are so high. As it is he spends everything, aside from a bare living, on the work. The Russian preachers work and maintain themselves, after a fashion, but they ought to be paid a moderate salary besides. The treasury of the A. C. M. S. is in debt and it is doubtful if they will take on any new work. What is done must be done quickly. The way this question is opening up to our people providentially is almost startling. Everything is provided that is needed, except a little liberality on our part to keep Brother Norton at work.

J. L. Darsie.
2206 Beverley Road, Brooklyn, N. Y.

[It surely ought not to be a difficult thing, in the face of this providential opening, to secure the necessary funds to keep Brother Norton at work. We trust Brother Darsie will keep this matter before the brotherhood. Editor.]

its own. I have no sympathy with priest rule, but I have long understood that the very way to propagate the abuse is to deny to the people the right of self-government.

I have traveled far in my topic, but I intended, when I started my thesis, to take a great sweep. We Disciples of Christ must not take short views. The way to success for churches as for nations is to take long views. The conditions of victory are identical in every sphere. If our principles are right they will triumph, though many of us may go down in seeming defeat. Let none be discouraged. The way to victory has always been through darkness. Even when nothing seems to be doing, and when we imagine that no advance whatever is being made, mighty processes are in operation. In the dark night all nature is quietly at work, though not a sound may be heard and not a movement perceived. We awaken in the morning and find countless millions of flowers and of verdant blades spangled with drops of dew, each flashing with a sunbeam caught and clasped in its bosom.

—The churches, as churches, acquitted themselves most creditably during the month of September in their contributions for foreign missions. They gave $29,062 in that month, a gain over the corresponding month last year of $9,163.

—The work moves along well at Roseburg, Ore., under the ministry of B. W. Bass. At present the church building is being enlarged and repaired. S. M. Martin was to lead a meeting beginning October 11. There has been one confession recently.

—Z. T. Sweeney will dedicate the first church in the entire state of New Jersey on November 29. It is located in East Orange, a residence suburb of New York City. The entire building will be completed. It will seat comfortably 1,200. The entire cost equipped will be about $50,000. All Disciples in reach are invited to come and help us enjoy this great occasion.—L. N. D. Wells, pastor.

—Judging from the preliminary reports of the New Orleans convention by our Assistant Editor, and copies of the New Orleans papers which have come to us containing reports of same, we should say that the New Orleans convention was having a most auspicious beginning. Look for full reports in the two following issues of The Christian-Evangelist.

—D. P. Gribben reports that of the nineteen Bible schools of Greater Kansas City, every school is taking the teacher training work, and there are eighteen organized classes. This gives a present enrollment of over 1,000. The rally cry is for 2,000 by November 15.

—We understand that the congregation at Austin, to which George A. Campbell ministers, has decided to continue for a full year its worship with the Congregational Church. Since the burning of its own building these two congregations have effected this co-operation.

—The Lindenwall Church at Hamilton, O., was crowded at both services on October 4 to listen to the farewell messages of W. Edward William, the minister. There was one baptism, and one confession. Brother William is open for work in some responsible field.

—The church at Fitzgerald, Ga., invites correspondence from all Christians who are dissatisfied with their present environments, or who find a change desirable on account of health or business. All letters answered. Address the pastor, E. Everett Hollingworth, 403 N. Main St.

—The work has advanced at Benton Harbor, Mich., under the preaching of H. H. Halley, of Kalamazoo. The church is now expecting T. W. Bellingham to open with a meeting November 1, and continue as pastor. Brother Bellingham has been doing good work at Fremont.

—W. O. Harp has entered upon his service of ministration to the Lenox Avenue Church, New York. Both he and his wife became ill soon after reaching the state, due to the change of climate from the warm Southland to the disagreeable weather New York experienced at the time of their arrival there.

—Chas. C. Chapman, Fullerton, Cal., has just given $600 to the Foreign Society for the support of a missionary on the foreign field. It will be remembered that last year he gave $5,000 for a hospital in Nantungchow, China. He is a successful business man and is always liberal in every good word and work.

—A Sunday-school board of eight or nine members with George W. Brewster, of Healdsburg, as president, and Mrs. L. Y. Taft, of Alameda, as secretary, has been instituted. At the time of the last convention there were 32 organized teacher training classes in Northern California, with a total enrollment of 833.

—W. H. Coleman has closed his work at Tampa, Fla., where in less than eighteen months of a pastorate 50 names were added to the church roll—most of them at regular services. The church debt was reduced, the Sunday-school attendance increased, a Junior Endeavor of 20 members was organized, and at both state conventions the Tampa C. W. B. M. auxiliary stood highest on the roll of honor.

—The following request explains itself: "Please announce in your next issue that the date of the annual convention of Western Pennsylvaia Christian Missionary Society, which meets regularly September 29-30 and October 1, has been changed on account of the Pittsburg Sesqui-Centennial, and will meet at Turtle Creek, October 20, 21, 22.—J. A. Joyce, Corresponding Secretary, Pittsburg, Pa., October 6, 1908.

New Orleans Convention.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

New Orleans, October 10.—The convention began on Friday night, with a public session of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, but the annual board meeting of the women, as well as that of the Foreign Society, was held during the day. At the former the usual business was transacted and plans perfected for presentation to the general meeting, while at the latter the chief matter of consideration, after the approval of the excellent reports, was the appointment of a committee of five to take into consideration, with the committee that was expected to be appointed by the Home Society, the question of securing a permanent home that shall be owned by the societies.

At the public meeting of the women, held in the First M. E. Church South, by courtesy of that congregation, the address of welcome was made by Mrs. J. J. Zigler, who gave a truly Southern greeting. This was responded to by the acting president, Mrs. Atwater. The address of the evening was given by W. J. Menzies, of India. Saturday morning and afternoon were also devoted to C. W. B. M. interests. The reports showed that the women had surpassed all their previous reports, and could claim the prize over any of the men's organizations. Their grand total of receipts this year was $295,630. The total disbursements were over $306,000. Nearly every other part of their work shows advance. The watchwords for the year are to be: "Womanhood Enlisted and Equipped; 85,000 Women; The Race Redeemed; $265,000; The Christ Crowned; $75,000 for the Centennial." Reference was made, of course, to the serious loss to the work of Mrs. Moses. Her picture adorned the platform.

The address of the morning was by C. H. Winders, and after that came that most delightful hour when the missionaries were introduced. Mrs. Atwater was elected president and Mrs. Harlan vice-president.

The meeting of the directors of the American Christian Missionary Society was held on Saturday afternoon, and some business of importance came up in the report of the board. The change of the constitution was one matter, and the discussion was so prolonged that an adjourned meeting was held after the Young People's session in the evening. As the matter has to come before the general society for action, we defer any report until the general convention has passed upon the recommendations of the board. The publication committee asked for extension of time.

The spirit of the convention is fine. The attendance is in the neighborhood of 3,000, with more to come. New Orleans is hospitable.

Thirty pulpits were open to our preachers Sunday, men like George Combs, Smither, McLellan, Dr. Dye and A. R. Moore representing us, while W. F. Richardson and Cephas Shelburne spoke at Atheneum Hall at the great communion service there. The offering for ministerial relief was over $1,000, and President R. A. Long offered to double it, making this the largest offering ever made on such an occasion. Great enthusiasm and heartfelt praise.—Paul Moore.

—We regret to learn of the death of Mrs. S. C. Toof, of Memphis, Tenn., in the seventy-second year of her age. We tender our sympathies to the bereaved family and friends and withhold fuller notice until next week.

—During the Centennial year the Foreign Society hopes to found two new Bible colleges; one at Vigan, Province of Luzon, Philippine Islands, and the other at Bolenge, Upper Congo, Africa. These two enterprises will involve an outlay of between $40,000 and $50,000. An effort will be made to raise this money in special personal gifts. It is proposed to make an effort to get 100 friends to give at least $500 each.

—November 22 is children's day for home missions. For years this day has been growing in favor with the Bible schools and with the present scheme of co-operation between the state superintendents and George B. Ranshaw of the home board, there are bright prospects that this year the schools will give home missions the emphasis long deserved but never before accorded to this important and fundamental interest.

—James Siders, clerk of the church in Presho, S. D., is anxious to have members of the Christian churches come into that region to help build up our cause in Lyman county, especially in Presho, where we have lately erected a church. He speaks of the opportunity to secure lands at reasonable prices, and mentions the opening of the Trip county reservation, registration for which began October 6 and continues to the 17th.

—Dean L. Bond, minister of Howell Church, Atlanta, Ga., has been preaching a series of sermons on "The Grave; What Then?" and the attendance has filled the house. There have been additions every Lord's day during the past month. He writes that although called for another year he can make arrangements for revival meetings during the winter, and will be assisted by Mrs. Bond, who is a splendid singer and personal worker.

—J. A. W. Brown is one of the good workers of Kansas, but is not included in our special number. His home is at Moline, but he does evangelistic work. He organized the Mount Olive Christian Church last spring with 75 members. A church building is now in process of erection. It is to be located about eight miles from Moline. William White, one of the old soldiers of the cross, is helping to push the work to completion.

—Sumner T. Martin, who entered upon the work at Santa Barbara, Cal., August 19, had 17 added by letter during the month following, and one baptism. The attendance at Bible school and other societies is growing. For church extension $35 was contributed. A teacher training class has been started, and a fine Gideon club, an organized class for men. Brother Martin is preaching a series of sermons preparatory to the evangelistic campaign which begins November 8.

—The Union Avenue Christian Church of St. Louis recently had the pleasure of listening to Judge Estelle, of Omaha, Neb., who spoke out of his experiences of boyhood and girlhood life. Judge Estelle has made a special study of the conditions that lead to criminality, or wrongdoing in the young, and the cases he cited illustrative of his points that young life needs only careful and kindly guidance to prevent much of it becoming criminal, were such as brought tears to many eyes. The judge is a most forceful and interesting speaker, and his message will do good wherever it is delivered. It is entirely appropriate for the Lord's house.

—Edwin D. Hamner writes in the "Christian Courier:": "I recently inserted an advertisement in The Christian-Evangelist with the idea of attracting attention to Bay City, and thus, perhaps, building up the church here. As a result of that advertisement I received a great host of answers, which would seem to indicate that a multitude of people have their eyes on Texas. One lady who came with her family and located here told me that the train out of St. Louis was loaded with people coming to Texas."

—D. C. Tremaine has given up the evangelistic portion of his state work, retaining only the position of corresponding secretary of New York. This is due chiefly to feeling the burden of absence from his family. During the past three years while he has been in the state work the offerings for state missions have doubled, and the recent unanimous reelection to office attests the faith of the New York brethren in Brother Tremaine's work. We believe, however, he has a desire to locate in the pastorate again. His address is Williamsville, N. Y.

—The First Christian Church, Quincy, Ill., recently held its annual meeting, and the reports among the various departments of the church were encouraging, both in a financial way and in the work accomplished. The report from the Chapel at Twenty-fifth and High street is, also, gratifying. Elders and deacons were elected, and the outlook for the coming year is said to be better than for some time past. A fund has already been started for the new church building. At the close of the meeting refreshments were served by the ladies.

—J. W. Baker, who has done such a fine work in Southwest Missouri, has left Neosho, where the new building was recently dedicated, and has become superintendent of missions of Western Washington under the state and home boards. He is delighted with the prospect in this great field. His address is now 613 South Ainsworth avenue, Tacoma, Wash. We hope to publish shortly some account of Brother Baker's recent work, which is well worth the attention of the brotherhood. The new pastor at Neosho is J. B. Hunley, and a meeting has been in process led by H. O. Breeden.

—John T. Owens has just returned to Guthrie, Okla., from his old home in Milburn, Ky., where he held a two-weeks' meeting in the same church in which he confessed Christ at the age of 16, and where he preached his first sermon 37 years ago. A reunion and basket meeting was held. John R. Farrell, now of Alamo, Tenn., a former pastor, was also present, and delivered a fine sermon in the evening. This meeting resulted in 27 additions—20 of them being confessions. Brother Owens also preached at Bardwell, where he baptized a prominent banker of that town.

—C. W. Cauble has just been installed as pastor of the Sixth Christian Church, of Indianapolis. A. B. Philputt and Prof. Jabez Hall took part in the installation, which was a success. In some ways Brother Cauble has a great opportunity in his new field. The membership is about 600, we believe, but a new building enterprise is one of the questions that has to be faced. Brother Cauble is one of our thoughtful young men who keeps a level head. He is an Indiana man, born in Salem. He is a graduate of the Bible College at Lexington, and of the Indiana State University, while he has, also, had special work in the Harvard Divinity School. For four years he has been pastor at Greencastle, Ind., resigning that work to make a trip abroad, taking in the Holy Land. He enters at once into a revival meeting.

—Mead Irwin Dutt, who is working under the American Christian Missionary Society, of East Las Vegas, New Mexico, reports an increase of four in the membership during September. Brother Dutt had the pleasure of bringing his own brother to Christ. The Meadow City Bible class for men has an enrollment of 15, most of whom are railroad men. The Bible school prospers. A church home is needed, and it will be some time before a building can be attempted. Brother Dutt is to conduct the Bible readings in the city Y. M. C. A. during the coming year, all of which indicates that our cause is growing in favor.

—Our native evangelists from the far Bosira River, 250 miles from Bolenge, Africa, send reports of remarkable interest. At one place where they have but recently gone, they report 700 people who are turning from the old life of sin earnestly seeking to know the truth concerning Christ. This is the point where the proposed station is to be opened by our Northern California churches. They have pledged $10,000 as a special Centennial offering for this new work. While our California brethren have been planning for this great work the Lord has been opening up the way for its accomplishment. As encouraging reports likewise come from Mbala Lunzi, on the great Momboyo River, where the Southern California brethren are to put another $10,000 into a station. This is surely the nick of time for us on the Congo.

—We regret to record the death of David Walk, one of the older preachers of the church, and who has occupied some prominent pulpits. He was recently present at the diamond jubilee anniversary of the Central Christian Church, Indianapolis, and spoke on that occasion. For a period he was pastor at Kokomo, Ind., and it was there that he died and was buried. Had he lived until next December he would have reached his seventy-fifth year. He was a man of considerable power in the ministry, but very largly crippled his influence in religious work for a time by taking up business matters. Later, however, he gave his attention to the circulation of a book on the Bible, and achieved some considerable success. In another column will be found some fuller details from the pen of Brother Edwards, of Kokomo. Brother Walk was one of the early stalwarts, who are now few in numbers among us.

—E. W. Elliott began his ministry at Selma, Ala., last November, after having been in North Central Kentucky all his life as a preacher, and where as a people we are strongly entrenched. The work under him is growing at Selma, and the men and women who are bringing it to pass, he says, are worthy followers of the Master. In response to a question of the Editor, Brother Elliott writes: "We are overshadowed by the other religious bodies. There is no particular opposition to us that I can discover, but we are politely ignored. It will require time and faithful preaching and Christlike living on the part of our people to break down the walls that hedge us about. The congregation of 150 members here has done faithful self-sacrificing work. They own a modern well-appointed house, and have it paid for except what they owe the church extension board. So far as I am able to learn the conditions that obtain here obtain in the regions round about. We are 'on the firing line;' we are doing 'pioneer work' under vastly changed conditions from the pioneers of seventy-five years ago. But we have faith in our religious position and its future triumph, and our true men and women in the Southland may live to see our cause strongly established. If they do not, others will."

—In spite of the newspaper reports concerning the case of B. Q. Denham, formerly of New York City, but now of Pleasant Hill, Mo., we have declined to make any statement of the case until the trial of the divorce case in which he was corespondent had taken place. Now that the case has been tried, and he has been pronounced guilty of leading a young wife astray, and bringing about a divorce between herself and her husband, she herself confessing her crime, there remains nothing for us to do but to publish this regrettable fact, that the brethren and churches may act accordingly. We have a note from Brother Denham, together with a statement, denying the charge against him, and saying that he could not defend himself against a wealthy plaintiff. But we can not go behind the decision of the judge on the testimony offered and the confession of the wife. The case is an awful warning to all ministers of the gospel to guard their conduct in this and all other respects that they may not bring into disrepute the holy cause which they represent.

The West Texas Convention.

This meeting will be held at Odessa, October 26. Baxter Golightly has been doing excellent work in this district, the territory of which reaches from Abilene to El Paso, and from Sanderson to Sierra Blanco. It is supposed that the ubiquitous and indefatigable champion saloon buster, Arthur W. Jones, is taking a few days rest while he holds some meetings in the south end of the district. This is a district of magnificent distances, but that fact makes it all the more important that we get together. Let the brethren see that every church in the district is represented. In our West Texas work we have been intimately and helpfully associated with C. A. White, of Claude; S. T. Shore, of Hereford; E. M. Haile, president of Hereford Christian College, and last but not least, L. H. Humphreys, of Memphis. These men are helping to make the one time Panhandle desert to blossom as a rose. Polk C. Webb closed a meeting at Allenreed with good results. E. D. Strom is holding down a homestead while he preaches acceptably to the brethren at Texline and other mission points. Jewell Howard, the bishop of Amarillo, and all his people, are elated over the recent accession of 125 new members. Brother Howard spent a few days with us and rendered valuable aid in the meeting at Claude. H. M. Bandy, the beloved wherever known, and Emanuel Dubbs, the pioneer Panhandle preacher, gave us the pleasure and helpfulness of their presence for some days at Memphis. R. W. Officer, at one time one of our most popular and successful evangelists, but now partially lost on a four-section ranch thirty miles from the railway, heard us one night at Memphis. Brother Officer held a meeting twenty-six years ago with the church at Prescott, Ark., where I was then ministering, and we were glad to renew acquaintance after more than a quarter of a century. Brother Officer has probably given undue importance to some of the theories propagated usually by adventists, but still loves the old gospel, is fresh and vigorous for one of his age, and we hope will do many years good service yet in our Master's cause. L. G. Ament has been called another year at Dalhart, where he is held in high esteem. Robert C. Edmonson, of Claude, will enter T. C. U. to prepare himself for the ministry.

Wisconsin State Convention

The Wisconsin state convention was held in Milwaukee September 18-21. It can not be called a great convention in the sense of there having been a large attendance, for we are a feeble folk in these parts, but it is not out of place to say that those who made up the convention were as good as the best among us.

J. C. Thurman, General Auditor of the Green Bay & Western R. R. a former Missourian, and superintendent of the Sunday-school at Hannibal, was president of the convention. He is a very active business man and a very active churchman as well. H. F. Barstow, of Grand Rapids, has been corresponding secretary for several years, and under him the work of the state has gone on to a strong organization.

Among those who were present to take a part on the program were: J. H. Mohorter, of the National Benevolent Association, C. C. Smith, of Cincinnati, Effie Cunningham of the C. W. B. M., W. R. Warren, who claims that the hub of the universe will be Pittsburg in 1909, W. F. Shaw, returned missionary from China and H. A. Denton of the Home Missionary Society.

The work for the past year did not present as much progress in membership growth as in some former years, but in organization considerable progress has been made. More money was raised for mission work, and all plans for the future seem to center around a few points where the work is important, and where it is necessary for the Church to go forward with help from the state board, or else surrender.

One thing is made a special feature in the Wisconsin convention, and that is what the brethren are pleased to call the "Fellowship of the Convention." It was a little new to me, but appeared wonderfully fitting. A great many of the Disciples of Wisconsin never hear one of our preachers except at a state convention. It is the only opportunity of the year to join with each other around the Table of the Lord.

It was a great delight for the Milwaukee brethren to entertain the convention, and they did it well. It was also a great pleasure to have present C. C. Smith, who had the honor of organizing the first church in Milwaukee. Out of this organization has come the Second Church, only recently organized. Claire L. Waite is the pastor of the First Church, and is much loved for his work's sake.

West Virginia Convention

The West Virginia convention was held in Clarksburg, September 15-18. W. M. Long was our genial host. He had gone on ahead of us a couple of years ago to organize a congregation, and under his efficient leadership they had just completed the erection of a building surpassed by none in the state among our people.

Our state convention includes the Ministerial, C. W. B. M., Bible school, Christian Endeavor and missionary interests. The opening session was in charge of the Ministerial Association, with G. W. Ogden as chairman. Crayton S. Brooks, of New Castle, Pa., and E. A. Cole, of Washington, Pa., were to have had the whole evening. Neither of these could be present in time for the opening, but G. W. Muckley, who was on the program for a later day, was there, and ready to take one man's place, or two men's places, or, if necessary, hold the whole convention, and with "Bogus" and his "ten-finger exercise," and his splendid recital of Church Extension facts, he succeeded, as usual, in making his audience believe that Church Extension is the greatest of all our missionary enterprises. Brother Brooks arrived in time to close this session with his address on "The Dynamics of a Single Sentence." It was a masterly address in which he showed how the "Great Commission" has acted as a mighty dynamo to revolutionize the world.

Wednesday morning Brother Brooks conducted the Bible school conference, taking the place of Brother Shields, who had not yet arrived. Then followed the president's address, in which Brother Ogden in his sweet-spirited and clever way developed the thought that we are not bound by the "silences of the Scriptures." D. R. Moss followed with a strong address on "How to Win Men to the Church." C. H. Bass warmed our hearts with a splendid address on "Shepherding the Flock." Here Brother Brooks lifted the convention another notch with his address on "The Place and Power of Men in the Church." He himself certainly has a power over men, and does not fail to point out their place and power in the church.

Wednesday afternoon the C. W. B. M. took up the gavel and its president, Mrs. Wynne, of Bethany, was magistra ceremoniarum for a day and a night. The principal speakers were Mrs. Ida Harrison, of Kentucky, and Mrs. Gerould, of Cleveland, O. Mrs. Harrison, with her scholarly addresses, never fails to captivate her audiences. Mrs. Gerould delighted her hearers with stories of India's homes. Our West Virginia women who were on the program all reached a high mark in their papers and addresses. They are to be congratulated on the splendid work they have done during the past year. Thursday afternoon the State Missionary Society took up the reins, with Richie Ware as president. And from this time on, an incessant fire was kept up on missions, state, home and foreign. "Christian Education in its Relation to State Missions," was discussed by Prof. Philip Johnson, of Bethany. An address more polished and convincing will not be heard this year, even at New Orleans.

Following this came one of the best things of the whole convention in an address on "Closer Union Between the Baptists and Disciples," by Dr. D. B. Purinton, president of West Virginia University. He traced the history of the church through five periods—Regulation, Reformation, Restoration, Reclamation and Redintegration, and thus showed that the four phases of the present age are: 1. A feeling of Christian Unity; 2. A move toward federation of churches; 3. A feeling in favor of organic union; 4. A feeling that there must be a redintegration of certain communions. He laid down the three distinctive features of the Baptist Church—1. Insistence on supremacy of God's Word. 2. The sacred regard for religious individualism. 3. A peculiar regard for the ordinances of the Church—and then showed that these are even distinctive features of our own people. "Church unity is in the air," he said, "Christians everywhere feel that we must come together in a solid phalanx." Brother Brooks responded to this address in a few well-chosen remarks. This was a most valuable part of our program, especially since we were in a city where our people and the Baptists are on such friendly terms. Following this was a soul-stirring address on home missions by Brother Ranshaw. At the close of his address he presented to Brother Fields, pastor of First Church, of Wheeling, the honor flag to be given to his Bible school for having outrun all the other schools of the state in the home missionary campaign.

Thursday night the convention was carried up to the mountain top by President Ware's able address on "The Macedonian Call," and Prof. W. B. Taylor's masterly presentation of the theme, "The Places in Our Plea Needing Emphasis." He spoke of, 1. The Sonship of Jesus. 2. Absolute Personal Loyalty to the Cause of Christ; 3. The Idea of the Kingdom of God; 4. The Spirit of Conquest; 5. The Apostolic Idea of Teaching; 6. The Ministry and Power of the Holy Spirit, as phases of our plea that should receive greater emphasis to-day.

Friday morning we had a helpful Bible school conference, with Brother Fields as leader, followed by Brother Cole with an inspiring address on "A Bible School Vision." The remainder of the morning was taken up with the business session.

The reports showed the best year's work in the history of the society, but much land yet to be taken. Five evangelists reported 280 additions by baptism and 389 otherwise. Brother Yoho, corresponding secretary, reported $2,481 raised the past year and a deficit of nearly $300. Enough was pledged by the delegates to start us into the new year clear of debt. J. W. Yoho's work as corresponding secretary was highly commended by the convention, and our people regret that he does not find it possible to continue in this office. His successor has not yet been chosen.

Time would fail to tell how well Brother Cole filled Brother McLean's place on the program; how Brothers Steed, Biadle, Finnell and Cave, all new men in our state, and Johnston, one of our district evangelists, handled the Endeavor, the Bible school and prohibition problems; how Brother Warren talked to us about the Centennial and Brother Cole closed the convention with an address on "Men in the Bible School." But these were just the men needed to lead the convention up to a splendid climax in closing.

Then down from the mountain top for another year of service.

W. E. Pierce, Rec. Sec.

Kentucky State Convention

The week of September 21-24 was made memorable for our Kentucky people by one of the best conventions in our long history of seventy-six years. We met at Hopkinsville, as previously announced. The L. & N. R. R. gave us a special train from Louisville, and we went down on it, nearly two hundred strong. A special car was run from Paris to Louisville and also one from Cincinnati to Louisville. Passengers on these cars made no change during the entire trip. A large number of our representative preachers and business men were with us and a goodly company of our splendid women. Others who came from central and eastern Kentucky joined with the large representation from the southern and western part of the state to make a well-attended convention.

Monday night was occupied by a splendid historical address by Harry D. Smith, coupled with a most gracious word of welcome. He gave us the history of the South Kentucky S. S. and Missionary Association and much of the history of the Hopkinsville church, so intimately associated with the work of the Association. H. C. Garrison, of Danville, responded to the address of welcome and discussed our future work as a united force for missionary work under the title, "Greater Kentucky." We were glad to have him speak for us. Jos. W. Hagin, of Covington, Chairman of the Committee on Future Work, then presented that part of the committee's report relating to the merging of the two organizations into the Kentucky Christian Missionary Convention. This was heartily and unanimously adopted. Horace Kingsbury, of Harrodsburg, presided over the session of the evening with dignity and ease. Upon the adoption of the basis of union he called the State Secretary, H. W. Elliott, of northern Kentucky, and W. J. Hudspeth, evangelist of southern Kentucky to the platform, and pronounced a very fitting marriage ceremony for the two organizations, declaring, in the immortal words of Henry Clay, that henceforth there should be no north, or south, or east, or west, but just Kentucky. The congregation sang "Blest be the tie that binds," and sang it as if they meant it. Robert N. Simpson gave us a fitting invitation to Lexington for 1909, urging that we all attend the great Centennial convention, September 20-24, in the Blue Grass City.

A half hour's social session was delightfully spent, and then every one of us went to the best home in Hopkinsville. Tuesday was occupied by the C. W. B. M., and others will tell of the splendid meeting of that day.

Wednesday was the day of the sessions of the Kentucky Christian Missionary Convention. President J. W. McGarvey gave us a Bible reading on "Missions in Acts." This was one of his characteristic studies, and left us feeling that he had given us the whole story as Luke gives it. The address of the president, Carey E. Morgan, followed, and was one of the most inspiring and uplifting ever heard in one of our conventions. The demand for its publication was unanimous and spontaneous, and it will appear in the forthcoming minutes.

The president announced the committees, and we had the "Annual Report of the Board" by the Secretary, H. W. Elliott. This indicated that we had 42 men at work during the past year, all or part of the time. They added 1916 to our numbers and accomplished many other things that are causes for rejoicing. Over $30,000 was raised for state work, including money raised by men in the field for self support and local work. In spite of the difficulties in the financial world of both general and local character, we made a creditable advance both in the amount given by the churches and the number contributing. Over $91,000 was given for organized missionary work during the past year. We were glad to have with us A. I. Myhr, of Tennessee, and J. Fred Jones, of Illinois, Corresponding Secretaries of their respective states, and to have our people see and know them. H. C. Kendrick, of Georgetown, delighted us with an address on "Our New Kentucky Home," that will be of help to our work.

The afternoon was almost entirely consumed by the reports of committees and discussions of the same. The committee on future work has urged the raising of at least $15,000 for the evangelistic fund for our Centennial year and the holding of a meeting by every church during the year. Other good features of this excellent report will appear in the minutes. Harry D Smith was elected president of the next convention, and he was also selected by the Committee at Hopkinsville, as the member of our Executive Committee. This is the only change in the membership of our board. Bruce W. Trimble, who is recording secretary, and has for years been doing most efficient work, is out, that Brother Smith may be in his stead. Pres. C. L. Loos, W. C. Morro, Robt. N. Simpson, Prof. B. C. Deweese, of Lexington, Geo. W. Kemper, of Midway, and Carey E. Morgan, of Paris, constitute, with H. D. Smith, an executive committee that will with unselfish devotion serve the Kentucky brotherhood freely in this great year upon which we are entering.

The state secretary introduced some of the men from the firing line who were present to us the claims of the Christian and many wished that more time had been given to this feature.

The night session began with devotional services led by Will Sweeney, of Evansville, Ind., a son of J. S. Sweeney. The convention voted greetings to be conveyed to Brother Sweeney by president Morgan and Will Sweeney. Miss Chambers and her charges were given a short period to present to us the claims of the Christian Church Widows' and Orphans' Home of Kentucky. Four little girls sang some songs and a short speech was made by the matron of the Home, Miss Chambers. A good deal of enthusiasm was aroused and an offering taken. The people wanted to spend all the evening session, apparently, talking about the Home.

As a fitting climax for a great convention day, W. N. Briney, of Louisville, presided over an educational session. An Educational Association was formed, planning to hold annual meetings with the other conventions. Prof. W. C. Morro gave a most helpful discussion of the education of our ministerial supply, and R. H. Crossfield, president of Transylvania University, gave us a good address on "The Education of a Christian." This closed a convention of far more than ordinary interest to the work in Kentucky.

Thursday was brim full of good things pertaining to the Bible school interests of Kentucky. No doubt another will furnish the readers of this paper with some adequate account of the splendid reports of Robt. M. Hopkins and the work done by the board of the Kentucky Bible School Association. We sincerely hope that these great meetings may put us in good trim for the larger work of the new year.

An Appeal From the Congo

In sending this remarkable letter Dr. Dye writes:

"Letters just from the Congo give us much encouragement. The work for which Northern and Southern California's money is to be used is opening up now even before we have entered. There 700 men and women have given up the old life, and are begging for instruction, before we have even established a station. Have we exaggerated the opportunity? Is it going to produce encouraging enough results? I beg of you to push this Centennial work of the Pacific coast states."

Extract from two letters from Dr. Widdowson to Dr. Dye:

Bolenge, July 13, 1908.

I believe in my last letter I told you that Iso Timothy went to Bonyeka for a five-months' stretch as an evangelist. We have six or seven others up there with him. You remember Bonyeka, it is about 250 miles from Bolenge. We have had evangelists located there since Mr. Hensey's and my trip in January of this year. The people of Bonyeka and vicinity have accepted the teaching with great gladness. Iso now reports 700 earnest seekers as being on his book. They are crying for us to come to them to open a station there and it is one of the richest fields, as far as I have seen, that ever I have seen. They will not let a Catholic catechist land.

The director of the S. A. B. and the director of the A. P. I (Congo trading companies) have asked us to do their medical work from now on. We should ask for another station in this district at once. Every month of delay will mean a harder struggle later.

We received the following telegram from Brother McLean to-day: "Proceed with Longa." We consider from this that you of the homeland have had a favorable reply from the government in Belgium. You may be sure we will proceed as soon as we can.

The last time the evangelists came in, the last of June, twenty-nine were baptized and fifty-six evangelists and teachers sent out.

In my last letter I told you about the way the new work is opening up at and about Bonyeka. Around Bonyeka I saw more people than I have even seen in any one section of Congo, large towns and plenty of them. These people are waiting and depending on us for the gospel. The Catholics have not yet reached there and the people do not want them. Shall we not, as Hensey has said, "for the third time plant the banner of Christ in Congo, at or near Bonyeka"?

I, for one, am heartily in favor of asking for another station in this section, and that soon. Every one here is heartily in favor of this new move.

Efoloko is doing a splendid work at Mbala Lunzi (This is the new station proposed for Southern California) and there is a very richly populated district in and on this river (Momboyo, tributary of the Bosira), which we have not yet reached, nor have the Catholics.

Brother Eldred is going to make a trip up the Momboyo in a short time and will try to reach farther towns than we have yet reached. Brother Hensey is leaving in a few days for Bonyeka and that section.

I am just coming to what I really want to say. It is this: We must have a steamer if our work is going to extend.

Beyond Bonyeka, on the Bosira W'onene (this is the station proposed for Northern California), and Mbala Lunzi, on the Momboyo, are hundreds of miles of navigable river, not counting many navigable branches to each of these.

We need a steamer. We can and will win these people to Christ, but much of the traveling must be on the natural highways, the rivers. This steamer question is no small deal. It is going to take money and lots of it. What is important now is that we get before the people in general the great need for a steamer that we may further extend the work which our Father has so richly blessed. Now is the time to press it home. May they catch a vision of the teeming thousands living on navigable rivers without Christ or hope. Yours as ever in his work,

Widdowson.

That Gladstone Proposition.

Our church foundations are complete, the material is mostly on the ground and framed, and we hope soon to be in occupation. We are fully a year ahead of time. When we took up this work we had no thought of building before next fall. But growth has been so rapid, demand so strong and liberality so unexpected that we deemed it unwise to defer building longer. Indeed, it is certain that, had we not undertaken the work another church would have taken our opportunity.

We are praying for the Lord to send us leaders, teachers, helpers generally, and he is. Can not some good singer, organist, helper in any way, come to our relief, get a choice home among a splendid people at the doors of the metropolis of the great West? A. H. Mulkey.

Hints for Children's Day.

A number of suggestive and helpful leaflets pertaining to the proper observance of children's day for home missions have been issued by the American Christian Missionary Society. A very lively campaign is being waged with the high aim of enlisting every school in the support of state and national home missions. State superintendents are pushing the schools along this line with an enthusiasm suggestive of the late teacher training campaign. Of one thing there seems little doubt. More Bible schools will observe children's day in November than ever lined up in a single year for home missions.

The Federal Council.

The opening session of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America will be held in Philadelphia, Pa., on the evening of Thursday, December 2, at 8 o'clock. The council will continue in session until the afternoon of Tuesday, December 8. The meeting will be one of national interest and historic importance.

This federal council will be composed of delegates regularly appointed and representing churches having an aggregate membership of over fifteen millions.

The executive committee of arrangements recognize the fact that many pastors and members of the thirty denominational bodies in the fellowship of this council will wish to attend its sessions. Provision will be made for the entertainment of delegates only. The local committee, however, will be prepared to aid visitors in securing accommodations in hotels and private families at reduced rates. Any letters in regard to reduced railway rates and matters local to Philadelphia should be sent to Rev. William H. Roberts, D. D., Witherspoon building, Philadelphia.

Letters regarding the program and matters connected with the official work of the council may be sent to Rev. E. B. Sanford, D. D., 81 Bible House, New York City.

Pastors are earnestly requested to keep a notice of this meeting on their regular church bulletins.

In behalf of the executive committee of arrangements,

William H. Roberts, Chairman.
E. B. Sanford, Secretary.

P. S. To the Members of the Press Committee:

It is the hope of the committee that you will kindly see that the date and place of the meeting of the council is given in your issue up to December 1.

Arizona Letter.

The Lord's work is not in vain in Arizona. Five churches, all with resident ministers and all planting the Cause surely, in this wonderfully prosperous and healthy region, where Satan has squatted on every claim. God has greatly blessed us in Bisbee. Property repairs to the value of $300 have been made; twenty-eight additions, mainly by letter or statement, have been received; Bible school is doubled in average attendance, and Rally day brought out about 250. The teacher training class numbers about fifty, with some graduates soon to receive diplomas. A drill-down contest is scheduled at Douglas and at Bisbee this month. Our revival with home forces is set for November. It is surprising with what intense interest people out here watch the political and religious developments. Out here, where the conflict is strenuous against sin, denominational differences are less exalted and the power of the cross is emphasized more, while I fail to find any sympathy with so-called higher criticism in any of the churches. Yours in his name.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS.

Success in a New Town.

For the first revival meeting of the Christian Church of Blanchard, Okla., W. H. Kindred, state evangelist, of Enid, Okla., was selected. During the third week of the meeting L. S. Cutler, choir leader, became partially ill and Brother Kindred secured the services of C. C. Gardner and his wife. Then Brother Kindred received word of his wife's illness and at once departed. Brother Nichols, of Chickasha, Okla., recently from Alliance, O., conducted the meeting to its close. The church feels very grateful to Brother Gardner for his good work during the two days we were without a preacher, and for his and his wife's labors while with us. A large tabernacle was erected. The audience did not seem to tire. We had ten additions the last night, but Brother Nichols could stay no longer. We closed with fifty-two charter members, and are grateful to those good people of Chickasha who donated $20 for the services of Brother and Sister Gardner in our meeting. Blanchard, Okla., is a new town on the Oklahoma Central railroad, and has about 700 inhabitants. We will build a church house at once and Brother Kindred has promised to dedicate it and hold a two-weeks' meeting. L. S. Cutler.

Yeuell at Fostoria, O.

The Western reserve is known for conservatism. This is true of Fostoria to a marked degree. The Church of Christ is about ten years old and has been self-sustaining for a little over two years. Denominationalism is intrenched and of a character that causes it to look with contempt upon a body of people who would be known as simply Christians. The Catholics, Methodists and Presbyterians are particularly strong and have large costly buildings. The Baptist church is much older than our own, but much weaker. When we determined upon a campaign for souls people smiled and predicted failure. It was preposterous to think of a church of 150 members undertaking a campaign which ten churches unitedly would not touch.

As soon as the evangelist was secured a religious census of the city was taken. A large tabernacle used as an armory and rink, was rented because of the central location. It was cleaned, painted inside and out in white. A chorus platform seating 150 was erected, comfortable seats made for the auditorium, electric fans installed, ten 100-candle power incandescent lights placed within, two pianos rented and the building tastefully decorated. When the evangelist arrived he suggested a baptistry, which was at once installed, and hundreds for the first time saw spiritual baptisms. The baptistry was used every night. The members of the board pledged $500 before the meeting began and every one of them was a working man. At every service months beforehand something was said about the approaching meeting. Prayer-meetings emphasized it. An effort was made to follow the directions of the evangelist in every particular.

Herbert Yeuell was secured as evangelist. As the last week of the meeting drew near he was received with ovations the moment he stepped within the building, and that, too, by people who were first angry when they heard the truth. The last night of the meeting he was presented with a purse of gold. A large crowd appeared at the station and sang the Glory Song as the train bore him away.

In the twenty-six days of invitation 127 responded. This is the largest meeting ever held in Northwestern Ohio by one congregation, and none was ever so widely noticed. From distances of many miles the people came. The big building was full the first day and interest grew to the close of the meeting. The special meetings for men and women were the largest ever assembled under one roof in Fostoria. V. G. Hostetter.

Ohio.

The subject of miracles has been discussed from several Ohio pulpits of late. We presume in all cases the question was settled right. The conclusion of the Bedford pulpit was that "Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved of God among you by miracles and wonders and signs, which God did by him in the midst of you, as ye yourselves also know," is true.—Kile Brooks repented of his resignation at Massillon and will stay longer.—J. J. Cole of Washington C. H., Ohio, took the work at Clarksburg, Tenn. It is reported that Grant Waller of Galion will succeed him at Washington C. H.—October 4 was Ohio Fellowship day. As far as possible the preachers throughout the state exchanged pulpits and preached on Ohio missions. All this preparatory to the offering for Ohio missions, November 1. It was the privilege of the Ohio man to preach at Aetna Road, Cleveland, in exchange with F. D. Butchart, who is bachelor bishop of that diocese. While a student, my third attempt at preaching was made at what was then the Aetna Street chapel. After a lapse of several years I thought it safe to go back, as the people had forgotten both the sermon and the preacher by this time.—We are all rejoicing in the splendid meeting at Fostoria. This has been a conservative field, but Herbert Yeuell proved to be the man equal to the demands. We congratulate all concerned.—Those disciples in the Cleveland districts enjoyed their quarterly fellowship meeting at Crawford Road, October 5. J. G. Slayter, of Pittsburg, made the address on "The Adult Bible school Class." J. O. Shelburne and singer Knight began a meeting at Newton Falls, Sept. 27. The outlook is hopeful for a good meeting.—M. J. Grable began a meeting at North Eaton, October 4. Brother Grable has several meetings booked for the fall and winter.—We extend a cordial welcome to Robert Pegrum, who has come from New England to North Fairfield.—The saints at North Royalton are in a meeting, being assisted by W. B. Slater, of Greenwich. September 27 was the opening day.—H. B. McCormick, a recent graduate of Hiram, is now with the church at Lexington and began a meeting with home forces, September 27.—Chester Sprague, of East Liberty, must leave our climate again for the winter, and will take the work at St. Petersburg, Fla., where W. A. Harp has recently been.—Harry Miller has resigned at Chardon. He has spent some six or seven years on Chardon hill and "made good."—October 4 marked the opening of another house of worship in Columbus. This one is located in the south part of the city. Secretary Miller, assisted by the Columbus preachers, performed. There is also talk of a new mission on the north side, near the State University. All right, the more the better. There is no city in the world where this scribe is more delighted to see the Disciples grow.—George Taubman and singer, Gardner, are storming the sinners at Chillicothe. W. D. Neal is pastor there. This has proved one of the hardest fields in Ohio in years past. I pray for success this time.—No less than thirty counties in Ohio are in local option campaigns now, and elections coming before this is in print. Of course our brethren are on the firing line. C. O. Reynard is general secretary of the Trumbull county fight. The Second Church at Warren heartily granted him his time. Why not? The saloon is the greatest enemy of the church. —O. C. Larason, of Newark, one of our good and faithful church elders, and a man eminently worthy and capable, is a candidate for clerk of the Supreme Court on one of the state tickets this fall. All Disciples will honor a worthy man and the cause we love by voting for him. C. A. F.

Kansas, Second District.

So far as known to the writer all the churches of the second district, with few exceptions, are doing aggressive work, being supplied with a splendid class of preachers. Our attention is now being directed toward Topeka, whither the tribes will go up October 22, to attend the Jubilee Convention, which will be the largest and most significant gathering of Disciples ever assembled on Kansas soil.—The missionary rally of the Paola church was a decided success. It covered five days. H. A. Denton, loved by all, spoke for American missions; S. W. Nay, the popular and successful pastor of the Central, Kansas City, Kan., represented Church Extension; C. A. Finch, the orator of Kansas, and pastor of the First Church, Topeka, represented the foreign work, and Geo. E. Lyon, of Topeka, superintendent of Kansas missions, was with us Saturday and Sunday in the interests of Kansas, making the appeal on Sunday morning. His strong sermons and genial manner made a good impression on our people. The church enjoyed the rally.—Our men's organized Bible class is doing splendid work for the time they have been organized. The class is a valuable factor in our Bible school.—We have had six confessions within the month, not reported. W. S. Lowe.

Shreveport Meeting.

Evangelist W. E. Harlow closed a four-weeks' meeting here. A fine attendance and fifty-one additions to the church are the facts which indicate the extent of the seed sowing and the harvest. The latter part of the meeting was interfered with by the equinoctial weather conditions or the results would have been larger. Of Brother Harlow's preaching it is hardly necessary to speak, as he is so well known to the brotherhood. It was exceedingly strong with facts and logic; much stronger than its appeal to the emotions and sensibilities of the heart. His familiarity with the scriptures is a remarkable feature about his preaching, and early establishes confidence in the mind of his hearers as to his ability, and this confidence constantly increases.

One of the notable things about the Harlow meeting in Shreveport was the splendid music throughout. Professor Miller is unusually strong as a chorus director, is far more than an ordinary soloist and with it all has a most charming personality. Miss Helen Ruth Hite, of Chicago, who canceled her engagement with the Chicago Concert Company, in order to give her great talent to the work of soul winning, was the leading soloist and, although this was her first meeting, she completely won the hearts of all by her sweet voice and unaffected manner. Her solos were all heart summonses. She is destined to become a power in evangelism.

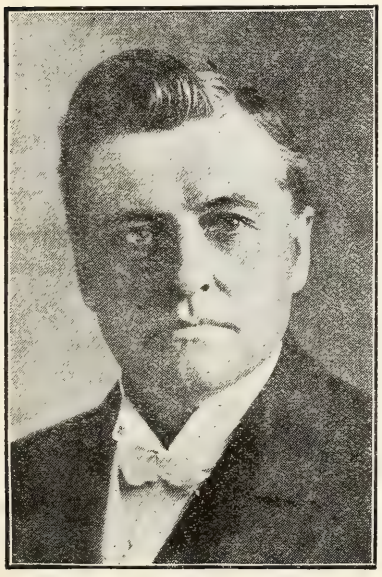
Brother Miller was compelled, on account of an engagement with Evangelist Cooksey, to leave in the midst of the Shreveport meeting. He was succeeded in his work here by Alfred O. Kuhn, minister and singing evangelist. Brother Kuhn was born and reared in Newark, N. J. He received his education in vocal and instrumental music in New York City. Coming West, he traveled with and led the music for a union evangelist for several months, finally locating in Chicago, where he attended the Moody Institute with a view of entering the Presbyterian ministry. After leaving Chicago he was for one year pastor of a Presbyterian church in Minnesota. This last summer he came South to do evangelistic work with a friend he had met at the Moody Institute. At Alexandria, La., he preached in the Christian church, and, after inquiring of its principles, became very much interested. Brother Betcher, our Alexandria minister, had an extended talk with him. He came on here and after a further talk with the writer at once decided to obey his Lord in Christian baptism and cast his lot with those who stand for the simple New Testament faith as we teach it.

Alfred O. Kuhn.

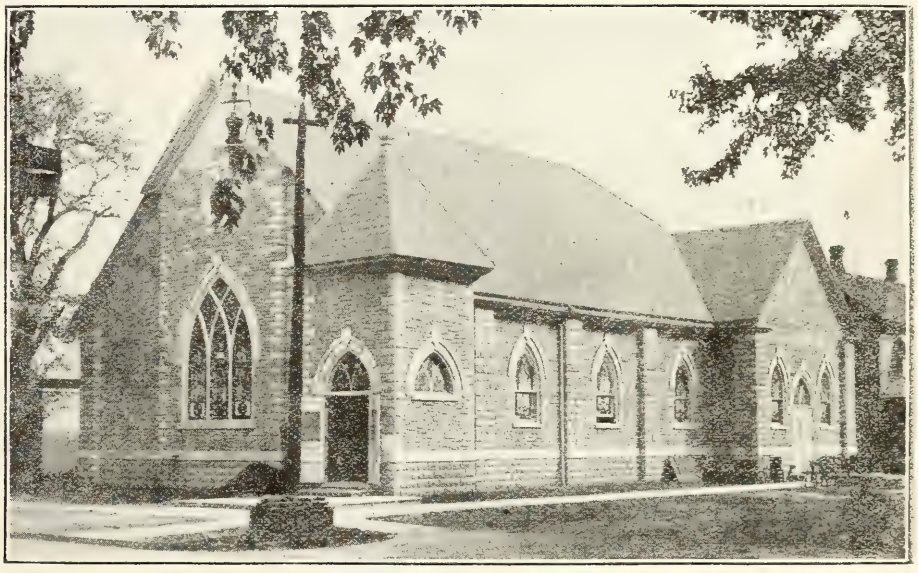
This he did one week before the Harlow meeting began. He is just 27 years old, is cultivated and accomplished, giving promise of a life of great usefulness. He has a fine voice and with his previous experience, Brother Harlow readily recognized his value in the evangelistic work, and Brother Kuhn perceived the advantage to be derived from becoming better acquainted with doctrinal principles through being associated with such a strong preacher. So the union was consummated.

With Alfred O. Kuhn and Miss Hite Brother Harlow has a very strong team of singers, undoubtedly one of the very best in the brotherhood, although they are both recent recruits.

Claude L. Jones.



Geo. H. Sims, Pastor.



New Christian Church, Findlay, O.

NEW CHURCH AT FINDLAY, OHIO

A beautiful new Christian Church building has been dedicated at Findlay, O., under circumstances reflecting credit on all concerned, especially Pastor Sims. About $6,000 was needed, and the greater part of this was raised by F. M. Rains. "The Jeffersonian," the local paper, in a lengthy account, says:

"The story of the building of the church is an example of perseverance and determined effort on the part of Rev. Sims and the members of the congregation. When Mr. Sims came to Findlay last winter, he found a little band holding service in a store building on South Main street, with no church, or means of getting one, in sight. Immediately the new minister went to work. First the congregation was built up, and then the canvass for the building was started. At first few were optimistic, and the minister and his work met opposition, but gradually they, single-handed, beat down the walls of opposition, and in the face of the financial depression, secured enough money to warrant undertaking the building of the church.

"Mr. Sims, the pastor, has held a number of important charges and has been the means of building up many small congregations, just as he is doing in this city. The last charge he held was at Lima, O., on the South Side, where he had phenomenal success."

The church building is located near the center of the city. G. H. Sims, the minister, writes:

"It is constructed of cement blocks, with rock-faced pilasters and a body of broken-ashler pattern, the window sills and caps, as well as the water table, being of smooth-faced work like cut stone. Altogether the effect is that of a fine stone building, for which it has frequently been taken. Its beauty, simplicity and modest elegance are not fully apparent from the picture. It must be seen to be appreciated. The interior is in keeping, both architecturally and as to convenience and decoration. Brother Rains, who has dedicated hundreds of churches and may speak with the authority of experience, tersely said of it, 'It's a gem.'

"Brother Rains needs no commendation from us, yet we wish to say he is a master hand in this line of work. We were greatly pleased with his financial efforts, but, above all, his addresses were mountain peaks of thought, force and inspiration.

"The Central is rejoicing in the Lord. Why should they not be happy? Eight months ago there was no church building, and not a dollar in sight; now there is a splendid $10,000 corner. The church will begin a meeting soon, held by the pastor, assisted by his wife. The aim will be to double the membership."

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism," or "by letter."

Boise, Oct. 1.—We just closed our second meeting with the church at Battle Ground, Wash., where Brother Ames is the pastor. There were six baptisms and five excellent Christians took membership. Some good people heard the gospel for the first time and were attracted by it, and we hope it will result in bringing them finally to Christ. This was out of our field of labor, but we had promised them before. Our work in South Idaho prospers.—Frank E. Jones, Corresponding Secretary, South Idaho.

Illinois.

Sidney, Oct. 6.—The Church of Christ in Catlin, Ill., is prospering under the ministry of W. O. S. Cliffe. There have been five more added since the last report. The church is preparing for a revival campaign to begin November 8, during which time we desire to add many more to the saved, and free the organization from an old debt.

Flanagan, Sept. 29.—Evangelists John R. Golden, of Gibson City, Ill., and Charles E. McVay, of Benkelman, Neb., closed a three and a half-weeks' meeting here to-night, the immediate results of which were ten confessions, and one by letter. The preaching was clear and convincing. Brother McVay is an efficient soloist and chorus leader. This splendid church in the midst of a foreign population has been greatly encouraged and inspired for future work.—R. E. Thomas, pastor.

He has just entered the ministry.—Clay Trusty.

Winslow, Oct. 5.—The following is an account of meetings held in Pike county, Indiana: Last January Brother Godwin held a 15-days' meeting at Traylor Chapel (union) Church, which resulted in six additions—five by baptism and one from the General Baptists. August 2, at Brother Godwin's regular monthly preaching at Flat Creek (union), two were added by baptism. On August 9 six more made the good confession and were baptized—one from the Methodists. Brother Godwin began a series of meetings August 23, at the Vincent schoolhouse, resulting in 20 additions. The converts ranged in age from 17 to 67 years, six of whom were heads of families. There is not a young person in the neighborhood but what belongs to some church. We have prayer-meeting every Thursday night, Sunday-school and communion service each Lord's day, and preaching once a month.—Harland Osgathorp.

Iowa.

Oelwein, Oct. 22.—Just home from Garwin, where I held a short meeting resulting in 22 accessions, nearly all by primary obedience. The church was greatly blessed spiritually, and has a larger vision for the future. F. V. Kerns, the pastor, was no small factor in the success of the meeting. Mrs. VanKirk, leader of song, did her part nobly.—C. L. McKim.

I go to Mayetta, Kan., Oct. 8, to begin a meeting with N. Rolla Davis. After November 1 I will be with W. A. Roush at the Morris Street Church, Indianapolis, Ind.—O. J. Marks, Canton, Mo., singing evangelist.

We held the meeting outdoors, resulting in organizing a church of 60 members, a Christian Endeavor, a training class and a Sunday-school. A lot on which to build was secured. I am now in Valparaiso, Neb., and begin a meeting in the newly dedicated church at Blackwell, Okla., October 11.—Richard Martin.

College Mound, Oct. 8.—Brother Wright is to begin a series of meetings at Hebron the second Lord's day in this month. Brother Haynes, the Presbyterian minister, is to preach on Saturday night.—Mrs. F. W. Allen.

Nebraska.

Fremont, Oct. 6.—We are beginning a successful revival meeting at this place. The pastor, I. H. Fuller, is doing the preaching. The object of the present meeting is not simply to add new members to the church, but to teach those already in the church the way of the Lord more perfectly. A $6,000 Y. M. C. A. building was recently completed here. There is also a normal school with 1,200 students enrolled.—Charles E. McVay, song evangelist.

ADULT BIBLE CLASS MOVEMENT

MARION STEVENSON

The Bible School's Greatest Problem.

REV. DR. FRANKLIN M'ELFRESH ELECTED INTERNATIONAL TEACHER TRAINING SUPERINTENDENT.

There are more than a million Sunday-school teachers in the United States and Canada. In the wide outreach of their influence in Bible study, they come in contact with 15,000,000 members of the Sunday-schools of the International field. "More and more our church leaders recognize that teacher training is the Sunday-school's greatest problem. Never were they so united in the determination to find its solution. Upon the result of their labors in this direction depends the largest success of all Sunday-school work."

In its work of helpful service for the individual Sunday-school, the International Sunday-School Association maintains a Teacher Training Department, for the instruction and inspiration of the teachers in methods and work of teaching. In the development of its plans, it has established standards for two courses of study for teachers—one known as "First" and the other as "Advanced." International diplomas are given to those completing these studies.

At the triennial convention of the International Sunday-School Association, 48 associations represented 6,704 teacher training classes, 79,086 students and 10,016 graduates. The largest number of students enrolled during the triennium in any single association was in Pennsylvania, which enrolled 14,268. Several denominations are now doing teacher training work, whose enrollments are equal to those of the International Association, and at the present time 61 state or provincial Sunday-school associations have either especially appointed teacher training superintendents, or teacher training committees, to supervise this department of work.

During the past triennium the Teacher Training Department has been ably conducted by Mr. W. C. Pearce, of Chicago, who has been known as the International Teacher Training Superintendent. For more than a year he has had, in addition to this work, the duties of the establishment of the Adult Department, which has grown with remarkable rapidity and strength. At the recent International Sunday-School Convention at Louisville, Ky., Mr. Pearce was re-elected Adult Department superintendent, to give his entire time to that work.

The duty of recommending a suitable person as Teacher Training superintendent developed upon a special committee of which Prof. H. M. Hamill, D. D., of Nashville, Tenn., superintendent of Training work of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and chairman of the International Committee on Education, was chairman. In his absence, on account of illness, from the session of the central committee at Louisville, the report of the special committee was presented by W. A. Eudaly, Esq., of Cincinnati, who recommended for the committee the name of Rev. Franklin McElfresh, A. M., D. D., Ph. D. (Ohio Wesleyan), Columbus, Ohio, and he was unanimously elected superintendent of the Teacher Training Department of the International Sunday-School Association for the ensuing triennium.

Dr. McElfresh is now closing his sixth year as district superintendent of the Zanesville district Ohio conference of the M. E. Church. He is a "Buckeye" by birth and education, and graduate of the Ohio Wesleyan University, Delaware, Ohio. Post-graduate work in this institution earned for him the degree of Ph. D., and the university later conferred upon him the honorary degree D. D. Activity in literary work, and a close and continued identification with educational and college life, have made him the educational leader of his own conference, and have compelled for him recognition as one of the strong educational pastors of Methodism. He is a member of a college fraternity chapter at Delaware with Bishop Anderson and Dr. Charles E. Jefferson, of New York City.

Dr. McElfresh's interest in Christianity has been kingdom-wide, and his fraternal relations with all denominations have won for him their respect and love. He is a vigorous manly man in middle life, a man of culture and fine social qualities, a strong, original, thoughtful and pleasing platform speaker, with a rich voice of unusual forensic quality. He is equal to any demand that may be made upon him in presenting the educational side of Sunday-school work before colleges, seminaries and conventions, and educational and ministerial gatherings.

Dr. McElfresh has been a Sunday-school pastor interested in Sunday-School and young people's work, and his churches have always been crowded with young life. He has always been active in organized Sunday-School work, particularly in its educational and spiritual side. His pastorates have included the country churches in his early ministry, and for a number of years the strongest city churches in the Ohio Conference. His presiding eldership has revealed his strength as an organizer and has given him a long-desired opportunity for a close study of the country church and the country Sunday-school. These investigations have resulted in a series of articles and addresses on these subjects that are unique and strong.

Dr. McElfresh is a man of devotion and piety, and keeps close to the spiritual side of the work. He comes to his work with the enthusiastic approval of Bishops McDowel, Bashford, Moore, Anderson, Walden and others. His family consists of a wife and daughter in early young womanhood. During the summer months Dr. McElfresh will acquaint himself with his new duties as opportunity offers, will close his term as District Superintendent and will officially assume his new office October 1.

Examinations—Their Importance and Methods of Conducting Them.

The importance of examinations in our particular line is first, to the student; second, to the teacher; third, to the state or provincial superintendent. It is also of importance to the institution.

First—To the student: Because it stimulates his search after knowledge by providing definitely for recall of subject at certain time and under certain conditions. It also prompts to classification and orderly placing of subject matter, which serves to strengthen impressions during the study period. Because of looking forward to something definite in way of results, the present moment for the student is pregnant with energy and power. Further, because it gives the active mind opportunity for exercise and concentrated effort, and forces the slow, sluggish brain to action necessary for its development. The written examination gives the slower, deeper thinker and reasoner a chance to even up with his classmate of more brilliant and ready speech in the classroom. Some one has said: "A good question is the half of knowledge." If the questions are "good" and right, they give opportunity to develop logical thinking.

Second—To the teacher: Because it proves his work. In the language of a high school boy: "It shows one just about how much really sticks." I can never forget the sensation which came to me when some years ago I examined the papers of my first class in domestic science. I took up the first paper, and as I proceeded my heart began to beat faster and the perspiration started. At the end, with a feeling of despair, I laid the paper down, and said: "What have I been teaching this class, or have I taught nothing at all?" With dread I lifted the second paper. Every answer was magnificently perfect, and I can still recall the tremendous sense of relief that came to me. It tests integrity and reveals characteristics of pupils valuable for the reflection of the thoughtful teacher. It may reveal to the teacher just where his own work is strong and where it is weak. Frequently, where a teacher's knowledge is most perfect, his teaching lacks. One of our best teachers in Minnesota, a member of our state committee, said to me: "After all, Miss Emery, we gather from our subject for future use in teaching, just about what we can hang upon the ten pegs you give us in examinations."

Third.—It gives the state or provincial superintendent an equipoise in the matter of test questions for his particular field. It may prove for him the strong or weak points in text books. It serves to broaden and stimulate the mind of one who might make out examination questions from various text books covering one subject. The grading of papers from different classes shows the relative strength of the teachers in the field, and gives opportunity to strengthen and counsel the weaker ones. And let us not forget, also, the word of cheer, approval and appreciation for the strong teachers.

Methods.—From the approved list let each class select the text book of their denomination. Let the test questions be a fair test, suitable to the capacity of your students in general. Examinations, with us, are held under four classes of leadership: First, those conducted by state superintendent; second, those conducted by official examiner; third, those conducted by teacher holding certificate of graduation; fourth, those conducted by teacher holding no certificate of graduation. Certain rules apply to all four classes during examination period.

Everything in readiness. Quiet, well ventilated, well lighted room. Comfortable seats and writing tables. Paper, pencil, knife, scratch book at hand. Printed questions before each student. Seats far enough apart so that the scratching of pen or pencil will not annoy nervous ones. In our work conditions are peculiar. Classes are taught and examinations given where the teacher or examiner has never taken the teacher training course, but who must study with the class they teach. They are at the same time the most competent persons in the locality to conduct the examination which must include their own, as well as the class. In such cases we send the examination questions in a large envelope marked "Examination." They are previously instructed to open such envelope in the presence of the class, distribute the questions and write with the class. At close of examination period they are to gather papers and place in sealed package in presence of class, and forward to state superintendent. Papers are marked and graded by the state superintendent, state teacher training committee, or appointed examiner, who must be a full course graduate. In the First Standard Course we give three examinations. Until 1908 in Bible lessons, I drew the line sharply between Old and New Testament, which called for some readjustment of the order of text books. I did this to clear up the haziness between Old Testament geography and New Testament geography, which, through my own teaching, I discovered existed in the minds of most Bible students. Our first examination included Old Testament history, Jewish institutions of worship and Old Testament geography. The second included the New Testament with much more geography. The third examination included the laws of teaching and methods of work.

In the Advanced Course I have been obliged to feel my way as carefully as possible, holding students back rather than urging them forward. I have examined on nearly all of the approved text books of the course. Because of a desire to ascertain just what my people needed in the way of text books, especially in the Bible section of the Advanced Course, I have welcomed the willingness of students to try different text books, though the handling of so many has added much to my labors. The written examinations from so broad a field shows what the Sunday-school has, or has not done, in the past years, by way of storing in the mind of the pupil for definite and exact recall in the teaching process, simple Bible facts. It shows the class of teachers who can successfully handle Bible questions not included in text books.—From an address delivered by Miss Louise A. Emery at the Teacher Training Conference, Williams Bay, Wis., Aug. 27, 28, 1908.

Add Another for Pennsylvania.

In your issue of August 20, in the list of adult classes organized under the plan of the International Sunday-School Association, only four are mentioned in Pennsylvania. There should be added to this a fifth, the Young Ladies' Centennial class, Bellevue. It had members sign the charter on April 16. 1908; has now an enrollment of 45. We haye our certificate and wear the buttons belonging to the International Adult classes. To those not familiar with said button, will say it is a small round button with a white center and a red border, the white standing for purity and the red representing the blood of Christ. In this Bible school are two other organized classes, larger, but not organized under the international association.

A Great Class.

A new adult class of forty-five members is reported from Gurnee, Ill. This is a remarkable class for the community, a small village of Northern Illinois. The enrollment of such a class in so small a school emphasizes the fact that wherever you desire to have a great adult class all you need to do is to go after it, whether in city, village or country.

Adult Bible Classes in Illinois.

A special effort will be made during the coming year to get all adult classes—those whose members are 16 years of age or older—to organize according to the minimum standard of organization established by the International Sunday-School Association, and enroll with the association through its Adult Department secretary, Mr. George W. Miller, of Paris. Ill,, and receive the International Certificate of Recognition.

This department is divided into three divisions: (1) Men's classes; (2) Women's classes; (3) Mixed classes.

The class shall have the following officers: Teacher, president, vice-president, secretary and treasurer. It shall also have at least three standing committees, as follows: Membership, devotional and social. It is not required that these committees be known by these particular names, but that the class have three committees which are responsible for these three kinds of work.

The class shall consist of members who are 16 years of age or over.

This standard represents the minimum of organization rather than the maximum. In establishing it the adult department committee endeavored to consider the needs and conditions in the average Sunday-school, and to voice the practice existing throughout the international field.

Any Bible class meeting this standard, upon application to Mr. Miller and furnishing the names and addresses of class teacher and president, will receive an international certificate of recognition, on payment of 25 cents.

Our motto is: 10,000 men and 10,000 women in 1,000 classes in Illinois, which come up to this standard and are enrolled with Mr. Miller.

Bible School Rally in St. Louis.

On Bible Study day, September 27, J. H. Bryan spoke in the forenoon at the Fourth Church, St. Louis, and I spoke at the same hour at Compton Heights, at the united services of Bible school and church. In the afternoon during a rally of all the churches in St. Louis, at Compton Heights Church, at which J. H. Hardin, J. H. Bryan, Earl Wilfley and others made addresses on teacher training, the adult Bible class movement, etc., etc., there was a good attendance of representatives of all our churches in the city, but on account of the continuous rain some were not represented. During the hour following the churches indicated their purpose to enlist teacher training classes with the numbers here given:Compton Heights, 100; Clifton Heights, 40; Fourth Church, 100; First Church, 50; Hamilton Avenue, 40, with encouraging indications from other points that they will be in line. It was a happy day closing with an address at night by Bryan at Compton Heights, Hardin at night at the Fourth Church. There were many evidences of increasing interest in the minds of our St. Louis brethren on the subject of our Bible school work. During the afternoon rally the St. Louis Officers' and Teachers' Union, which I organized two years ago, was resuscitated, with every indication that it will live and thrive from this on. It will soon be unanimous in St. Louis.

J. H. Hardin, State Superintendent.

Official Board at Sunday-school.

I believe that the place to begin in this adult movement is among the elders and deacons of our congregations. It is hard to do much along any church line without the support and influence of the official board. The easiest way to reach "all the church" is, first of all, have the official board on the front bench at Bible school. When "all the church" is brought into the Sunday-school, it will be comparatively easy to reach "as many more."

Up here in Iowa we are enlisting the elders and deacons in Bible school attendance and effort. Burlington Church of Christ informs me that they have about 25 on the official board, and all are in the Bible school. Official boards of the following churches grace the Bible schools regularly: Goldfield, Clarion, Lohrville, Whiting, Norwalk, Walnut City, Prairie City, Exline, Kinross, Packwood, Brighton, Delta, Batavia and Eddyville. Fourteen in all! Not very many for our great state. If there are any others, I know them not. This is an honored list. I want to proclaim all such from the housetop. In working for the adults, let us not forget the elders and deacons. Some great churches are waking up on this, and now electing to official position only those who are enthusiastic Bible school men. The Bible school is the teaching service of the church, and all who are "apt to teach" should be at the post of duty.

C. L. Organ, State Supt.

Des Moines, Iowa.

C. A. Cole, minister at Abilene, Kan., reports the graduation of nine teacher training pupils on August 9. J. H. Engle, the state secretary of the international association, gave the address. Brother Cole hopes to be able to organize a large union class for the coming season.

Midweek Prayer-Meeting

By Charles Blanchard.

BEARING ONE ANOTHER'S BURDENS.

Topic October 21: Gal. 6:1-5; Rom. 15:1-3; Phil. 2:1-4.

"We that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak and not to please ourselves." Here we have the heart of the matter, stated by the great apostle. And we have his example and that of the Master whom he served with such abandon of self that he could say, without unseemly boasting: "For me to live is Christ and to die is gain." For indeed he accounted not his life dear unto himself, that he might finish his course with joy and the ministry which he had received of the Lord Jesus, to testify the gospel of the grace of God.

The logic of Paul, and that which moved him in his matchless ministry, is thus stated: "Let every one of us please his neighbor for his good to edification. For even Christ pleased not himself; but as it is written, The reproaches of them that reproached thee fell upon me." To please our neighbor for his good to edifying rules out a lot of things, pleasant and otherwise. To "edify" is to build up. Sometimes it requires a good deal of tact to please our neighbor while at the same time we are endeavoring to build him up in righteousness and Christian faith and character. It is a wonderful gift to be able to please without forgetting the things that profit and that make for abiding peace and real enrichment in life and service.

Among the hardest burdens which we have to bear are the "faults" of others. I suppose we all have enough of our own; but this fact does not make it any easier to bear with the mistakes of others. Our own sins and shortcomings ought to make us patient with others—but ordinarily they do not. We are frequently the more impatient of the very faults in others which we ourselves are guilty of. We confess it humbly; but that does not help matters. The apostle recognized this in saying "Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye that are spiritual, restore such an one in the spirit of meekness, considering thyself lest thou also be tempted." Perhaps most of our impatience comes of thinking of ourselves more highly than we ought to think. Sometimes we may really not think as highly of ourselves as we should, and so fail of the possibilities of the best that is in us. It is a great thing to see ourselves and our neighbors at the best. The rarest trait of the love that never faileth is in this ability to see the best and brightest in those about us, while keeping ourselves at our best.

To bear one another's burdens is to fulfill the law of Christ. And this is done in fulfilling the royal law—in loving our neighbor as ourself. Yet, that every man shall bear his own burden is the rule of service. Christ bore his own cross, and only when he could no longer carry it was it laid on Simon the Cyrenean. But while bearing his own cross, he "suffered without the gate, bearing our reproaches." So should we also go without the gate, suffering, if need be, for the sake of others, while bravely bearing our own burden.

"Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others." We are to "do our own business," but not to the other fellow's undoing. This is Christian socialism—better called service. For all true socialism is found and exemplified in mutual service for each other's good.

Ministerial Exchange.

Two churches conveniently located needing a minister who is an excellent Sunday-school worker, address, Minister, R. R. No. 1, Shaw, Kan.

F. M. O'Neal and wife will be ready for further engagements October 1, as singers. Address F. M. O'Neal, 896 Turner street, Springfield, Mo.

I have December open for meetings and would be pleased to hear from any churches desiring meetings during that month.—William Thompson, evangelist, Ridgefarm, Ill. (Home address.)

I can hold a couple of meetings this fall and winter. I have many years of successful evangelistic experience.—E. W. Brickert, Martinsville, Ind.

C. L. Merrill, box 176, DeWitt, Mo., has open dates as singing evangelist for October, November and December. Terms reasonable.

I am giving my lectures on what I saw in Bible lands, illustrated by a fine double stereopticon. I am also looking for a location to preach in Oklahoma. Permanent address 915 West Grand avenue, Oklahoma City, Okla.

I am here again in Blackfoot, Idaho, investigating the land question with a view to locating a colony of our people and building a Christian church. I think it a land of opportunities, and whether or not I succeed in locating a colony and building a church, I shall buy a piece of land here on which to live when I am too old to preach. I want a singer to help me in two meetings in Northwest Missouri during October and November. Write me at Carthage, Mo., my home. I have an open date for a meeting after November.—S. J. Vance, evangelist.

I can hold a meeting for some church during this season.—J. W. Kilborn, minister-evangelist, Mt. Carmel, Ill.

I began September 20 with Victor Dorris at Chico, Cal., where Brother Lobdell is pastor. My time is taken up until January, 1908. Would like to make engagements for spring work beginning with January.—A. W. Shaffer, 643 Locust street, Walla Walla, Wash.

The Central Christian Church at Walla Walla desires to be put into correspondence with a young man with a view of engaging him as assistant pastor. He must also be a competent leader of music, and be ready to take charge of the choir. The church also desires to engage a good man to represent it as its living link evangelist in the East Washington field, under the A. C. M. S. and East Washington Society. No greater or more fruitful or pleasant field in the nation than East Washington. A good place for the right man.—S. G. Fisher.

J. Wade Seniff, singing evangelist of Pittsfield, Ill., has one or more open dates yet for meetings.

The church at Sandoval, Ill., desires to secure the services of a capable minister for full time. They can pay $600 per year and furnish parsonage.—Robert Bellamy, clerk.

Wynn Stout, Walkers, Mo., would like to correspond with churches in the states of the Middle West needing ministers.

I can make arrangements for meetings after January 1. Address me Euclid avenue, or write to our state missionary board, 311 Century building, Kansas City, Mo.—C. L. Harbord, evangelist.

H. Mahon, who has been preaching for the First Church at Indiana, Pa., for two years, is open for engagements either as evangelist or regular minister. Write him. He will go anywhere to preach the old Jerusalem gospel. M. F. Mahon, his daughter, is a fine soloist.—W. Lovelace.

In answer to the many inquiries I have received concerning my "Vision of a Christian Colony" in Southern Idaho, let me say that I am unprepared to answer until I finish my present investigations, at which time I will endeavor to answer them fully. I regard this a land of wonderful possibilities and great opportunities for the man of limited means. I am attending the county fair here this week and am well pleased with the fine exhibits of fruit, grains, vegetables and livestock. I have an open date for a meeting in January and should be pleased to correspond with churches in need of an evangelist. Address me at my home, Carthage, Mo.—S. J. Vance, evangelist.

I will have time for one meeting this winter or fall. Any church desiring my services will please address me as follows: C. H. Earenfight, 108 East Fourteenth street, Auburn, Ind.

I will be available after November 1 for evangelistic meetings. Correspondence may be addressed to T. S. Lumbeck, Dalavan, Kan.

James Sharratt, general evangelist, 2038 Penn avenue, Kansas City, Mo., will be glad to hear from churches anywhere in the states needing meetings, either with or without singer. He will make terms within the reach of all. He has October and November vacant, and will be glad to arrange dates with churches for 1909 and for tent meetings.

I would like to hold a couple of meetings this fall and winter. I have evangelized for some years and have never as yet had a failure in a meeting. The Lord has always richly blessed our efforts.—E. W. Brickert, Martinsville, Ind.

Having regained my health, I will re-enter the evangelistic field, after a vacation of more than a year. I have open dates for December, January and February. I have spent three years in the field. Mayme Eisenbarger, musical director, Bethany, Mo.

Churches or evangelists wishing to secure an experienced song leader, soloist, both vocal and on the trombone, and personal worker for November or December, address A. L. Haley, Butler, Ind.

ALLINGHAM.

Mrs. Margaret Jane Allingham, born near Monmouth, Ill., December 7, 1835, died in Halsey, Ore., August 14, 1908. She moved to Halsey in 1852, and the following year was united in marriage to David W. Allingham, a union lasting 55 years. She leaves her husband, over 80 years of age, and eight children, one sister and many friends. Hers was an every-day kind of heroism. If ever there was a Christian woman that had a loving heart, a sweet spirit, a patient nature and charming manner, it was Sister Allingham. Christlike qualities of service and sacrifice were enshrined in her life. W. T. Matlock conducted the services to her memory, assisted by the writer.—C. R. Moore.

BURROWS.

At Crestline, Kan., J. R. Burrows, died August 25, 1908, aged 70 years and 11 months.

T. G. Hicks.

GREENWELL.

H. D. Greenwell was born in Kentucky June 4, 1845; was married to Ellen Mobley, January 28, 1869, and died near Mt. Sterling, Ill., September 13, 1908. His wife and three children survive him. He was baptized in his early manhood and has been an active Christian. He has been a reader of The Christian-Evangelist from its beginning. Brother Greenwell was a man "of honest report, full of the holy spirit and wisdom." A loving husband, an indulgent parent, an accommodating neighbor, an upright citizen, and a generous supporter of the Church of Christ. He rests now from his labors. His active life came to an abrupt end, as he was sick only a few hours. May God comfort the family. He was my friend and as such I lay this flower upon his grave.

T. W. Cottingham.

FRAZIER.

One of our noblest spirits has entered into rest. Dora C. Durham was born in Clay county, Illinois, March 23, 1846. Losing her father at the age of two years the family moved to Vermont, Ill., thence in her young womanhood to Abingdon, where she attended college, along with such men as J. H. Garrison, J. H. Smart, J. M. Morris, T. H. Goodnight and J. T. Toof. She carried with her through life the splendid culture which a truly Christian college gives. On October 23, 1867, she was married to T. L. Frazier. They became the parents of three children, one of whom, Arlington, died in infancy; the daughter is Mrs. C. L. Whitnah, Los Angeles, Cal.; the son Mr. C. W. Frazier, a lawyer of Peoria. Both children are devoted Christians. Her brothers are Judge Durham, of Irvington, Cal., and S. W. Durham, of Long Beach, Cal.; and half brother, D. E. Hughes, our minister at Monmouth, Ill. Sister Frazier obeyed the gospel at the age of 14 under the ministry of Elder Grissom. She lived in most active service for the Master, was interested and helpful in all departments of church work. She was a noble pattern and example of spiritual purity, devotion and consecration. Her evening time of six years of affliction was a holy inspiration. As her last evening shadows gathered she hummed,

"Jesus lover of my soul,
Let me to thy bosom fly," and said, "Good-by, the Lord will take care of me." She fell asleep September, 1908.

Canton, Ill. J. G. Waggoner.

McCAULEY.

Mrs. Georgia Kuntz McCauley was born October 9, 1881, at Strasburg, Va. After a lingering illness of more than six months she passed to her reward August 26, 1908. One child preceded her to the better land and one is left to the tender care of a loving father. Sister McCauley was a faithful member of the Christian Church here and will be greatly missed, both in the home and religious circles. Funeral services by the writer, assisted by Brother Stickley, August 29.

Carnegie, Pa. Norman W. Philips.

MOORE.

Mrs. Susan D. Medley Moore fell asleep August 4, 1908, at Kirksville, Mo. She was born in Roanoke, Va., January 6, 1836, and married to Harvey Moore September, 1858. The following year they moved to Polk county, Mo., later to Macon county; then in 1882 to Kirksville, where they have since resided. To them three children were born—William, who was killed in a railroad accident some twenty years ago; Miss Emma, of Kirksville, and Eugene, of Colorado Springs, who is trainmaster for the Santa Fe railroad. She was a faithful member of the Christian Church, and her delight was in the services of the sanctuary until debarred by feeble health. She remembered her Creator in the days of her youth, and adorned her life with the Christian graces. Gentleness and charity ever marked her Christian way, and her presence was a sweet benediction among her people. Let us mourn not as those who have no hope, for she has only gone before to possess the place prepared for her. The funeral services were held at the family residence, conducted by Mrs. Wickizer. Nannie A. Hogue.

PUGH.

At the home of her parents, near Lahoma, Okla., on August 29, 1908, Selma B. Pugh, aged 3 years. Funeral services were conducted by the writer. A large number of friends followed the remains.—W. S. Rehorn, Enid.

RAGAN.

Mary A. Self was born near Lexington, Ky., June 9, 1821, and entered into rest September 22, 1908, at the home of her son-in-law and daughter, William and Mary E. Elliott, of Virginia, Ill. At the age of 18 she was married to William Ragan at Jacksonville, Ill. Shortly after her marriage she united with the Christian Church and throughout her whole life has adorned the gospel of Christ. The remains were laid to rest at Virginia, Ill., in the presence of a great number of friends and relatives.

Virginia, Ill. Ben N. Mitchell.

RAMY.

Died at her home in Salida, Colo., September 21, 1908, our dear old Sister Mary Mildred Ramy, aged 65 years, 4 months and 8 days. She was the wife of one of our pioneer preachers, T. W. Ramy, who died in Salida several years ago. She has been a great sufferer, but bore it so patiently. She leaves eight children—five sons and three daughters—two sisters and three brothers, besides a host of friends, to mourn her death. The funeral services were held at the church in Salida, where she had worshiped so long. The services were largely attended. May her godly life be as a divine benediction and her mantle of love fall with a double portion on those she leaves behind.

Salida, Colo. W. B. Crewdson.

WALK.

David Walk, well known as a minister of our brotherhood, fell asleep Tuesday, September 15, 1908. For some time he had ben troubled with the affliction that took him away, but only recently had it rendered him inactive. Bright's disease was reported as the immediate cause of his demise. About a year ago our brother came from Chicago with the family of his son, Charles, and their advent in Kokomo was sad indeed. They brought with them for burial his little grandson and namesake, David Walk, Jr., who had been run over by a street car. The family then located in the town of Galveston, about seven miles from Kokomo. Brother Walk had ceased preaching and was selling a work on the Bible and met with good success in the undertaking. A short time since our brother was visiting in Indianapolis among old friends, where he was for a time pastor of the Central Christian Church. Recently that church celebrated its seventy-fifth anniversary and Brother Walk spoke on that occasion. Shortly after he was compelled to go to the hospital and there he heard the summons. He passed away at the home in Galveston. He was pastor of the Main Street Christian Church, Kokomo, Ind., from 1891 to 1894. Many of his former friends and parishioners made the journey to pay a last tribute of respect to one who had loved to preach plainly and forcefully and logically the doctrines of the abiding word. On Thursday, September 17, occurred the last rites for the departed. In a strange town, where we had no church, but were kindly donated the use of the Methodist Episcopal church, the writer conducted the service. The interment was in the beautiful cemetery at Galveston. It seemed to add to our sadness that the burial was in a community where his voice was never heard ringing out the sweetest message ever told. The "Old Guard" remember Brother Walk as laboring with them, when all of them were in the vigor and prime of life and eloquently pleading a return to apostolic doctrine and practice. On December 9, next, Brother Walk would have reached his seventy-fifth year. His devotion to the cause he espoused, his appreciation of the truth, his loyalty to Christ, fillled the soul of the man to overflowing, and bursting its temporal confines that soul went to receive the crown of life and to the realm where was room for infinite growth. So we laid him to rest, the grand veteran of a holy and eternal cause. Few are left for us to compliment and honor. Shall not we who have received the results and inheritance of their labors, cheer the hearts of these surviving veterans by saying that there shall be no faltering, no compromise, no questionable pact of peace, now that our standing among all religious bodies demonstrates the strength of the glorious old plea. Sister Walk, I am sure, will have the deepest sympathy of all who knew her and her beloved husband.

Only a Cent.

Uncle Harris was a carpenter, and had a shop in the country. One day he went into the barn, where Dick and Joe were playing with two tame pigeons.

"Boys," he said, "my workshop ought to be swept up every morning. Which of you will undertake to do it?" I am willing to pay a cent for each sweeping."

"Only a cent?" said Dick. "Who would work for a cent?"

"I will," said Joe.

So every day, when Uncle Harris was done working in the shop, Joe would take an old broom and sweep it.

One day Uncle Harris took Dick and Joe to town. While he went to buy some lumber, they went to a toy store.

"What fine kites!" said Dick. "I wish that I could buy one."

"Only ten cents," said the man.

"I haven't a cent," said Dick.

"I have fifty cents," said Joe.

"How did you get fifty cents?" said Dick.

"By sweeping the shop," answered Joe. —Sunday Afternoon.

"Do you play any instrument, Mr. Jimp?"

"Yes, I'm a cornetist."

"And your sister?"

"She's a pianist."

"Does your mother play?"

"She's a zitherist."

"And your father?"

"He's a pessimist."—Tit-Bits.

The Easy-Chair.

We once heard of a dear old saint, living all alone in a humble cottage in an out of the way place, some distance from the busy town, with very few neighbors about her, and they quite poor.

She was too feeble to work, but God had put it into the hearts of some of His children to look after her and minister to her necessities, that she did not come to want. Her stopping place (for it could hardly be called a home) was scantily furnished; a bed, a chair, a table, a stool, a cupboard, and a stove were all she had.

Upon being asked, "Do you never murmur at your lot?" she replied: "Satan does tempt me to murmur sometimes when things are bare."

"And what do you do then?"

"Why, I just ask the Lord to put me in the easy-chair to keep me quiet."

Her visitor looked about in vain for anything like an easy-chair. "I don't think I quite understand you."

"No, you don't see it," she said; "but it is always close by, and when He sets me in it I just rest and say to Satan: 'Now you be quiet.' My easy-chair is Romans viii. 28: 'And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to His purpose.'"

The visitor learned a lesson from the dear old lady, and many times since has tried the easy-chair and found it a great comfort. Reader, have you this easy-chair in your home as a part of your furniture? —Word and Work.

Effect Of Cigarette Smoking.

"You smoke thirty cigarettes a day?"

"Yes, on the average."

"You don't blame them for your run-down condition."

"Not in the least. I blame my hard work."

The physician shook his head. He smiled in a vexed way. Then he took a leech out of a glass jar.

"Let me show you something," he said. "Bare your arm."

The cigarette smoker bared his pale arm, and the other laid the lean, black leech upon it. The leech fell to work busily. Its body began to swell. Then all of a sudden a kind of shudder convulsed it, and it fell to the floor dead.

"That is what your blood did to that leech" said the physician. He took up the little corpse between his finger and thumb. "Look at it," he said. "Quite dead, you see. You poisoned it."

"I guess it wasn't a healthy leech in the first place," said the cigarette smoker, sullenly.

"Wasn't healthy, eh? Well, we'll try again."

And the physician clapped two leeches on the young man's thin arm.

"If they both die," said the patient, "I'll swear off—or, at least, I'll cut down my daily allowance from thirty to ten."

Even as he spoke the smaller leech shivered and dropped on his knee dead, and a moment later the larger one fell beside it.

"This is ghastly," said the young man; "I am worse than the pestilence to these leeches."

"It is the empyreumatic oil in your blood," said the medical man. "All cigarette smokers have it."

"Doctor," said the young man, regarding the three dead leeches thoughtfully, "I half believe you're right."—New Zealand Outlook.

A Real Surprise Party.

"Where are you goin', ma?" asked the youngest of the five children.

"I'm going to a surprise party, my dear," answered the mother.

"Are we all goin', too?"

"No, dear. You weren't invited."

"Say, ma, then don't you think they'd be lots more surprised if you did take us all?"—Everybody's Magazine.

Be Strong.

Stand to your work and be strong,
Halting not in your ways;
Stand to your work and be wise,
Certain of sword and pain.

But men in a world of men.

About Children's Clothes.

It does not always follow that the well-dressed children have an unusual amount of money spent upon their clothes, for if the mother has learned the art of making their clothes, and of making good use of old material, she can keep them prettily and even stylishly dressed on a very small income. When making a new dress for a small girl it is best to make the waist, skirt and sleeves several inches longer than necessary, then the belt can be set up on the waist, a wide tuck can be taken underneath the trimming on the sleeves and in the hem of the skirt before it is turned down, and these allowances can be let out as required. When the small girl has outgrown her dress and you would like to make it do duty for another season, cut the skirt apart and insert a two or three inch piece of some material to suit the goods, then put in a vest back and front and make cuffs of the same material. A little dress altered in this way did not have the appearance at all of being pieced out, and it was prettier than when new. Some little percal dresses that were still good but outgrown and faded, were pieced out to make them large enough, then they were boiled in strong suds to remove the remaining color and then boiled in a strong solution of dark blue diamond dye for cotton, and they were as serviceable as new dresses; some boy's faded waists were renewed in the same way. It is a praiseworthy economy to reuse an article so long as it can be made serviceable, and children never object to wearing old garments made over if they are made up pretty and stylish. In nearly every home there are partly worn dresses or other garments hanging in closests or wardrobes that could be made into beautiful little dresses, jackets or waists, and the mother shows her good sense, industry and economy in fashioning these dainty little garments. The old material is put to good use and the children will be happier and better for being prettily and becomingly dressed.

666---The Number of the Beast

By Esma G. Denby

A Temperance Story.

The crash had come at last. The firm of Randolph & Fryar had gone to the wall. But it had been an honest failure. Dollar for dollar had been paid and not a creditor had suffered.

What caused the failure? Only a few asked the question. The people in general knew that the distillery at 666 Lucas street had forced Randolph & Fryar into bankruptcy.

How and why had it been done? It was the election year; and it was also, as we all remember, the year of the great financial panic. A mighty wave of anti-saloon sentiment had swept over the city. The battle had been a fiercely fought one, and both Randolph and Fryar had thrown themselves into the thickest of the fight. They had thus incurred the displeasure and suffered the vengeance of the saloon men.

For seven years the firm had done a thriving grocery business in the lower east end of the city. This was the portion of the city populated by the poorer class of people who, for the most part, dwelt in small, mean houses which they rented from the same corporation that owned and operated the distillery.

"One month's rent free to every man of family who for six months will not patronize Randolph & Fryar." The distillery men had passed the word among their tenants. One month of free rent meant a great deal to most of the men. They were poor, and they failed to realize how much poorer the drink was making them.

The distillery company could well afford to donate one month's rent to its tenants if by so doing it could crush Randolph & Fryar— and silence them. Besides, it had recently established a grocery in opposition to the business of its too enthusiastic neighbors, and to this its tenants were invited to transfer their custom. The greater part of the renters accepted the invitation with alacrity. A few of them did not. They remembered sickness and "hard times" when Randolph & Fryar tided them over anxious crises. It had always been the policy of the firm to extend credit to the worthy poor whom they knew to be in adverse circumstances. And it was comparatively seldom that their trust had been betrayed.

The grocery establishment of the distillers also had its "credit system." They made great promises of "leniency to those in straitened circumstances because of the recent financial stringency." But they took care that the store should 'pay" in all respects, also that it should make up for the deficit in the rent income caused by the donation of one month's rent.

So what with their loss of custom, the financial stringency, and the refusal of all the banks to make loans it would have taken a strong firm indeed to rise out of the circumstances in which Randolph & Fryar found themselves involved. But they had not one word to retract; they had no apology to make to the men whose nefarious business they had assailed.

It was little more than a week after the failure had become generally known that both men were offered positions, at good salaries, with a leading wholesale company in the city. Randolph accepted; Fryar did not. Since the failure he had been doing some serious thinking. Just in the dawn of manhood he had felt himself called to the gospel ministry. But he quenched the Spirit. Though he had refused to yield to the call, he had even been a strictly moral man, a nominal Christian. He had been a generous contributor to various benevolences and an earnest worker for the temperance cause. But he had been humbled by his failure, as so many of us are by a great sorrow or affliction, and led nearer to the pitying All-Father.

On the very night before the offer had come from the wholesale firm Fryar had bowed on contrite knees and dedicated his life to the work he had so long refused. The next morning the offer came as a subtle and strong temptation. But he resisted it; he overcame.

One month from the day of the failure he preached his first sermon in the pulpit of an old collegemate. In another month he was in charge of his first pastorate, a little church among the lumber camps in the mountainous section of our own country.

The saloon men won the election in Bennington. The business at 666 Lucas street flourished apace, and the opponents of temperance flaunted their victory in the face of the defeated and were more insolent than before. But those over whom they so insolently triumphed were not in despair. So close had the contest been that the victory had been decided by but three votes. The years that would elapse before the next election, those enlisted on the side of righteousness told themselves, were years in which to work and hope and pray. Then the victory would be theirs, and permanently.

Allen Fryar had been shepherd over his little flock in the mountains for five years, when one day he received the following letter from his former collegemate:

"My Dear Fryar: The battle is on again in Bennington. We need in this campaign men who are fearless and bold in the cause of righteousness. Such a man you have proved yourself to be. Can you not come to help us? All the arguments that it has so long been the custom to use against this evil have become trite here. The people are no longer interested in them. Can you not, out of your new life and your new experience, bring us some new thought?

"Yours in the Master's service,
"James Randolph."

He read the letter through slowly. Something new! What was there new that could be said on the subject in Bennington? Had not every possible argument been used there, every possible sacrifice been made?

He tossed the letter aside impatiently, and taking up his Bible began to read. By chance—or shall we say by special providence?—his Bible opened itself at the thirteenth chapter of Revelation. He read the chapter to the close and shut the book. Then a sudden thought flashed into his mind. "And his number is six hundred, three score, and six." "The number of the beast in Bennington!" he exclaimed. "Seven heads and ten horns! I should say it has, and more. I'll tell Jim I'll come." And he went to his desk for pen and paper. It was an unusually warm morning in midsummer, but the congregation at St. Paul's M. E. Church in Bennington was more alert than was its wont on such a sultry morning. An air of suppressed excitement pervaded the building and vibrated like an electric current from pew to pew, so that the later comers were affected as much as the earlier. There was a strange minister in the pulpit. But this was not what caused the excitement. There was something stranger still—and that was in the pulpit, too.

In front of the minister and slightly to his left was an easel blackboard on which appeared a very curious picture. It was the picture of an animal, but it was one that had never been seen inside the covers of a natural history or any known country. A few in the congregation thought the beast represented one of the monsters of Grecian or Egyptian mythology. But in this they were mistaken.

"I wonder where he left the rest of his menagerie," whispered mischievous Ralph Ellis to the young girl sitting beside him.

"Hush," she whispered back reverently. "I believe it is one of the beasts of Revelation."

Several children were seen to cling fearfully to their mothers' skirts, and one little miss whispered loud enough to be heard halfway to the pulpit, "Mother, let's not go up front, I'm scared. It's uglier than the hippopotamus down at the zoo."

Allen Fryar, previous to entering the mercantile business, had been a cartoonist on the staff of a prominent Eastern daily, and his pencil had won him no inconsiderable notoriety. But for twelve years that pencil had lain idle, until that night when his friend's letter came. Then when that sudden inspiration came all the old cunning seemed to flash back into his fingers, and he had drawn the beast that so excited this congregation.

After the hymn and the prayer Fryar rose in the pulpit and read in clear, full voice: "And I stood upon the sand of the sea, and saw a beast rise up out of the sea, having seven heads and ten horns, and upon his horns ten crowns, and upon his heads the name of blasphemy. And the beast which I saw was very like unto a leopard, and his feet were as the feet of a bear, and his mouth as the mouth of a lion; and the dragon gave him his power, and great authority."

Pretty Dora Norton looked up at Ralph Ellis and smiled. The beast was from the Revelation. It had seven heads and ten horns; she had counted.

The minister read on; he was finishing the seventh verse, "and power was given him over the kindreds, and tongues and nations."

Excitement still swayed the congregation. Was this noble-looking minister a fanatic? What practical lesson could he draw from this strange chapter that would apply to the daily lives of modern Christians?

But Allen, unheeding the hundreds of curious eyes upon him, read on. "And he causeth all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, to receive a mark in their right hand, or in their foreheads: and that no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name. Here is wisdom. Let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast: for it is the number of a man; and his number is six hundred, threescore and six."

He closed the Bible, and stepping to the blackboard began, "I have used the beast here described as a type of the liquor traffic. My text is the latter clause of the last verse, 'And his number is six hundred, threescore and six.' This beast, whose power and seat and authority are given him by the dragon, yea, by the devil himself, this beast whose power is over all kindreds and tongues and nations, whose number is six hundred, sixty-six [Fryar spoke the number with deep emphasis], rules to-day over the fair city of Bennington."

People leaned forward in their seats, and the silence grew tense. This minister, youthful as he was, was daring to beard the lion in his den.

But I can not here give all of that memorable sermon. It will serve my purpose if I quote from it only a few of the most striking passages.

"You will note that on each of the seven heads I have written a name. They are the names of seven classes of people responsible for this iniquitous traffic. I have written there not only the names of the distiller, the barkeeper, and the drunkard, but also those of the politician, the voter, the social leader, and the Christian. Yes, the Christian, the man who claims to be enlisted under the banner of Jehovah, and who, through idleness or cowardice, refuses to join in battle against this beast. The society leader who gathers young men and women around her table and places in their hands the sparkling cut-glass goblet filled with this enchanting and exhilarating poison is more responsible to God for the rum wrecked souls going out into eternity than are the keepers of the lowest dives in our city. You shudder and look at me aghast. Why have I said this? Because men do not go to these low dens till their souls are already steeped in sin. Man will not engage in a vice while it appears hideous to him. If you would teach a man to sin, you must make that sin appear inviting; it must be attractive to him. The devil knows this.

"On the horns of the beast I have written the names of ten evils arising from this traffic. They are these: poverty, disease, suicide, prostitution, divorce, insanity, idiocy, crime, death, hereditary alcoholism. We are told that fifty per cent of pauperism, twenty per cent of all disease, are caused by alcoholic drinks. An eminent physician investigating fifty-seven cases of suicide found twenty caused by drink—a little more than thirty-five per cent. More than fifty per cent of unchastity, a large per cent of divorce are caused by this beast, whose power and seat and authority are given him by the dragon. A congressman investigating 527 cases of wife-beating in his district found 520 caused by drink. Statisticians tell us that thirty-five per cent of idiocy, fifty per cent of insanity are due to alcoholic drinks. Different authorities estimate drink as causing from fifty to ninety per cent of all crime. We are told that drink gives us seven thousand murders yearly; that fifty per cent of railroad accidents, steamboat, trolley car and automobile disasters are due to the mistakes and mental confusion of drinkers; that ten per cent of all deaths are due to drink, or that this seven-headed, ten-horned monster is slaying one man in every four minutes.

"'And he causeth all . . . to receive a mark in their right hand, or their foreheads.' All the servants of the beast bear his mark. How easy it is to distinguish the drunkard. His hand has lost its strength and skill. No employer who wants a skilled workman will employ him. The mark of the beast is on his right hand. He has lost his power to think clearly. He is of no value to the world as a thinker. The mark of the beast is set in his forehead. My brothers, shall this beast destroy your homes and devour your sons and daughters, or will you arise and girding on all the armor of Christ unite your strength in putting the monster from your midst?"

About a month later the following paragraph appeared in the Bennington Herald:

THE MONSTER SLAIN.

THE SEVEN-HEADED BEAST RULES NO MORE.

"There is great rejoicing to-day among the champions of temperance. Yesterday for the first time in its history Bennington voted "dry." The victory was won under the leadership of Allen Fryar, a young minister from the home mission field; and we believe the happy result of the election is largely due to his efforts. He has the sincere gratitude of our citizens, and is returning to his work followed by the prayers of the many friends he has made during his stay among us."—The Cumberland Presbyterian.

Bad Breath and Sour Stomach

Stopped At Once With Pure Willow Charcoal, the Greatest Gas Absorber Known.

There is no necessity to suffer the humiliation, chagrin and discomfort of bad breath, biliousness, sour stomach, gastritis, sluggish liver, etc., when a little lozenge of charcoal will cleanse the stomach and make it pure and sweet.

Do not drug yourself when a simple little natural charcoal made from fragrant willow branches, sweetened with honey, will add tone to your stomach, liver and intestines, rapidly absorb gas and stop foul odors of all kinds.

Charcoal will absorb one hundred times its own volume in gas. A box full of charcoal placed in a bedroom will keep the air of such a room pure and sweet.

A little charcoal lozenge dissolved on the tongue after meals will also keep the stomach fresh and clean. Charcoal is justly called the scrubbing brush for the stomach. The old monks of medieval times cured bad cases of stomach trouble, cast out devils from the system of man by feeding such a man charcoal.

Scientific men of to-day believe in the great strength of charcoal for the cure of human ills. Too much of it can not harm one. The system craves it just like an animal needs and craves salt every so often. Charcoal goes into the stomach gently and is welcome; it settles down through the action of the stomach, and filters through all the food, absorbing gas, aiding digestion and giving tone to the juices, so that when the food goes into the intestines, and there meets other digestive fluids, the charcoal holds the impurities and thus keeps them from the blood.

Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges are made from pure willow. They are prepared fragrant by the use of honey and sweetened so they please the taste and are easily dissolved.

They have an enormous sale, thus stamping them with the approval of the public. Every druggist sells them, 25 cents per box. Go to your druggist to-day and buy a box; then after your next meal take two or three of them and judge for yourself of their merit.

Several taken at bed time will prove to you in the morning that they have been at work all night, for your bad breath will not be so bad after all.

Advance Society Letters.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

I have changed my mind (a right I reserve for any moment), and, instead of devoting the page this week to letters from Kansas, I will give you news from about fifteen different states, in their contribution to Drusie's shower. You will observe that we have here several new states. But before we enter into the downpour, and while you are getting your umbrellas raised or borrowed, sit with me on the porch with Felix, and we will read Charlie's account of his vacation. I am obliged to condense our orphan's account of his trip, for people who send me money must have their gifts printed, and we must not keep them waiting too long.

Orphan Charlie, St. Louis: "My vacation is over and I am back at school, studying hard. You ask for an account of my trip. First, I had the usual excitement of hurrying to catch the train. It generally takes about an hour to get from here to the depot, purchase the ticket, and get information, etc. I was bustling around to get the train, when an agent for an artificial limb company stopped me, and handed me his card. I assured him I didn't want to buy a limb at present,—that I was in a hurry to catch the train; but he continued to talk, and I had to just go on, and leave him talking. I don't know how long he stood there, but he wasn't there when I came back from my vacation. When I got on the train all seats were occupied except some in the smoker, and all the way from St. Louis to Springfield I heard nothing but politics. The train was an hour-and-a-half late, and that put me in Carthage at about midnight. While I was gone to get my baggage, the hack pulled out and left me. There was no one there to meet me, and I didn't know what to do.

"The depot is about three times as far from town as the one at Bentonville, so I couldn't walk there, carrying my suit case in the dark. I lay down on one of the seats, but there were iron bars that made those seats very uncomfortable, unless you sit in them. It was a little risky, sleeping in a depot, but I just couldn't help it, for I was almost worn out with the long journey. For about four hours, there I lay, listening to a man snore, and fighting mosquitoes. The hack came down to meet the 3:43 train, and this time, you may be sure, I was ready to take it. There were three young ladies already inside, and as I was bashful, I rode on the box with the driver. At the hotel, the clerk was asleep, and we had to knock till I fear we roused most everybody in that house. But at last I got a room for the rest of the night. If I were writing a novel, this would be the end of this chapter." (And if it were a novel, you wouldn't have ridden on the box.)

"After breakfast I telephoned out to Mrs. Henslee (the lady with whom my sister is staying) and she brought her buggy for me. We had managed to keep my coming secret from Bessie, and you may be sure she was surprised and glad to see me. She has grown a good deal, and so have I. I enjoyed every day with Bessie, and was sorry when the time came to go—August 18, my 17th birthday. I spent a few days in Carthage with the friend who helped to find me a home after my mother's death. Her name is Mrs. Clara C. Orr. She and Mr. A. Hughes, of Wichita, Kans., are the ones who found me this home in St. Louis—for which I am very thankful. While at Carthage I visited my mother's grave. Some day, when I get to earning money for myself, I intend to erect a small monument over her grave." (The remainder of Charlie's account will follow in our next. Whenever that monument is erected, I want the privilege of helping, be it ever so little.)

Mrs. W. H. C. Wood, Cordell, Okla.: "I have always heard that late dampness is beneficial, so I send a few drops to swell the heavy dews now prevailing. We have a small society here called the Willing Workers. I told them the story of Drusie and Charlie and yourself. All made a contribution; 30 cents is from three little boys for Charlie." (Speaking of Cordell,—there are two young people at college there, whose mother, Mrs. W. D. Hockaday, of Granite, Okla., sends $1 for Drusie's shower.)

Manie Bayless, Mulkeytown, Ill.: "I wish I could send more than this—20 cents—for Drusie's shower. I am very glad so many are responding. I am, as in the past, always anxious to read the Av. S. page; never miss a number. God bless Drusie, Charlie, and all friends of the Av. S."

Mrs. L. H. Richardson, Havensville, Kans.: "I am glad I proposed the 10-cent shower for Drusie. You mustn't think that your hint, when you asked, 'What's the matter with Kansas?' stirred us up; for we were intending to come in on the home stretch, anyway. I have been very sick for seven months, and unable to do much, but here is a little shower, with names below." The names follow, and are duly recorded. I note that three boys, Evan, Lair and Earl, give 10 cents each, while Mr. and Mrs. Richardson contribute 65 cents to make the amount an even $2. All this was sent August 10th. Before I left Mulkeytown, Ill., I should have stated that I have received the 2nd quarterly report of Ada Rogers from that town of the interesting name.

Speaking of towns with interesting names, can any be more poetic than that of Very Coryell, who sends 10 cents from Arkansas City, Kansas?

I am in a hurry to get out of Kansas, but must note that Alma and Anna Mountjoy, of Columbus, send four dimes for Drusie's shower; that they "are not members of the Av. S., but enjoy reading the letters," and that they would like to hear oftener from Lean Beamer. "She is our old friend, but doesn't write to us very often," they say. The reader may remember that it is Lena Beamer who has a cat named Tinker Bell that catches so many rats that the race is about to be extinct at Smithfield, Mo.

Mrs. Fred Grimes, Cripple Creek, Colo.: "I enjoy reading the Av. S. letters very much, though not a member, and inclose 10 cents for Drusie's shower."

A Friend, Buffalo, N. Y.: "I have always enjoyed reading the Av. S. letters, and want to add a few drops—25 cents—to that shower for Drusie. You will agree that it is better late than never."

A Friend, Tucson, Ariz.: "20 cents for Drusie, the dear little missionary."

Kalona, Ia. Edith isn't old enough to read, but her first quarterly report is splendid. Here is what her mother has to say about it: "Of course our little girl is not able to read for herself, yet, but she listens to the history and poetry, and we talk about the reading. I read the Scripture, and she repeats the words after me. The quotations, she memorizes. She is very proud of the work" (and we are very proud of her.) "We began having lessons at home, September 7th. It seemed unwise to send her to school just yet. We enjoy 'playing school,' and she is learning fast. We are greatly interested in the news about Charlie. We rejoice to hear the continued patter of raindrops for Drusie. May many others be moved by the Spirit to add their contributions."

Also, here is a note printed by Edith's own independent hand—"Dear Mr. Ellis. I have three cats. One is yellow." Who can estimate the future usefulness and culture of a girl that starts so early, with so wise a mother to train her? And who knows but what that yellow cat may one day rival Felix in fame and wisdom?

Mrs. Dan Dick sends $1 for the shower from Fairbury, Nebr., and Mrs. G. W. Ellenburger, of Peru, Nebr., sends 10 drops.

Mrs. Laura B. Ballenger, Los Angeles, Calif.: "We had intended sending our mite for Drusie's shower sooner, but did not get to do it. But as it's well to have a sprinkle after the good shower is past. we send it now. Our family of five, my husband, myself, Louis, Inith and Donovan (age two years) send a dime each. I mean to send Drusie a serge dress if you have not already done so: if you have, there are many other things I can send that would be pleasant and useful. Best wishes to all the Av. S., also Felix." (I don't know whether that dress goods I sent Drusie was serge, or nun's-veiling, I am not very strong on these technicalities. Anyway, what she needs most is something to wear in cold weather. Drusie hadn't moved to her present permanent address when I sent that drygoods, so I'm rather afraid it was lost or reached somebody else. I am expecting to hear from her about it. I sent her $15 last month, and $13 this month. I stopped to ask my mother about that package I sent Drusie, and she says it was serge, it was not nun's-veiling. Mrs. Ballenger sends me a beautiful picture-card of the First Christian Church at Los Angeles; also San Gabriel Mission, So. California.)

Miss C. T. Lemley, Salt Lake City.: "I see in looking over the contributions for 'Drusie's Shower' that Utah is not represented. This will never do, so here is $1 from the employes at 108 Main St., given cheerfully to help on the good work for the Master." (From the letter head, I find that this is sent from the Franklin Caterers Co., where they have ice cream. soda, and candies, as well as dollars for missionaries.)

Emma F. S. Kelso, White Cloud, Mich.: "My name is Emma Frances. I am fifty years old. I like the letters and the stories of the Av. S. very much. I want to make it rain more dollars in Arkansas for Drusie; enclosed find $2 to help support her in China. May the Lord help and bless her in every way, is my prayer."

Mrs. A. B. Brown, of Portland, Ore., sends a picture-card of the lighthouse at Tillamook Rock near Seaside, Ore. A lonely and picturesque spot it appears, in which I would like to locate a hero of a story, and make him there do valiant service in my place. Mrs. Brown says: "I sent some drops for Drusie's shower, but as we had a heavy rain the same day (August 12th), my drops must have kept in Oregon." Perhaps they were evaporated in the fierce glare of that light house; or perhaps the letter containing them is still to be printed?

Mary S. Hord, Grayson, Mo.: "Last Sunday a Sunday-school pupil, Grace Bland, gave me a dime to send to the shower. I put it with another to send today, but they looked so lonesome, I began soliciting, and got dimes from J. T. Wingate, Mesdames M. L. Hord, I. B Baker, Con Grayson, also a dime from Anna B. Hord. Here comes Mrs. Jeff Baker with 50 cents." (Well, whatever you do, don't stop her!) 'August is past; but these belated drops ($1.20) will wash off the dust, and freshen up things a little" (interest in our missionary, for instance). "Many good wishes for the Av. S." Mary S. Hord's letterhead reads, "Christian Woman's Board of Missions in Missouri." Yes, she's the one whose name you see so often connected with C. W. B. M. affairs.

Mrs. Mary Cunningham, of Bentonville, Ark., hands me 25 cents for the shower, just on the eve of her departure for the winter in Kansas. She is going there on account of friends, and as you can very well understand, not on account of weather. Here comes a long-distance dime from Mary Kildare, Burden, N. H. To the time of writing, thirty-seven states have contributed to make Drusie's shower a success. When the last contribution has been printed, we will announce the grand total of raindrops. I wish we could sent our missionary $15 every month.

Another Warning.

One would suppose that recent experiences in the stock exchange would make the small investor exceedingly careful how he plays at the "get-rich-quick" game. It is usually the men of limited means who are the largest losers in the stock manipulations, but especially are they the ones who suffer when there is any great failure of a large brokerage company. Only a few weeks ago there was a New York concern that played hocus-pocus with the market, ruining its own members and thousands of small investors. Then comes a prominent concern in Chicago which, when called upon for assets of its million and a quarter capitalization, could show nothing but a lot of worthless securities. "Easy come and easy go" seems to be the motto of many of these people. At least it is "easy go" often when the money is not their own.

Dealing with the Idle.

Any plan that will force the idle negro to do his share of the world's work is worth heeding. Hence, one turns with interest to what Charlotte Perkins Gilman has to say in the "American Journal of Sociology." Her suggestion is that the whole body of our negro population that is in a degenerate condition shall be organized into a great industrial army controlled by the state and under strict military discipline. According to her idea this army should have uniforms, decorations, titles, ceremonies, and a careful system of grading membership to be a sign of honor and advancement. She would place enough on farms to provide for the entire body, while the farms themselves should be schools of efficiency. Others should be placed in shops and mills to clothe the rest and provide other articles of necessity. But the main occupation of the great organization would be in the construction of better roads. It is an interesting plan, but the working out of it is the problem that will have to be considered. There are probably just as many worthless white people who ought to be organized into a similar army, yet how are we to do this? We put the criminal on the rock pile, but as yet, we believe, there is no general law of the country that can lay hold of the shiftless man who is not actually committing some crime other than being lazy. Mrs. Gilman's plan is, however, a philanthropic one, and she argues that with kind, but firm treatment, good living, reasonable hours, and the absence of the strain of personal initiative a great amount of useful work and betterment for the negro could be performed. She would not keep him always in subjection. But as fast as the individuals prove their capacity to work under their own initiative they should, she says, be graduated with honor, so that the institution has not only a compulsory side, but gives opportunity for freedom in the other direction.

A Danger of The Fleet.

We are sorry to notice that a wave of militarism has spread over Australia closely following upon the visit of the United States fleet to that country. It appears that the authorities have already appropriated over $6,000,000 for a navy, and expect to add to the equipment later on. We remember that the Australians are a patriotic people, and at the time of the trouble in South Africa sent regiments of their own troops to the aid of their motherland in the terrific contest it had to wage with the Boers. But there seems no occasion why Australia should burden itself with the attempt to create a navy when it is almost the last country in the world that is likely to be drawn into any conflict. We sincerely hope that the advent of the fleet on the coast of Japan, which has just been welcomed in most royal fashion, shall not add in any degree to the martial ideas of those little warriors of the eastern hemisphere.

Internal Betterment.

The Lakes to the Gulf Deep Waterways Association met recently at Chicago to consider ways and means by which several great states of our Union may have the advantage of water transportation extended to them. The importance of the meeting can not be measured, for its purpose is to add 20,000 miles to the coast line of our country, and to bring the great Mississippi Valley into direct contact with the markets of the world. It is contemplated that if the plans can be carried out, ocean vessels of moderate tonnage will be able to reach Chicago and other cities adjacent to the Great Lakes. Then, too, the problem of waste waters and flood ravages will, for a considerable extent of country, be more easily settled. No other expenditure by the nation will be so wise as the sum that shall be applied to the purpose of a great water highway through the center of the nation, and the question of a few men of-war is of the slightest significance compared with this internal improvement.

Effects of the Panic.

It was to be expected that the small dealer would be the one who would be affected by the financial crisis. Records of commercial agencies show that 8 per cent of the failures since the panic conditions began had a capital of $5,000 or less, and that 11 per cent were capitalized at from $5,000 to $20,000. This would indicate that small dealers are on the wane, and shows to what an extent the idea of co-operation and union has attained. The failures for nine months are greater than in any corresponding period since 1893. For the first nine months of this year failures numbered 10,691, with liabilities aggregating $244,835,000, being an increase of 55 per cent in the number, and 110 per cent in the total liabilities as compared with the first nine months of 1907.

Agriculture and Ships.

Mr. James J. Hill, of the Great Northern Railway, recently spoke some timely words at the opening of an agricultural school at Crookston, Minn. He deplored the tendency to increase the number of our battleships, and suggested that we take the cost of just one of these, which is about $5,000,000, and with this money build one thousand schools of agriculture. Will any sane man deny that at this juncture in our history Mr. Hill's suggestion is better for the nation than the building of another great war vessel? Apart altogether from the question as to whether additions to our navy are now needed, Mr. Hill's reasons are weighty ones. We quote his closing words: "With the present rate of increase in population, the country will ere long not be able to take care of its own people unless the farmers study the science of agriculture, and learn how to raise more bushels to the acre than they are able to do at present. Crops, during the last few years, have been steadily decreasing in the yield per acre, while the population is steadily gaining. This presents an interesting and important question that will not be settled unless we can, in some way, make our farming yield better results."

A Great Convention.

The New Orleans convention has gone into history. From every point of view it will be memorable, and in some respects it will be counted the best convention ever held by the Disciples of Christ. Two or three things marked it as standing alone. In the first place, the local management of the convention was above praise. There was not a hitch in this management, from the beginning to the end. Considering the small representation of our brotherhood in New Orleans, the local interest in the convention was remarkable, though this may be partly accounted for by another unique feature. The entire press of the city gave the convention a most hospitable reception. We have never had such full, admirable and sympathetic reports. Of course, this fact helps to account for the universal local interest. The attendance at the sessions was not so large as at some of our conventions, but it was large enough, and was always orderly and sympathetic with the speakers, and with the proceedings of the convention. The communion service on Lord's day was a real benediction.

Perhaps we have never held a convention where there was so little to criticize unfavorably. A few things could have been changed for the better, but even in these respects it is probable that the best possible arrangement was made. The program committee did not manage as many wished. For instance, no one seemed to know exactly what would be done during the latter part of the convention, and it was unfortunate that the arrangement to meet the Baptist delegation made everything uncertain, until the very last. But in the end this went off to the satisfaction of every one who remained. Unfortunately, a large portion of the convention had gone before this delegation was introduced. The convention speeches were for the most part worthy of the occasion. This was especially true of two or three of the speeches. We will not attempt a comparison, but feel justified in saying that the address of I. J. Spencer was especially helpful, as it discussed a question of the greatest importance. As we expect to print this address we need not now say anything further about it.

The formation of a preachers' national association was a conspicuous feature of the convention. This was done at the noon hour, after the convention adjourned; but, considering the unanimity with which this was done, and the large number of preachers who attended the conference, it is worth while to mention it as one of the great things done during the convention. While we are not disposed to criticize anything, where everything was so worthy of the occasion, still it may not be amiss to mention the fact that not a few expressed a wish that our program committee would give a greater opportunity to hear new men, rather than those that have been on the program frequently within the last few years. Of course, there were some new men, but we have now a large brotherhood, and a ministry which compares favorably with the ministry of any other religious body. Indeed, for freshness, vigor of thought, adaptation to the needs of the age in which we live, there are very many among the ministry of the Disciples who will compare favorably with any other ministry of the present day. We have not many scholars, from an academic point of view, yet some of our men take high rank even here. But there is a vast difference between an educated man and a scholarly man. A man may be highly educated without being especially scholarly. Most of our able preachers are evidently well educated, but some of them are not scholarly. We have been too busy with the problems lying immediately around us, to give very much attention to academic training; but our preachers, in the main, have had a training even more valuable than this. We were never prouder of them than during the New Orleans convention, and there were many in attendance who would have made as creditable addresses as any on the program.

The best thing about the convention was the spirit of brotherly love which prevailed everywhere. Of course, there were a few contrary undercurrents, but these never came to the surface, and finally disappeared entirely. Undoubtedly the convention made a deep impression on all who attended, and the impression made upon the citizens of New Orleans must have a lasting effect, and result in a much better understanding of our plea, throughout the South. It can be truly said that it was well that the convention was held in New Orleans.

A Summary of Proceedings at New Orleans.

We are ever nearing a wonderful point of time. The New Orleans convention entered us on the last lap of the one hundred years' course that leads up to Pittsburg in 1909. The significance of the moment grows upon us the more we ponder it. "Look therefore carefully how ye walk, not as unwise, but as wise; redeeming the time, because the days are evil."

In this issue of The Christian-Evangelist we give in some fullness a report of the women's part of the convention and in outline a statement of the year's work of some of the boards. A special convention number of this paper will be published next week containing a more detailed and illustrated report of the other sessions. Here we sketch some of the most important proceedings.

There were no frictions on the convention floor and not very serious differences of opinion in the board meetings or in the lobbies. We would not be a brotherhood of which the world would have to take account if there were not varieties of thought and differences of judgment. But we are in the happy position of having the representative feeling of the mass of our brotherhood express itself in committees and board meetings. So that when a question has been thoughtfully discussed in these and action taken, this will generally be approved by the larger meeting in convention assembled. There was no railroading at New Orleans. No steam roller crushed opposition. There were no locked doors at New Orleans; the matters coming to the notice of the convention were speedily acted upon with practical unanimity.

Yet there were occasions when vitriol might have flowed. But men seemed to prefer to live on the sunny side of God's providences, and to be anxious not to put their brothers in bondage as they faced the work of to-day. With a hand gripping the ninety-ninth rung of the ladder they wanted past victories to increase our strength, and past defeats to be danger-signals to prevent failure, and as the Christian churches all over the land make one mighty sweep upward toward the crowning summit of one hundred years of history, the spirit seemed to be to raise aloft for the whole brotherhood—not merely the outside religious forces—the old watchword: "In Faith, Unity; in Opinion and Methods, Liberty; in all things Charity."

The Centennial committee's report was approved. It, together with the statistical report, presented the figures published on our front page and stated that the Centennial aims are being splendidly realized. It called for special emphasis to be placed this year upon the primacy of prayer, the necessity of church papers in every home, a great Bible school advance, a thousand recruits to our ministry and the realization of two millions of dollars for our institutions and organizations. The time for the Centennial was given as October 11-17, with the Saturday as Centennial day. An outline of subjects for addresses was mentioned, but the names of speakers were not presented. The committee's report is not complete but may be expected shortly. Some expected there might be contention here. The general feeling of the brethren seemed to be, however, that, whatever personal desires with regard to any individuals might be, neither will the brotherhood tolerate dictation to the committee, nor are the missionary societies bound up by any action of this general committee.

Last year at Norfolk the center of interest was the fight made upon the Foreign Society on the score of "tainted money." That issue was buried by the brotherhood within the sound of the sea. All was peace and harmony this year, and with a gain of nearly $5,000, it would seem that the churches have answered once and for all that spirit which would allow personal feelings to handicap brotherhood work. The reports were great, and the watchword for this year is $400,000 to be put into the foreign field.

It was in the Home Society that there was a little rift within the lute at New Orleans. A new constitution had to be adopted, a new calendar of dates was to be considered, and there were a few uncertainties in the committee's report. These three matters led to a prolonged session of the board of directors of the A. C. M. S. It will be remembered that constitution and calendar were subjects of consideration at Norfolk; that a new constitution was adopted, and that the calendar committee was given another year to revise its report. At New Orleans the calendar committee was treated in a rather cavalier fashion, it seems to us, and a new committee arranged for, to be constituted of three representatives from each society other than the states, which are each to have one member.

The new constitution adopted at Norfolk for a year was found to be not in harmony with the laws of the state of Ohio. This may have been the chief reason for this action, but the fact that all the state secretaries were strongly in favor of the proposed revision this year, while seven or eight of them representing the strongest states were as a unit opposed to certain clauses in last year's draft, would indicate also another reason. There was a great deal of confusion about the proposed revision, and the majority present would no doubt have tabled the motion to adopt had it not been emphasized that business could not be conducted without a constitution. This was a point of law that no one present seemed able to settle, but it led to the adoption of the proposed revision after it had been revised. In the end the basis of membership was not made exclusively a monetary one; the board of church extension was separated from the Home Society, and the states do not have to divide offerings. The chief point of confusion was upon the powers of the board of trustees, which is to consist of twelve members. The constitution provides for a delegate convention, every church in the brotherhood, whether contributing or not, having the privilege of representation. This makes the body democratic and was a wise amendment. One objection of weight was that the constitution does not provide for the meeting of the board of directors preliminary to the general convention. But it was finally adopted for one year on the distinct understanding that the report should be made to the directors as usual, who should act in an advisory capacity as heretofore. A committee was appointed for the purpose of taking into consideration amendments.

The other matter of discussion has already been indicated. It caused some feeling, more because of what was not said than what was said. One paragraph of the report of the board asked that two associate secretaries be elected and that one of them should be superintendent of evangelism. After much discussion this was vetoed, so far as any changes in the present secretarial staff were concerned, but the evangelistic board was retained as a committee on evangelism. The whole discussion was unparliamentary, and led to endless confusion. The publication committee, whose chairman was not present, asked for further time. Its chairman, C. S. Medbury, was elected president of the convention for 1909. J. W. Perry, a prominent St. Louis business man, was elected president of the National Benevolent Association. Mrs. Atwater takes the position formerly held by Mrs. Atkinson and Mrs. Moses, while Mrs. Ida Harrison was elected vice-president of the C. W. B. M. Other chief officers are as last year.

The Christian-Evangelist and the Centennial.

It has not been our custom in recent years to publish extensive programs of what The Christian-Evangelist is to contain the coming year. A religious paper that deals with new issues as they arise, and with new developments, can not know a year ahead all the topics that it will need to treat. The exceptional character of the coming year, as the year of our Centennial celebration, will justify a statement of some of the leading lines of thought which will receive attention in The Christian-Evangelist. We hope to give considerable space to the history and progress of the movement whose Centennial we are to celebrate, and of the men to whom, under God, we are indebted for the Reformation for which we plead. An effort will be made to give our readers the point of view of the men who inaugurated this movement, and to set forth the spirit and aims which animated them. Among other writers who will give attention to this historical feature, the Editor hopes to run a serial entitled, "The Story of a Century," which will begin about the beginning of the year, and will trace the origin and development of our religious movement up to the present time.

Our Centennial aims will all receive emphasis, and practical suggestions will be given by our ablest writers as regards the best method of carrying them out.

By a restudy of the first principles of the gospel, it is hoped to stress the importance of thorough foundation work in dealing with human souls, to the end that we may produce a deeper personal experience in religion, and lay the foundation for a higher Christian culture in our churches.

Besides these features, which will be specially appropriate to the Centennial year, it is in our thought to develop some new features that will be of interest, and profit as well, to the various classes of our readers. These will appear as we are ready for them. It is believed that with the blessing of God and the generous co-operation of the best minds and hearts among us, the coming volume of The Christian-Evangelist will be one of great value to our Cause. In view of this fact we feel justified in soliciting the assistance of all our friends in extending our circulation in every state of the Union.

Notes and Comments

We have received a number of copies of the New Orleans daily papers containing full and very accurate reports of the proceedings of our national missionary convention in session in that city. It is highly creditable to these daily papers and to their constituency that they believe their readers would be interested in the proceedings of a great missionary convention, and would devote so liberal a part of their space to reports of the same. We have found it otherwise in many cities where our conventions have been held. They have often given scant space to these conventions, and have taken little pains to have these reports accurate. We are glad to pay this tribute to the daily papers of New Orleans, for their reports have been read with interest by readers thousands of miles from the scene of the convention. The amount of space given by the daily press to religious topics is a very good indication of the degree of Christian civilization which has been attained by the communities in which these papers circulate and, measured by this standard, the people of the South are highly complimented by the New Orleans daily papers.

If we are to accept, as authentic, the information which comes through one of our contemporaries that claims great prosperity because of its present reactionary policy, those of our religious journals which stand for the original free spirit of the movement, with its open-mindedness to truth, its fraternity toward all who love and honor Christ, and its readiness to adapt its old message to the new conditions of the age, are in a bad way. If this were the case, the situation might well cause alarm. If the papers among us which represent the freedom and breadth of our movement have come into disfavor because of this attitude, and those which represent a reactionary spirit are the popular favorites, we have indeed fallen upon evil times. We hope it may console our contemporary, as it will please our friends, to know that The Christian-Evangelist and the Christian Publishing Company are now closing the largest year's business in the long history of the company, and that, too, in the face of the monetary depression which has prevailed throughout the year. This is a showing for which we are duly grateful. Moreover the present tide of new subscribers pouring into the office gives no indication of any loss of confidence in, or affection for, The Christian-Evangelist. Indeed our friends seem to be waking up to the fact that their personal, active interest in extending the paper's circulation in their respective communities, has not been commensurate with their estimate of its value to our cause, and are seeking to make amends. We trust that our other journals sharing the aims and spirit of The Christian-Evangelist are meeting with like encouragement.

Editor's Easy Chair.

The physician seemed surprised on the occasion of his last call to find us in a condition that required no further professional visits. There had doubtless been curative influences at work not known to his materia medica. It would be strange, indeed, if the prayers of God's people, when they are in harmony with God's will and purpose, possessed no healing value. When we lose faith in the value of prayer, even in its relation to sickness, we have gone far away from the simple faith of the New Testament, and the teaching of Christ and his apostles. For our part, we prefer to dwell in the spirit of faith that prevails throughout God's blessed Volume, and which enables one to commit himself wholly—body, soul and spirit—to the divine care, believing that "He careth for us." In any event, the physician, pointing to a scar on his face, said he had, at one time, been confined to his room with the same trouble for six months, and that he regarded us as exceedingly fortunate in being confined for only that number of weeks. For the past few days we have been spending a few hours each day at the office, at the old familiar desk. It was good to receive the hearty greetings and congratulations of the employees of the company in all departments of the business, and to feel that we were able to take our place, partially at least, in this large body of workers.

To-day, we feel very much as we imagine a bird would feel whose nest had been destroyed. A telephone message at an early hour this morning notified us that a fire had broken out in the editorial office of The Christian-Evangelist during the night, and had wrecked the first editorial office, besides doing considerable damage in the office of the Assistant Editor. On arriving at the company's building we found it even so. The office furniture was destroyed, including two bookcases filled with most valuable books, two roller-top desks, a large number of manuscripts, besides tables, typewriter and office fixtures. Of course, the room itself was badly damaged. The prompt response of the fire department was all that prevented a very serious conflagration. Of course, the loss is covered by insurance, and the damages will soon be repaired, except the loss of books and manuscripts, but meanwhile the Editor is a refugee from his accustomed place of work. The charred and blackened skeleton of the Editor's "Easy Chair" was left as a reminder of its past service. This incident recalls a very destructive fire in the early history of the company in this city, in which a large printing office was completely wrecked, and the loss only partially covered by insurance. As this was more than a third of a century ago, we have been fortunate during all this interval in having escaped the ravages of the devouring flame. Fortunately, the mechanical and business departments of the company will go on without any loss of time. The Editors will find a place to do their work, and The Christian-Evangelist will make its weekly visits without diminution in size or quality.

How lavishly and willingly the trees are giving up their leaves these autumn days! They seem to be saying to them, "Go now, as Mother Earth is calling you, and the winds are ready to waft you to her kindly bosom. You came to us in the fair, young springtime, and have been our ornament during the summer, besides performing the useful function of lungs, by which we have been able to breathe in life from the atmosphere. But now, having fulfilled your mission in this sphere, go hence to whatever destiny awaits you." And so the limbs are growing barer every day, and the earth is putting on her autumn carpet of variegated leaves.

"Heaped in the hollows and the groves
The withered leaves lie dead;
They rustle to the eddying gusts
And to the rabbit's tread."

Like the leaves of the trees, we hold our places awhile in the spheres of life in which we may be placed, and, having fulfilled our mission, or failing to do so, we pass on to whatever destiny may await us. "We all do fade as a leaf." But as the leaf, having ministered to the tree, falls to the earth, and by enriching the soil continues to minister to other life, may it be our aim to live such lives while here in the body, that, going hence, we may, both by our living and by our dying, minister to other lives that shall come after us.

One lesson has been impressed upon us anew during these days of affliction through which we have passed, although it is one to which we have often called the attention of our readers. It is the duty of appreciating, at their true value, and thus enjoying, as we seldom do, the common blessings of life. Who of us in the enjoyment of health and strength, with the ability to perform our daily tasks and meet our responsibilities, appreciates the blessing of health? We come to take it for granted as something to which we are entitled, and not until we are deprived of it do we realize how priceless a blessing it is. It is so with our homes, with our family relationships, with our friends, with our church privileges, with social order, the stability of government, and all that goes to make life worth living. Unless we are deprived occasionally of these blessings we are sure to underestimate them, and to count them as cheap and common things. And yet the secret of happiness is in appreciating, at their true value, those things which God has given us, and especially our relationship to him as his children, and his fatherly love and care for us. It is not in the multitude of our possessions, but in our appreciation and use of those things which we have, that we are to find happiness and contentment. Read the Beatitudes with this truth in mind if you would find the key to the life of blessedness.

Here is a man, for instance, that complains that he does not possess that Christian joy and peace which he feels that a Christian has a right to expect—and that describes the condition of a great many church members—perhaps the most of us. Now, suppose that we had, in the first place, a realizing sense of our sins—their heinous character and the fact that they shut us out forever from the presence and favor of a holy and just God. Then out of the blackness of this night of guilt, suppose there should come to us an adequate view of God's love in Christ, stooping down to save us from sin by the agony and humiliation of the cross, offering us free pardon if we would accept him as Savior and Lord. Would there be, then, any lack of Christian joy, peace and love in our hearts? Certainly not. We could then sing understandingly,

"Jesus all the day long,
Is my joy and my song,
O that all his salvation might know."

But these are real facts which none of us would question. Whence, then, our lack of joy and enthusiasm? We do not appreciate them at their true significance and value. We have allowed them to become commonplace. Faith is the realizing faculty which alone can bring us to such a realization of our sins and of our salvation through Christ, as to make all material blessings dwindle into comparative insignificance.

The breath which comes to us through divers reports from the New Orleans convention, some of which are contained in this issue, is fragrant with the sweet odor of the gospel, and of the blessed fruit of the Spirit. The men and women who attend our national conventions, and who are the staunch supporters of our great missionary, educational and benevolent interests, are the hope of our cause. If the spirit which breathes in these convention addresses and in the sentiments which are expressed in social conversation by those who attend, were universal among us, how magnificently the work would go forward! But we know that there is another spirit manifesting itself which tends to disintegration and weakness. This spirit must be exorcised if we are to go forward unitedly to the accomplishment of our great mission. In these sober October days, so conducive to seriousness of thought, there is a great deal of sober thinking going on among the most thoughtful people among us, and among the rank and file of honest Disciples who are beginning to sense the situation, and who are anxious about the future of our movement. But let no one be discouraged or downcast. We have passed through similar experiences in the past, and in the long run truth always wins its battle. So will it be in this case. This movement, conceived in the spirit of the broadest Christian charity and unity, is not going to be strangled by men of narrow vision who would hamper and circumscribe its freedom and breadth.

Report of the Annual Convention at New Orleans

Christian Woman's Board of Missions.

By Virginia Hearne.

After an all-day board meeting the Christian Woman's Board of Missions held its first open meeting in the First Methodist Episcopal Church, South, on Friday evening, October 9. This beautiful church, which was loaned our women with gracious hospitality, was filled to the standing point on this first evening. Mrs. Anna R. Atwater, acting president, presided over the meeting with a quiet strength which called forth words of praise. Mr. Hackleman led the audience in singing, "I am here on business for my king," and Mrs. John Zigler, state president of Louisiana, read the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians and lead in an earnest prayer that heaven and earth might be bound together in our work. Then she spoke a sparkling welcome to the battle-scarred of both home and foreign fields, and expressed her exultation at this greatest blessing that had ever come to New Orleans. She spoke of Louisiana as a home-foreign field, and reminded us that opportunity was obligation. Mrs. Atwater responded with an urgent appeal that all should take as much away from New Orleans as possible, and that each should give of his very best to these people. She expressed the gratitude of the convention for the welcome given with "the holiday in the eye." She drew attention also to framed pictures of Mrs. Moses and Mrs. Burgess hanging on the pulpit. The India workers had sent a beautiful covered frame for the picture of Mrs. Moses.

Mrs. Atwater then introduced the speaker of the evening, W. G. Menzies, of Rath, India, who gave us a stirring address on "A Branch of the Vine." Mr. Menzies had sailed for India six years ago that night, and Mrs Atwater aptly introduced him as "one who knows." Mr Menzies spoke of India as rich, yet poor, having rajahs and paupers, as having many gods, but no God, as religious without a religion. In the town where he lived, Rath, with its 14,000 inhabitants, they were at first met with great suspicion. The people thought they had either been sent to vaccinate them or to spread the plague, and so closed their doors. When told that the missionaries had come to tell them about Jesus they replied that they had more gods now than they could feed. For the first two years effort was concentrated on villages round about, and gradually doors were opened. At a marriage feast, inquiries were made as to the two little books carried by Mr. Menzies. They were a Bible and hymn book. They were presented to the inquirers and later he came to be a Christian, though he had worshiped idols for thirty-five years. A Brahmin came who had watched the lives of the Christians. When he had been baptized his caste was broken, and he shook hands with the missionaries. When he returned home his father threw his shoe at him to signify that he had become an outcast. When one of the boys from the mission school went to be baptized his mother followed, imploring, "Don't do it, don't do it," and when the ceremony was over she wept bitterly, exclaiming, "My boy is dead, my boy is dead!" Another boy was implored, commanded by his father to deny his new faith, and would not. In the night a heavy hand was laid upon him and he was spirited away to a solitary hut, where thirty-five men passed in turn before him and threatened his life unless he made denial. Four watchers were left to guard, but they fell into a heavy sleep and the boy walked out. The father sought him again. Three hundred people watched the boy preach to his father, while the father was imploring him to return to heathenism. At last the sheriff inquired the boy's age, then commanded the father to loose him.

There are now forty-five Christians. Last year with a salary averaging $3 per month they gave nearly $200 for missionary work—to save India's widows, to save India's children. Widows under 30 years of age have only two ways of earning a living, and both are ways of horror. The physical suffering is so terrible that it wrings one's very heart. In that whole province of 300,000 people there is not one physician.

When Jesus was moved with compassion he did something. If your talents be small, dedicate even your small things. David's sling slew Goliath, the alabaster box of ointment has perfumed the earth, the widow's two mites will never be forgotten. What is that thou hast in thy hand?

Mr. Menzies told of his visit to the prison where the little Scotch lassie had heard the distant sound of the bagpipes of the relief party coming and had called out, "Dinna ye hear it? Dinna ye hear it?" So he brought us the story of India and left it ringing in our ears, with the cry, "Dinna ye hear it? Dinna ye hear it?"

The session was closed with a word of prayer from Brother McLean.

Saturday Morning.

The session Saturday morning was opened by a devotional service led by Mrs.

CHRISTIAN WOMAN'S BOARD. Prominent in the front row are Mrs. Atwater, the new president, in the center; Mrs. Harlan, Mrs. Atkinson and Mrs. Ida Harrison.

L. G. Bantz, of Missouri, Miss Una Dell Berry singing for us beautifully.

Then Mrs. Atwater told us in joyful, sorrowful words of the work of the year—sorrowful because of the passing of our great leader, thankful because of the year's work that was just finished. She told how we had passed our year's aim in offerings—that more than $102,000 had already been paid in on the Centennial fund, and that we now had more than 56,000 members. She told us that earthquake-stricken Jamaica had raised more than $5,000 for its own support, and that it had sent more than $700 for India's famine fund. Then she told of the building projects, of the great training school that was going up in Indianapolis, of the church that had been built in Porto Rico, of the Helen E. Moses home for boys, of the industrial school in the Kentucky mountains, at Hazel Green, of the hospital at Mahoba and the chapels at Jhansi and Kulpahar. It had been a great year—great as the tangible results had been, the intangible ones had been even greater. We have come into a mighty heritage. What are we going to do with our expansion?

Mrs. M. E. Harlan then read the report and recommendations from the national board, this being followed by other reports from the several departments.

It was recommended that the Jamaica industrial school should be built, that three new missionaries should be sent out to India; that Miss Daisy Drake be permitted to return to India; that Mexico be added to as the work developed; that an evangelist be sent to Porto Rico; that a girls' dormitory be built there; that building be begun in South America, and a native worker employed till another can be sent.

Nebraska was the banner Junior state.

The Netz sisters sang beautifully "The Bird with a Broken Pinion" and "Homeland," when they were recalled.

Then C. H. Winders, Indianapolis, spoke on, "While He Was Yet Young." The full address will be found on another page. Mr. Winders spoke of the strong sentiment of to-day that a child should be given a trained mind in a strong body, and said that this thought should be added to by the insistence of the church for religious culture. So Jesus grew—in wisdom, in stature and in favor with God and man.

A telegram of greeting was read from Mrs. Pearre and one sent to Mrs. Gray in her loneliness.

Then the missionaries were introduced while the audience stood before them. Each of them gave us a few words. Mrs. Menzies said she always thought of India standing alone, physically afflicted, pleading for aid, while Christians at home said, "Wait till we broaden our fields and sit at ease in Zion." How long, O Lord, how long shall we wait? Mr. Menzies told of how during the Indian meeting the forces were brought together to take Delhi—they went single file, to be shot down and down and down, till at last the gates fell. Our dear brother Wharton had laid down his life in the love of the trail. He said, "Help us. We can only expect of you what you expect of us."

Miss Zonetta Vance, of Deoghur, said that 100,000 pilgrims visited Deoghur each year. She told of one old man who traveled 14 miles, prostrating himself full length, drawing a line with his finger, then rising to again measure his length. It took a whole day thus to go two miles, and this he did seeking peace, only to find at the end a licentious stone god.

Mrs. Fulton spoke of the orphanage work in Porto Rico, and Mrs. Ford drew a word picture of a pathetic 4-year-old girl who was being trained by her grandmother to beg, of her bearing yet on her child's face a dreadful scar where a drunken American sailor burnt her with his cigar as he forcibly kissed her baby lips.

Mr. Pearn spoke of Jamaica's gratitude for speedy help in their time of sore trial, and of their recognition through this that a great nation was standing back of this. The earthquake was a terrific blow, but it had brought blessing with it, for the natives were provoked to demonstrate that they, too, were constrained by the love of Christ.

Jasper Moses said that he had been studying South America and especially the Argentine Republic, with its city of a million and a half inhabitants, splendid streets, and the largest newspaper plant in the world. He said that nowhere else had the Christian Woman's Board of Missions shown more splendid audacity.

Mr. Fuller told of his new work in Monterey, and the whitening harvest there. He spoke of the splendid work that had been done by the American Bible Society, and said that as a result a whole town had sent word to ask that one should be sent to baptize them. He reminded us that unless fruit be picked when it is ripe the work of the season will be lost. Mrs. Fuller said: "If about 100 of you would answer these pleas for help maybe you would fall in love with hard work, too, and the churches would be kept so busy caring for you they would have no time for heresy hunting." She introduced Miss Bertha Westrup, who said in hesitating English that she wished she could tell us the story of every one of their church members. She told of the Endeavor prayer-meetings and of their having the largest Junior in the world. She told of lack of room, and of how it made her heart ache to have to turn children away. She said she had to turn her head away when she told them no. She tied a Mexican sash about her and sang for us the national song of Mexico. We who heard will never forget.

The afternoon session was opened with a song service, after which Mrs. Reba B. Smith, of California, led in devotional hour. She led our thoughts to the last days of Jesus. Then we were stirred by messages from our home fields.

Mr. Lehman spoke appreciatively of the many kindnesses received from all over the country. He said that the work among the negroes represented the real test of preaching the gospel to all people. He said there were 10,000,000 negroes in America, which represented one-tenth of our entire population. If not given help they may destroy, negatively, but are not dangerous from a positive standpoint. They must be taught to do humble things honorably. One of our boys, during a fever period, got work picking cotton on the plantation of a man who was deeply opposed to our school. Stock got out and he brought them and mended the gate without being told. The man set him to similar work all over the plantation. When the season was over the master met Mr. Lehman and told him he wished to congratulate him. "Yes," said Mr. Lehman, "we escaped the fever." "No," said the man, "I don't mean that; I mean on your work in training negroes."

Mrs. Lehman told of her early desires to go to India or Japan, but that God had called her to Africa—Africa in America.

C. C. Smith said that they had started with $130 and now had more than $100,000 worth of equipment to show forth the labors of his wards. There is no equal of this in all Christian work. "Not one," said he, "of all our graduates has ever been arrested; not one of our girls has ever gone astray, and God alone knows the temptations of the black girl."

W. F. Smith, of Morehead, Ky., said that sooner or later all mountain streams and roads got mixed. Everything stops when it rains, and will do so until those poor people learn how to build bridges by the thousands. When it rains, the physician can not reach the sick child, the sinner can not get to the preacher nor the child to school. A man told recently that one son had come from New York City for a funeral, but that the other one, who had gone squirrel hunting, couldn't get home in time. It is not Kentucky that needs schools, but the mountains everywhere. The boys and girls are just like your boys and girls. Their only hope is in Christian boarding schools. We have 511 students in Morehead.

George Reynolds, of Monroe, La., said he was the latest edition of the board. He spoke of Louisiana as a land of gilded steeples without a righteous people. We have fourteen churches in the state, half of which support themselves.

Then the Netz sisters sang for us and Mr. Warren, our Centennial man, came forward to respond to an encore for the Netz sisters, and as a postscript to the C. W. B. M. Mr. Warren's postscript was certainly an inspiring one, and may be read in another column. When it was finished, the workers nodded significantly to each other, that they would have that doubled membership even yet. His closing words furnished us with our motto for the year.

Mrs. Atwater said: "Our good brethren know how to point our foibles; but, better still, our possibilities."

Mrs. John Zigler, state president of Louisiana, presented the report of the nominating committee, which was enthusiastically accepted by the convention. Mrs. Anna R.

MEXICAN DIET

Not Conducive to American Energy.

"After about thirteen years in Mexico, where I was on a Mexican diet into which coffee and greasy food enter largely, I found that everything I ate distressed me," writes a man from our neighboring republic.

"Nervous break-down with pain in the heart caused me to give up mental work. After trying various stomach remedies without benefit, I found relief, at last, by eating Grape-Nuts and cream.

"I could digest Grape-Nuts, and the heart and nervous symptoms soon improved to such an extent that I could do some brain work and a fair day's manual labor.

"When away from home I got out of sorts from eating wrong food, but at home a few days on Grape-Nuts puts me right again.

"I once worked 10 consecutive hours on a dyke without much fatigue, by having a small box of Grape-Nuts in my pocket and eating a little dry, whenever I felt faint. I can now teach all day without fatigue, after a breakfast of Grape-Nuts and cream, stewed fruit, toast and Postum.

"That old dull feeling, when I tried to live on my former diet, has disappeared and the delightful sensation of being fully nourished is present now. And the smile on our 18 months old boy at a sight of a Grape-Nuts package is worth seeing." "There's a Reason."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

Atwater was made president and Mrs. Ida W. Harrison, of Kentucky, vice-president. All other officers were retained with grateful appreciation for their past service. (The story was told by one that her small boy had said he thought God must have known he needed a kindergarten teacher, so he has made Miss A. "Now," said she, "God must have known we should need a secretary, so he made Mrs. Harlan.")

After the acceptance of the report from the nominating committee, W. F. Richardson, of Kansas City, led in prayer and then addressed the new officers. He said that he had no new charge to give, for they had every one been proved. Our society was not a home nor a foreign society, but a world-wide, world-redeeming society. Mr. Richardson charged that the work be published everywhere by voice, and pen, and leaflet—every way, to every people, in every land. They were to realize this by making their women a great host, till in the end they were to have for their aim, "every woman enlisted." He suggested that the three Mary's should be taken for an example—Mary, the virgin mother, who had confidently folded her hands and replied, "Behold thy hand-maiden"; Mary of Bethany, who brought her love with its token, the alabaster box, and Mary Magdalene, who no sooner heard, than she was swift to carry the message.

Mrs. Brunk, of North California, then read the report of the Committee on Watchword and Aims. They had made use of Mr. Warren's closing words, adding only the woman's touch. Is it not inspiring?

"Womanhood enlisted and equipped; 85,000 Women; the race redeemed; $265,000 regular offering; the Christ crowned; $75,000 Centennial."

Then Mrs. Atwater introduced Mrs. Atkinson as one who had stood by from the beginning. Speaking in steady, thrilling words, Mrs. Atkinson gave us a closing message which you will read for yourself. She reminded us that Jesus Christ had rolled the whole world upon the shoulders of eleven men. Speaking of our departed leader, she paid loving tribute to her as a true, gentle, generous sister. She said that we often feel we just must have her counsel, but that when God takes his own he shuts the door; and yet, said Mrs. Atkinson, Helen E. Moses still lives in a multitude of lives.

After sweet-voiced Miss Berry had sung for us yet once again, Mrs. Atwater said: "Suppose, friends, that our 56,000 members could stand with clasped hands with one unfaltering purpose." With a few words, giving us a vision of our possibilities, she spoke the last benediction.

On Sunday afternoon the hour of prayer was conducted by the state secretaries of Texas. The thought of the hour was Pippa's song: "God's in his heaven, all's well with the world." Dr. Dye told the story of the men who called to them, "We will tell God on you if you pass us by." C. C. Smith prayed with us for Africa. Mrs. Menzies took our thoughts to sad India, and Dr. Butchart told us that China was responding to the teaching of the missionary, even while he was not yet a Christian. Miss Vance prayed for India and China, and Jasper Moses for Mexico. Miss Bertha Westrup sang "Nearer, my God, to Thee" in Spanish. Mrs. Ford plead for Mexico and Mr. Pearn for Porto Rico, Mrs. Fullen praying for all the islands of the sea. Mr. Fuller dismissed the audience.

Several most helpful conferences were held, the best of which was undoubtedly the banquet council on Tuesday evening. Mrs. Maud D. Ferris, President of Michigan, was the gracious hostess. The table was arranged as a cross, the executive board sitting at the top. A definite program had been planned, allowing ten speakers three minutes each, with space for remarks. Miss Mary Lyons, of Ohio, compared our national board with the boards made by hand to be wrought into a temple. Mrs. Craig read a brilliant paper on preparation for C. W. B. M. day. In fact, every talk was fine and to the point. Mrs. Harrison, the one new member of the board, was presented by our hostess with a cluster of lilies of the valley bound together with our royal purple gauze, as a token of our love for her.

Mrs. Menzies was persuaded to give a talk to the women on the women of India, and so profoundly did she stir their hearts that in a few moments $1,076 was gladly offered for sad India's sake. In this meeting Mrs. Menzies told of the awful fate of India's widows, 27,000,000 in number. She told the story with trembling lips, and added: "And yet I have told you little of the horror of it. Things have been told me that I simply can not repeat."

Our Greater Centennial Aim

By W. R. Warren

Originally the Christian Woman's Board of Missions undertook to celebrate the Centennial by inducing one hundred thousand women who are not members of auxiliaries to give $100,000, to be invested in new mission stations, and by doubling its membership. At Norfolk last year it was found that $167,000 had already been pledged, and so the financial aim was advanced to $200,000. The state of Indiana alone will probably reach the whole original aim of $100,000, although, of course, it will not come from 100,000 women. For the Centennial year the aim stands at $75,000, and the membership increased to eighty-five thousand.

In view of the magnificent record of the trying year just closed, no one can doubt that the money will be raised. For the first time in our history the C. W. B. M. has raised more money within a year than any of our missionary organizations, not excepting the entire group of state societies. Not only will the distinctive Centennial Aim of seventy-five thousand be brought in, but the advance aim for total receipts, $340,000, will undoubtedly be consecrated to the Lord's service.

The greater, as well as the more difficult aim, is to augment the membership to eighty-five thousand. This means a vast increase in the number of auxiliaries and circles, as well as numerous additions to the membership of existing organizations. That there is room for growth is manifest when we consider that only one in two of the missionary churches has an auxiliary or circle and that only one in ten of the women who belong to our churches belongs to either an auxiliary or a circle.

It is not because this is the great Centennial Aim that it is being pressed this year, but it is a Centennial Aim because it ought to be pressed every year. It recognizes four great needs: First, The Lord needs the whole heart of every Christian and the Christianity of the whole world. Loyalty to him impels us to double the membership. "The love of Christ constraineth us." The C. W. B. M. is mutually educational, as well as aggressively missionary.

Second. After nineteen centuries, the world lies in sin. Those for whom Christ died are still dying without Christ. Every hour of this convention, and every feature of it, bears in upon us the imperative character of the world's need.

Third. The women of the auxiliary need those who are not members, and your auxiliary needs other auxiliaries in your county. You can not know how much you need them, because you never had them. You need them as the school needs students, as the store needs customers, as the manufacturer needs raw material, as the army needs recruits, as the heart needs friends. Think of your dearest friend of to-day, and of how impossible it would be for you to live without her, and then recall the time when you did not feel the need because you were ignorant of her existence. But equally priceless to you are other friends who have not yet come into your life.

Fourth. The supreme need with which we are concerned is the other woman's need of you and of your organization. Of course she is unconscious of her need. It is your business to make her aware. On the skill, persistence and success with which you do this depends the realization of our greater aim and our higher mission in the world. You who are gathered in this convention appreciate all of these things as commonplaces; it is your business to make them living realities in the hearts of your sisters at home. Let it become a passion with every officer and every member of every auxiliary or circle to seek out one by one new members for her sisterhood.

There are some unexpected and unnatural obstacles in the way. Some auxiliaries are content with their present small membership. They have a congenial and delightful company. They are fearful, perhaps unconsciously, but no less really, that new members might not fit into the society. They are unwilling to risk sacrificing its charm. In many instances this exclusiveness may be not only an indefinite dread of the unknown, but a positive contempt for the well known. A certain woman is not wanted in the auxiliary, because it is a notorious fact that her table linen is machine-hemmed. One of the best of God's women remarked one day to her pastor, "I don't think ours ever will be a large church." It was more than manifest that she was hoping it never would be a large church. Of course, this, or any other sort of spirit ual or social selfishness must be overcome before the auxiliaries will grow.

You remember how the good bishop's servant reported that the man at the door who wished to enter refused to give his name, and was told: "This is the Lord's house, and he who enters here need not have a name, but only a need." In this spirit we must go out and seek those who will be helped by belonging to the auxiliary. We must tell them kindly and tactfully, convincingly and attractively, that they will be helped and how they can help others through the auxiliary. Above all things, we must not patronize them or talk to them in a superior way of the advantages which we can offer. It is not we who are better than they, and so able to help them, but it is the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, with all its advantages, its sisterhood and its service that is infinitely better than anything which they have enjoyed.

Too often, in soliciting members, special emphasis is laid upon the monthly dues, as if their payment were the chief feature of membership. As a matter of fact we know it is only one of the incidents of our association. It is only a part of the year's offering; it is a very small part of the year's work. It is a necessary part, which must not be neglected, but as far as possible one which should be observed as a privilege and as an expression of appreciation and love. The fifteen cents per month should be paid, not grudgingly and of necessity, but cheerfully, not only because the Lord loveth a cheerful giver, but because the cheerful giver will love the Lord and delight in all departments of his service.

One woman who had caught the vision of greater things in her auxiliary went to the telephone and secured sixteen new members in one afternoon. When asked whether she laid the chief emphasis upon the dues and the society's need of the money, she answered in astonishment, "No, indeed! I simply told them of what delightful meetings we had, what inspiring reports were coming from the fields and how all of us who belonged felt greatly strengthened and helped in every phase of our lives." Another won a friend who had long resisted every appeal by simply lending her two missionary books. This Centennial year every auxiliary ought to have its circulating library. If women only knew what was being done, and how it was being done, they would rejoice to have a share in the achievements.

In addition to the thorough organization that will assign to every state its quota of the new auxiliaries and additional members, it will be well to introduce generally the plan of contest that has been used so successfully in some places. Let there be a contest between states of equal strength. Let auxiliaries and counties enter into contest. The contest idea has been so thoroughly exploited that it needs only to be mentioned. The C. W. B. M. is too wise to be frightened out of its use by the fact that it has sometimes been abused.

Of course all invitations to meetings and all arguments in favor of missions will fail, if attendance at the meetings does not reinforce the invitation and the argument. Improve your meetings. There are only twelve meetings in the year. There is time to make every one of them fresh, attractive and helpful. The least auxiliary can make every one of its meetings so fascinating that its fame will spread throughout the community, and women will earnestly seek the privilege of attending and belonging.

In a certain state the annual C. W. B. M. convention was poorly attended. The fact was mourned, the women were exhorted and scolded, the brethren were entreated and urged, but all to no avail. Then the order was changed, the program was carefully prepared and made to include at least one feature of such distinction as would grace a national program. Now the house is always full when the women of that state have their session in the convention. Really the women who attend the state convention are the same that attend the national convention, and deserve just as well at the hands of those who speak and those who plan.

Just as certainly the women who attend your auxiliary meetings deserve the very best that can be brought to them, and every monthly meeting should have as careful and conscientious preparation as even the great Centennial program with which the entire C. W. B. M. will celebrate the century's close. In everything else, in our marvelous modern life, everybody is demanding the best and the place where the best is offered can not be successfully hidden. Make your auxiliary the most sought-after organization in your town.

That which we call the century plant really requires only thirty or forty years to come to maturity. Throughout all those years it is gathering in and organizing the resources of the earth. At last it lifts a great stem that towers above the top of the house, and, like a giant candelabrum, holds out toward heaven its luminous blossoms of gold. The Christian Woman's Board of Missions has been growing inconspicuously for thirty-four years. The time of blossoming has come in this Centennial year. We shall see it rising up in glorious power and beauty with realization that crowns all the years of toil and sacrifice and patience so splendidly that every heart of the eighty-five thousand will join simultaneously with those who are gathered at Pittsburg in songs of ecstatic thanksgiving. Even the angels about the throne of God will join in the Hallelujah chorus. For womanhood is being enlisted and equipped to redeem the race and crown the Christ.

While He Was Yet Young

An Address Delivered at the C. W. B. M. Session of the New Orleans Convention.

By C. H. Winders

The sentence, of which my subject is only a part, reads as follows: "While he was yet young he began to seek after the God of David, his father." These words were spoken concerning King Josiah, the youngest and one of the very greatest of Judah's kings: "Like unto him was no king before him that turned to the Lord with all his heart, and with all his soul, and with all his might according to the law of Moses, neither after him arose any like him." Josiah was a great king because he was a great man. We shall some time learn that what we are to others depends upon what we ourselves are. That the chief business of the teacher of youth is not to help the boy or girl to know, or to do, but to be. Emerson has said, "Goodness outshines genius as the sun makes the electric light cast a shadow." Josiah was a great man, and therefore a great king, because he was a great boy. "The child shows the man as the morning shows the day." But he was a great child, and therefore a great man, and therefore a great king, because while he was yet young he began to seek after the God of David, his father. A boy worshiping the true God, inspired by a great purpose, giving his life to a great work, means, in a few years, a great man, and that means a great statesman, or teacher, or minister, or missionary, or king. The secret then of the splendid reign of this good king is in the scripture here used, "While he was yet young, he began to seek after the Lord God of David, his father." But are we not justified in going one step further and concluding that this young king began his early quest for God, and thus, at this early age, laid the foundation of his future greatness, because he came under the influence of those who themselves knew God and therefore knew how to help this boy to find him? If the life of Josiah teaches anything regarding the comparative importance of the forces of heredity and environment in the development of life, it clearly teaches that environment is, by all odds, the more important factor. This son of a wicked and idolatrous father, and the grandson of a yet more infamous grandfather, from the very beginning of his reign as a boy king, turns to God with all his heart. The most reasonable explanation seems to be that this young life was trained by a devout mother, the meaning of whose name is "The beloved of God," and perhaps also felt the personal touch of a good grandmother, whose name seems to indicate that she was the "Honored of God"; that, like Timothy, the unfeigned faith in him dwelt first in his grandmother and his mother. I know that names are often improperly given, but in this case they must have meaning to explain the character of this young king. I have not come to tell how, nor what, nor when to teach the child; all this can be better learned from those who have made a special study of this theme. I shall feel satisfied if I can help you even in a very small measure to gain a larger appreciation of the importance of this period of childhood and youth. The state, of which this child is soon to be a citizen, is more and more coming to recognize that the use made of this period of life almost certainly determines the character of that citizen. First, it sought only to provide schools where every child, whether rich or poor, might at the expense of the state receive an education; but now in many states it not only makes an education possible, it also makes it compulsory. But the state has taken, or is taking, another step. Interested that the child shall not only have a trained mind, but a trained mind in a strong body, the child is being taken from mine and factory during these early years and given the freedom and fresh air required by his expanding body. This period is no less important to the Church of Christ than to the state. What the child is to be to the church as a man he must begin to be as a child, and it is not only folly, it is a sin to neglect the boys and girls who are in a few years to constitute the Church of Christ. It is a sin against the nation, against the Church, against God; but most of all, a sin against the child itself. By every one who loves God and his fellowman, therefore, this period of life must be regarded as of supreme importance, chiefly because it means so much to the child, whose whole life, both for time and eternity, most certainly will depend upon the use made of his childhood. "While He Was Yet Young." Is it not significant that we are so often given a glimpse, and frequently indeed more than a glimpse of the early life of those great Old Testament characters?

Joseph, the boy, is a prophecy of Joseph the prime minister of Egypt. David's courage and strength and devotion took root in the days when he was a shepherd lad. It was to the child Samuel that God revealed himself, and the good king, Josiah, began to seek after the God of David, his father, while he was but a child.

"While He Was Yet Young." Youth hath her victories, in every department of life, no less renowned than age; and these are due not so much to genius as to the early discovery of one's self, and his powers, and the concentration of his efforts upon some worthy undertaking. Painters and sculptors like Raphael and Rubens and Angelo and Canova; inventors like Pascal and Whitney and Stephenson and Watt and Edison; musicians like Schubert and Mozart and Mendelssohn; poets like Gray and Moore and Coleridge and Johnson and Poe and Bryant and Burns; reformers, ministers and missionaries like Wilberforce and Garrison, like Calvin, the Wesleys and Campbell, like Robert Hall and Charles H. Spurgeon, like Henry Martyn, John Williams, Robert Moffett, John Mackay, and Count Zinzendorf; and time would fail me to tell of the authors and architects, explorers and discoverers, financiers and statesmen, who while they were yet young achieved such results that the world will never willingly let their names perish from history, and this they did chiefly because there was no wasted youth, because early in life, assisted often by wise counsel, they found themselves and their work. I wish this were the whole story, but it is not. Horace Mann once drew a picture of a boy over whom both angels and demons were hovering. They who get the boy, said he, will in all probability get the man.

While ninety per cent of those who constitute the present membership of the Protestant churches became members before they were twenty-five years of age, it is also true that in a single city where twenty-six thousand arrests were made in one year more than half of them were under twenty years of age. Recent statistics show that out of 82,500 prisoners in the United States one half are under thirty years of age, one-third under twenty-five, and one-eighth under twenty, and that means that those who constitute the one-eighth were regarded as hardened criminals, or they would not have been sent to the penitentiary. But these conditions are not normal. They are due to the wrong influence exerted upon the boy during the impressionable age. The child is susceptible to these influences, but he is not less susceptible, but more, to good influences.

What are the qualities in the child which Jesus so highly commended when he said, "Except ye turn and become as little children, ye shall in no wise enter the Kingdom of Heaven"? Whatever else they are, they include the qualities of a pure heart and a teachable disposition. And by teachableness is meant openmindedness, humility and trustful love. What a pity as we grow to manhood and womanhood's estate we do not keep possession of these qualities of childhood! How far removed we are from the purity of those childhood days, and in consequence removed also from God, until we have almost lost sight of him and see him only as we should when we look through the eyes of some innocent child, who teaches us anew that only the pure in heart shall see God. And in the place of openmindedness, humility and trustful love have come prejudice, pride, skepticism and cynicism, until the words of Richard Realf find a sad response in all our hearts.

This sweet child which hath climbed upon my knee,
This amber-haired, four-summered little maid,
With her unconscious beauty troubleth me,
With her low prattle maketh me afraid.
Ah, darling, when you cling and nestle so
You hurt me, tho' you do not see me cry
For the dear babe I killed so long ago.
I tremble at the touch of your caress,
I am not worthy of your innocent faith;
I who with whetted knives of worldliness
Did put my own child-heartedness to death,
Beside whose grave I pace forever more,
Like desolation on a shipwrecked shore.
There is no little child within me now.

"There is no little child within me now." If we have slain that child within, let the desolation, the darkness, the hopelessness of that heart be a warning, lest by our carelessness or neglect, if not by our cruelty, we be the means of another death. But Jesus says we can and must return and recover these qualities of childhood. But this is hard. And why did we ever lose them? Surely this was not necessary. And may we not save others from this loss? The Christian world has been slow in coming to an appreciation of Jesus' teaching concerning the value of childhood. "They were bringing to him little children that he might touch them, and the disciples rebuked them, but when Jesus saw it he was moved with indignation and said unto them: "Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." To receive one such child was to receive him. Than to offend one such it were better to have a millstone about one's neck and to be cast into the sea. One little child was like the hundredth sheep that the shepherd seeks on the mountain. The teaching of Jesus concerning childhood was a new note, clear, strong and beautiful, falling upon the ears of the world. No wonder all three of the Synoptic Gospels record these interesting incidents. No wonder the favorite address of the epistles of the beloved disciple John was "Little children," "My little children," and this may also explain the fact that the favorite figure in the catacombs was the Good Shepherd with a lamb in his arms.

But this young king teaches us another lesson. Not only did he begin at an early age to seek God, but he continued to seek after him. During the eighth year of his reign, he began to seek after the Lord God of David, his father, and in his twelfth year, when yet but a youth, he began to cleanse the nation of its idolatry.

In our work with children we need to guard against two errors. The one the natural offspring of the doctrine of depravity, which seems to teach that all children must grow up in sin, must experience a spiritual upheaval, and become children of God through some violent experience. We are not in great danger of coming under the influence of this error. The Jews taught that every child is a child of God, and needed only to recognize the relation and love and obey the Father.

Martin Luther's old teacher, contrary to the prevailing custom, went before his pupils with uncovered head. His associates remonstrated with him, telling him his students would lose respect for him if he continued to do so. "I can not do otherwise," said he. "Here are the men of the future—the statesmen, the merchants, the men of affairs." But Jesus said, "Here are the children of God; here are the associates of saints and angels; here are the heirs of immortality."

But the other error is not less serious, nor less prevalent. It is that of forcing the child into an experience that is unnatural, or that of asking him to confess to a feeling or a conviction which he is too young or too immature to have experienced. The methods often adopted to secure converts from the ranks of the young are not only crude and unnatural, but positively injurious. You might as well attempt to force open the petals of the bud to hasten the blossom as to force the religious feelings and convictions of a

NOT A MIRACLE

Just Plain Cause and Effect.

There are some quite remarkable things happening every day, which seem almost miraculous.

Some persons would not believe that a man could suffer from coffee drinking so severely as to cause spells of unconsciousness. And to find complete relief in changing from coffee to Postum is well worth recording.

"I used to be great coffee drinker, so much so that it was killing me by inches. My heart became so weak I would fall and lie unconscious for an hour at a time. The spells caught me sometimes two or three times a day.

"My friends, and even the doctor, told me it was drinking coffee that caused the trouble. I would not believe it, and still drank coffee until I could not leave my room.

"Then my doctor, who drinks Postum himself, persuaded me to stop coffee and try Postum. After much hesitation I concluded to try it. That was eight months ago. Since then I have had but few of those spells, none for more than four months.

"I feel better, sleep better and am better every way. I now drink nothing but Postum and touch no coffee, and as I am seventy years of age all my friends think the improvement quite remarkable."

"There's a reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

child by requiring him to do and say what has no meaning to him. The religious life of a child should grow as the physical and intellectual must grow. Even the Child Jesus grew, and he grew not only in stature, but in wisdom and in favor with God and man. This is the threefold development that every child should experience. We are impressed with the reticence of the evangelists concerning the long period of the life of Jesus from infancy to manhood. But we are more profoundly impressed with the character of the brief record that is given of this period. Aside from the account of the visit to the temple, the following statements are all we have: "The child grew, and waxed strong, filled with wisdom, and the grace of God was upon him." And this other: "And he went down with them and came to Nazareth and was subject to them, and Jesus advanced in wisdom and in stature and in favor with God and man." The Apocryphal Gospels are full of the sayings and doings of the child Jesus. They attribute all sorts of meaningless marvels to him. But the inspired record tells us only that he grew, just like every healthy, normal child should grow. What wisdom is that simple statement—"He increased in stature"! His muscles grew stronger, his body grew larger. He was gradually becoming a man in stature. That rejoices our hearts. We would not have him little always. And yet they seem some time to grow all too rapidly. Yesterday we were carrying them in our arms. To-day we pronounce a blessing upon them and bid them good-bye, and we then remember how little we have done for them. Yesterday they were in our Primary Class and our Junior Endeavor. To-day they are gone from both, and not into the higher grades, not into more advanced religious work, but adrift in the world, and that because as they grew in stature they did not grow in wisdom and in favor with God and man. But the Child Jesus advanced in wisdom. Not simply in knowledge. That is important. But wisdom means more than knowledge. Wisdom is of the heart rather than of the head. Solomon prayed for a wise and understanding heart. It is moral rather than intellectual discernment and strength. It was this wisdom which astonished the Doctors of the Law when Jesus was but twelve years of age. Not his knowledge of the letter; not what he had learned at the feet of the Rabbis. It was this deeper insight; this power of discernment. It is one of the peculiarities of Jesus' teaching which grips and holds us. "Moses said, Thou shalt not kill, but I say unto you, that he that hateth his brother without a cause is a murderer." "It has been said, Love thy neighbor and hate thine enemies, but I say unto you, love your enemies." But are we not all familiar with Jesus' use of this power with which he breathed into the Old Testament the breath of new life? This wisdom does not always accompany a brilliant intellect, or grow with the increase of scholarly attainment. It is possessed only by those of a pure heart, an humble spirit, a teachable disposition and a will to do—qualities which belong in a pre-eminent degree to childhood. No wonder Jesus said, "Except ye turn and become as little children ye can not enter the kingdom of heaven." Why may there not with the growth of mind and body be a corresponding growth in moral and spiritual discernment, an increasing sensitiveness to sin? Why should the soul be stained and the moral vision blurred by evil any more than that the body should be rendered ineffective by disease or accident, or the mind less vigorous by neglect or abuse? "Poor boy," says a sympathetic observer, as he points to a cripple carrying a withered arm, "entering upon life handicapped." "What a pity!" says another, as he speaks of one whose mind is not clear and strong. Perhaps no one is responsible for these defects. But there is a greater sorrow than either of these, and for this some one is responsible. Yonder goes one with a strong body and clear brain, but with blunted moral sensibilities, with imperfect moral vision. He sees men as trees walking. He calls good evil and evil good. This is the poor soul who is most of all to be pitied. It may be he should also be condemned; and yet another may be more responsible than he for his condition. Can such things be prevented? Not absolutely, not in every case. Life is so complex; a great many forces other than those furnished by the home and the church enter into these young lives, and something depends, of course, upon the material. Do the best we can, we sometimes fail. But nowhere will investment of time yield such large returns as here. We have seen every possible educational opportunity furnished young men, and yet to no purpose, and here and there we have seen one make his way up without the help of the college. Is a college training then worth while? The great and growing army of college men and women testify at least to our faith in the value of the college. Only recently I saw these interesting statistics. When our population was three million, we had four colleges and one hundred graduates annually. Now we have eighty million population, five hundred colleges, eighteen thousand graduates annually, and our schools growing at a rapid rate. We have not lost faith in education, because of the failure of some students. But what of our investment in the moral and religious training of children? Has it paid? When did it ever fail to pay? The growth in church membership in the United States during the 19th century from 7 per cent of the population to 30 per cent of the population was due more largely to the Sunday-school than to any other factor. When have the children ever failed us when we have called upon them? What of the $300,000 given to missions through the Junior Endeavor? What of the $800,000 given through the Foreign Society? What of the thousands given through the Home and State Society? What of the hundreds of thousands through the Sunday-school to the church and benevolent causes? What of the thousands through other channels for worthy purposes? That they have not given more is not their fault. The children put us to shame by their generosity—by their unselfishness. But they have given more than money. They have given their pure, young hearts, and clean, young lives to Jesus Christ and his church. Under the direction of Junior superintendents and Sunday-school teachers thousands and thousands, while yet young, not only began to seek after God, but like Josiah, the boy king, they found him and have continued to serve him. But they have done at least one thing more. They have taught their teachers many a valuable lesson. It has not all been giving upon your part, dear teachers and superintendents. You have received more abundantly than you have given, for the Master said: "Whoso receiveth one such child in my name, receiveth me." God has met you again and again in the little child until you may

CLOSING ADDRESS

By MRS. N. E. ATKINSON

The closing hour has come. Separate as we must, go back to our places at home or aoroad, nigh or far-off, the convention at New Orleans will not soon be forgotten. We shall not soon forget the hearty welcome we have received and the gracious thought for our comfort while we have been here. Friends of New Orleans, you have made us captive by your kindness. I do not say this as a mere graceful ceremony of acknowledgement, but as an expression of our appreciation of what you have done for us. We shall gratefully remember the Christian courtesy that has granted us the use of this beautiful house for the sessions of our convention. We have long admired the missionary zeal of the people who worship here, and if it should be that because of swifter feet or intenser purpose they should carry the gospel faster and farther than we, still would we admire and be glad. We shall not soon forget the new friends we have found here, and as we have met in our conferences and planned for the larger and better things we hope to accomplish, we have felt the strengthening power of fellowship in Christian service. Surely this fellowship will bring to us all larger love, higher purposes and fuller consecration. The spirit of this convention has been, for the past year, thankfulness; for the future, confident courage. In our annual report we have touched the shore of every land to which our missionaries have gone. As we have gathered up the reports of their work for the year, we have been thankful for the sure tokens of advance. For the seed sown so wisely we have received the hundredfold. We have been made thankful for the faithfulness and untiring zeal of those who have represented us in other lands, and for the strong towers of religious influence these patient, heroic toilers are rearing here and there in our schools and orphanages and native churches. We look forward confidently to the day when, through these, many habitations of cruelty shall be changed into sweet, Christian homes, musical with the prattle of merry children and the lullabys of happy mother love. Our home secretary tells us of extended territory and added organizations and increased circulation of missionary literature, for which we are most thankful. But some have toiled hard, have plowed deep into barren fields about them, have sown faithfully the good seed, and yet have seen no harvest. Because of what they have tried to do, these, also, share in our gratitude. Indeed, we are thankful for the warm beating hearts in this land and everywhere, who, some in one way, some in another, have lighted beacons that shall show the way to the Father's house. In our thankfulness we do not forget the purposes fulfilled, the prayers answered, the fresh young lives consecrated to the service of the Master, and, more than all else, the continual presence of him who has promised to be with us always. These things have kept hands and hearts at home strong and hopeful for the tasks that have come to us.

And now we turn from the past and ask, What of the future? For a time we have been on the mountain top. The Master has been with us, and we have felt ourselves encompassed about by a "great cloud of witnesses," men and women who have been called home in the midst of the conflict, but who can never lose their interest in all that concerns humanity. But it was not intended that we should dwell on such heights. There is the plain below—unbelief to rebuke and affliction to heal, and after these mountain meetings and high festivals of rapture and supreme hours of joy, we must go down to reaffirm and heal. The work of which we have heard at this convention, and of which we may in a measure be proud, is but the beginning of what we can and should do. Past achievements have but prepared the way. The time is ripe for a great forward movement. God does not allow his church to stand still. If it would follow his leading, if it would be saved from apathy and skepticism and decline, it must go forward—the whole church, not this or that missionary board only. Our field, as never before, is the whole round earth. The sky in our day is the roof of but one great family. We need no longer speak of "foreign lands" and "hermit nations." We have the open doors of all the world and since it is the Lord of all who has opened, we must go in and do his work. More than one hundred years ago, near the close of the Revolutionary war, when the fate of the infant nation seemed to hang in the balance, when homes were desolate, business paralyzed and hearts longing for peace, commissioners met in the city of Paris to arrange, if possible, terms of peace. There were in those days no steamship lines, no Atlantic cables and news came slowly. But one day, after long waiting, a ship was sighted coming up the Narrows. A great crowd from all over the city gathered at the pier and breathlessly waited for the first word that should come ashore. Nearer and nearer came the ship; soon a man was seen standing in the bow, then a hat was waved high in the air, while a voice cried out: "It is peace." A great shout went up from the multitude. Men turned and looked into each other's faces, grasped each other's hands, and with tears streaming down their cheeks repeated, "It is peace." They hastened from the pier, and before the shades of evening fell over the city there was not a home in New York that did not know it was peace. O, friends, there are millions of homes in this world to-day where they do not know "it is peace"; where they have never heard that Christ has made peace through his death on the cross. Shall we not go from this convention so refreshed and strengthened that we shall carry the news with far greater swiftness than ever before? As a church, we shall soon celebrate our Centennial. What opportunities, what helps and supplies, what possibilities of human love has our Father given us in these one hundred years! Would that we might, in grateful recognition of his goodness, make this last year of the century the crowning year, memorable forever because of more self consecration, more sacrifice of pride and luxury, more casting down of cherished idols, more giving of ourselves. Would that the spirit of God would so touch heart, and lips, and life that the latent powers of the entire church should be enlisted for the world's evangelization! Because but few now bear the burdens, the work languishes, and the cries for help and life from those who are in infinite peril must be in part unheeded. How we long for the time when Christian women shall be so interested in the work of the Lord that they shall be able to say to the claims of worldliness and ease: "We are doing a great work and can not come down." How we are waiting for, and longing hopefully to see, the silver and gold in the hands of Christian people consecrated to the cause and Kingdom of Jesus Christ! When that time shall come it will be the morning of a new creation.

But how is it possible to be interested in the millions in India and Africa whom we have never seen, and the millions yet unborn, ignorant, savage, repulsive, altogether unlovely? Looking from my window the other night, I saw a bright star framed in a tiny triangle of twigs. It was only a brilliant speck, just one of the many such that filled the summer sky. A leaf could have hidden it from my view, but seen through the telescope it was one of God's great suns. If we could, through the Master's eyes, see this vast nebulous mass of humanity, so vague and indistinct because of its denseness and distance, how would each individual stand out in all his personality as an immortal being for whom Christ died, and how would we, because of his constraining love, reach out helping hands even unto the ends of the earth! Does the evangelization of the world seem too great a task? Do we ask, "What are so few among so many"? Jesus Christ rolled the whole world upon the hearts of eleven men, bidding them to "preach the gospel to every creature." Was ever task seemingly more hopeless? But they faltered not. In obedience to their kingly leader, they tarry in Jerusalem for a time, and in less than sixty days three thousand souls acknowledge Jesus to be the Son of God and the Savior of the world. With this, the gospel begins to march down the ages. It is preached in cultured Greece and proud, imperial Rome, and men forgot their gods and bowed to the Nazarene. It swept down the years, and Britain's Druid groves were deserted. It pealed across the Atlantic and a western world was unveiled, and to its rock-bound coasts came freedom to worship God. It was carried toward the east, and gates of brass were unbarred, heathen temples began to crumble, and the seclusion of three thousand years was brought to an end in a day. Its echoes broke on the shores of Africa, and the everlasting light that shall flood with glory her waiting souls, shone in upon the dark continent. It has, like an angel of light, rolled away the stones from the graves of dead nations, bidding them to come forth to new life. Sometimes those who should have proclaimed it may have been dull and slow, perhaps unfaithful, but in all ages there have been some to tell the story, and to tell it so faithfully that to-day Christian truth permeates the atmosphere of the globe. The heart of Christendom, throbbing and intense, is driving the moral activities of the world. Secular minds may not discern it, but the deep, still current of affairs is toward making disciples of all nations. This is the clue that interprets events. By this we may know that, on the field and in the home land, the kingdom of God cometh. Let us, therefore, lift up our hearts and be of good courage. This old, unchanged and unchanging gospel still bears with it the promise and power of an omnipotent God. If only his children are true to their trust, some good day the world will see nations and kindred and tongues turning away from their superstitions and vain philosophies toward Christ, who is the truth—Christ who is the end and consummation of humanity.

Through all this convention we have been in the shadow of a great sorrow because of the home-going of our beloved friend and gifted leader, Helen E. Moses. It seems but fitting that we should, on this occasion, bring our tribute of love to the memory of her beautiful life and abundant service. One year ago she was with us in convention, taking part in our conferences and presiding over our public sessions, and we prayed and hoped that she might be with us in many more such gatherings. But ere the year was done the Father called her to a service nearer the throne. How we have missed her! Hers was an intensely moved and fully consecrated life. She possessed traits of character, elements of power, that made her distinguished among Christian workers, while her rare and beautiful gifts and graces of mind and soul made her to be greatly honored and dearly beloved. We think of her as our precious friend and trusted leader. She was more than that. She was a true, gentle, generous sister and helper of all in the common family of our common Father. In her promotion humanity has suffered a great loss. But God can make losses even like this "work together for good," and we may yet find bright lights and large blessings in these ways that now seem so dark. God brought her strong, helpful life into close union with ours, suffered it to remain a time, and then took it up far beyond our vision and our knowledge, where only faith can reach and hope can lead us. Sometimes we feel that we must have again her strong words of counsel and cheer, but no voice comes to us. When the Master takes his own into his Father's house he shuts the door, that none of the cares or ambitions of earth may enter there, and no glimpse of that home dishearten or unfit us for what of pilgrim life may yet remain. We know that she is with God, and that through all his eternal years he will hold her safe. But Mrs. Moses, though dead, yet speaketh—speaketh to us to-day in the example of her consecrated life, speaketh in the voices of hundreds to whom she has shown the way to higher and better service. Thus, while ministering in heaven without weariness, she is still teaching, elevating and fitting for heavenly companionship multitudes on earth who are wandering in darkness and sin. In this life that told so mightily for God, is there no lesson for us? Attracted by such devotion, with hope inspired by such a hope, is there not in many souls a longing desire, ere they pass the portals of glory, to set in motion, by gift or deed, some holy, helpful influence that shall never cease? Shall it not be that her faithful, self-denying service and too early death shall touch with fire new souls who shall forever make the work she loved their heart's desire?

But "great souls can never die," and though we see her not, yet do we feel that by the example of her life, so willingly offered up, by her inspiring messages so often given us, she is still leading us on to higher things, to nobler achievement.

"Lead on, dear heart, from loftier heights of power,
Still lead us on.
We would not falter in the crucial hour,
Though thou art gone.
God's will is ours though seen through blinding tears,
His father-heart is greater than our fears.

"Lead, chieftain, lead! the faithful follow still O'er paths of thorns,
Through bridgeless streams, thy guiding footprints, till
God sends the morn,
And we shall greet, when the last deep is crossed,
The tender face we miss, but have not lost."

THE YEAR WITH THE FOREIGN SOCIETY

We come to the close of the missionary year with deepest gratitude to the Lord of heaven and earth. Although the panic has affected the receipts, yet we have every reason for encouragement. The churches have made a remarkable showing. They have given nearly five thousand dollars more than last year. There has also been an increase in the number of contributing churches. The Sunday-schools show a small loss. The Endeavor societies show a gain. There has been a very decided gain in the number of individual offerings. The falling off has been in special gifts. Twenty-four churches have undertaken to support their own missionary on the field. This shows that the interest in the work has been deep and widespread. All things considered, this has been the best year in the history of the society.

As in other years, the society has had the cordial and generous support of Canada, England and Australia. This cooperation has been most helpful and most delightful. It makes the society international in its character. The work on the field has been carried on as in other years. The Gospel has been preached far and near, in the churches, and schools, along the streets, in the temples, in the theaters, on the trains, at the wells and on the steamships. The missionaries have gone on long tours and have brought the claims of the Christ to the attention of hundreds of thousands. The sick have been healed, the lame have been made to walk, the blind to see, the sufferings of the lepers have been relieved. The number treated exceeds 127,000. Educational work has been carried on in the kindergarten, in the primary and middle schools, and in the colleges. The Bible is a text-book in all these institutions. Both sexes are taught. Literary work has been carried on on a larger scale than ever before. Books, magazines, weekly papers, tracts and leaflets without number have been published. The printed page can go where no missionary has yet gone or can go. The different publications of the society are like leaves from the Tree of Life, and are for the healing of the nations.

In China one new station and four outstations have been opened. The colporteurs have sold gospels and tracts through wide regions. The college in Nanking has been full to overflowing. A large per cent of the pupils are Christians. Dr. Macklin received $3,000 from a Chinese friend to buy land adjoining the hospital. The most significant event of the year in Japan was the completion and dedication of the Woman's College in Tokyo. A high school department has been added. This has doubled the work of the teachers. Drake College has done good work. The graduates number twelve. A. W. Place has been asked to teach two hours a week in Waseda University, the subject being "Christianity and the Social Problem." In India a church has been finished and dedicated at Damoh. The Lathrop Cooley Bible College has been dedicated. This is a spacious and handsome building. The mission press does much outside work. This brings the mission into touch with many of the leading people in Jubbulpore. There is no limit to what could be done in the Philippines if there were men enough at hand to engage in the work. A large proportion of the converts serve as evangelists. A fine property has been secured in Manila. Africa enjoys a perennial Pentecost. There are now 451 members. These are scattered through fifty-four villages. There are fifty-two evangelists. The African church supports forty-six and friends at home the others. In the year, forty thousand brick have been made and twenty-five thousand feet of lumber have been sawed. The last word from the Congo is that at a distant station seven hundred inquirers are enrolled.

The Lord is working with his people now as in the first century. The government of Japan is now openly friendly to missions. The Emperor contributes to the work. Japan leads the Orient commercially, politically and educationally. China has entered upon an era of reform. That is most astonishing to those who know her best. China has made more progress in the last five years than any other nation in the world. There is in China now the greatest opportunity that the church has known since the Reformation, if not since Pentecost. In India the national spirit is asserting itself. This spirit will break down caste—the greatest hindrance to the triumph of the Gospel in India. The Congo Free State is passing from the hands of Leopold to Belgium. The Sultan of Turkey has become the liberator of his people. The Christians and Turks are rejoicing together. In all fields there is a rising tide of sentiment in favor of Christian union. No subject receives such personal, and persistent, and enthusiastic attention. There is a most earnest desire in the hearts of the missionaries that the denominationalism of the West shall not be fastened upon the East.

Among the most urgent needs are two training schools, one in Africa and one in the Philippines. In both missions there are many evangelists, but these are poorly equipped for the work. Their knowledge of the Scriptures is very limited. They must be taught and trained if they are to do their best. Homes and chapels are needed in many fields. Fifty thousand dollars could be wisely expended in supplying homes and other equipment for the missionaries now at work. The supreme need of the society is the need for believing prayer. United and believing prayer will avail much. A praying church will be an evangelistic church. It will be an omnipotent church. In order that the church may pray intelligently and believingly, Mission Study classes have been organized and much literature has been sold.

We are now entering upon the hundredth year of our history as a people. If the Centennial Celebration is to be all that is desired, the society must have a larger income than in any previous year. It may help us to know that two American societies are planning to raise six millions each a year. Others are planning to double their incomes, and others still to greatly increase them. The men in the churches are coming to realize as never before that this is a man's job, and they are giving on an unprecedented scale. Moreover, they are reading about the work and praying for it as never before. Some visit the fields that they may see the work with their own eyes and know what is being done and what remains to be done. They bring back only one report. They say that the task is great and that the difficulties are numerous and serious; but they also say, "Let us go up and possess the land, for we are well able to do this." By enlisting all the churches and the entire membership, we can do a work that will honor and please our Lord and that will send a thrill of gladness around the world. "We can do it if we will." Let us say, rather, "We can do it, and we will." The Lord help us to so say and to so do!

WHAT WE THINK OF THE CONVENTION

An Evangelist's Impression.

That which impressed me most about the convention was its completeness. It was a harmonious blending of business and beatitude, of youth and age, and of the first century and the twentieth. And from first to last I did not hear a discordant note. It was all sober, serious, imperative business for the Lord, executed by the finest body of Christian men and women that the earth contains. To contrast this with our conventions of thirty years ago is enough to thrill our hearts; and what will our Centennial be! A. Martin.

As Men of the South Feel.

After talking with many of the delegates who attended our great New Orleans convention, and especially with the more prominent of those of the south, I find that the consensus of opinion is that this is our greatest convention in its harmonious spirit and its great enthusiasm for greater things in the future, along all missionary lines. And we should not forget that every line of church work is missionary in its nature.

Woe unto that church which neglects to obey the command of our great Captain to preach the Gospel to every creature!

We feel that the pulse of temporal, political and spiritual unity among our people is beating and will beat stronger than ever before. We thank God that we know no section, but that we are one people with one common Leader, Jesus Christ, the divine Son of God, who is head over all things to the Church.

The South will do greater things in 1909 than ever before. We extend our hand, heart and purse to every good word and work that the prayer of Jesus may be speedily answered. John H. Wood.

After Years in China.

One could not help being impressed with the kindly, helpful attitude shown by the whole city toward the visitors, together with the thorough preparation shown by a small congregation.

The harmony in aims and purposes of the deliberative meetings was a feature that was pleasant. A key-note of "doing for Christ" seemed to dominate all, as it should.

Where so many things were good, it seems out of place to specially mention any one; yet one address that was considered commendable was the appeal of Secretary Corey for the missionary education of children. This was practical, because he showed material to use and illustrated methods rather than merely giving an address.

Another thing worthy of note was the common sense request of President Long that visitors recognize the duty of showing courtesy to the speakers by constant attendance and quiet attention.

If one criticism could be made it would be that, as is so usual, the devotional exercises were not attended as they should have been, nor was their value in putting mind and heart into tune with the messages to follow, emphasized. Jas. Butchart.

Our Budget

—It was a great convention.

—New Orleans was more than hospitable.

—We give our first report this week.

—Our regular convention number will be our next issue.

—Let no church fail to respond to the call on behalf of state missions. The first Sunday in November is the day of the offering, and it will be the first of our Centennial offerings. May it surpass all records!

—The Assistant Editor returned from New Orleans to find the editorial offices of The Christian-Evangelist badly damaged by fire. Many personal effects were lost that can not be replaced, and we regret, too, that many manuscripts, photographs, cuts and other material were destroyed.

—The Bible school at Weston, Mo., has a training class of forty-two members, and they will soon be ready for their first examinations. J. E. Wolfe is the minister.

—Ground has been broken for the new North Park Christian Church, of Indianapolis, where Austin Hunter ministers. It is to be a modern structure in every respect.

—T. A. Abbott is to dedicate the new Corinth church in Webster county, Mo., on the second Sunday in November. This is to be one of the state's Centennial churches.

—W. T. Moore has had a most cordial invitation from the brethren in Australia to take part in the Centennial celebration of the Churches of Christ in that country.

—J. R. Jolly, who has recently become associate minister of the First Church at Brooklyn, N. Y., writes: "The Christian-Evangelist is read carefully, and with joy every week."

—B. W. Huntsman has decided to remain in Adrian, Mich. A public reception was tendered to him and his wife in honor of this decision, and the people are rejoicing.

—A. Robert Miller has resigned at West Point, Ga., to take effect as soon as other work can be secured. Some account of what he has accomplished appeared in one of our recent numbers.

—Prof. C. M. Hughes, of Lexington, Ky., is singing for W. W. Weedon, of Blue Mound, Ill., in their meeting which began October 11. He can be had for a meeting during November or December.

—G. F. Bradford has been called indefinitely by his church at Van Alstyne, Texas, which is now in fine condition. Every department shows growth.

—O. H. Truman has been chosen minister at LaCrosse, Kan., for the fifth year. In our recent Kansas edition there was an error which spoke of his being at Lawrence, Kan.

—L. H. Otto had a pleasant vacation visit to Illinois and Missouri. He saw old friends at Columbia, and held a twelve days' meeting at Dripping Springs, at which there were thirty additions.

—The church at Windsor, Mo., which recently cancelled its mortgage of four years' standing, will hold their annual meeting with home forces beginning about November 15. W. A. Morrison is the minister.

—A M. Growden, after a year of enforced rest on account of malarial trouble, has accepted a call to El Paso, Ill. He has been staying in the Ozark region of northwest Arkansas, and recommends it to those seeking a beneficial climate.

—The Hancock Street Church of Christ, Everett, Mass., is making preparations for a protracted meeting in November, under the leadership of R. W. Stevens, of Toronto, Canada. The church is working energetically and hopefully.

—Thomas H. Conrad writes that "The Christian-Evangelist is always a pleasant and helpful messenger to my home. May God give you strength to continue for many years this line of work to which He has evidently called you."

—A newspaper clipping and a statement from the secretary of a special council of ministers gives us the information that Clifford Monroe, who has been pastor of churches at Batavia and Aurora, Ill., has been read out of the ministry.

—L. L. Carpenter is to dedicate new houses of worship at Delphi, Swayzee, Ind.; Hill City, Kan.; Jackson Center, O.; Diagonal, Ia.; Atlanta, Mo.; Altoona and Neodesha, Kan.; Arapahoe, Neb., and Findlay, Ill. He has several other promises at other places.

—Ernest C. Mobley, writing about the death of Sister William Durban, says that "Brother Durban's devotion to home and love for his wife were beautiful. She was his companion and helpmeet in the highest and best sense. How much he will miss her can never be told in words."

—J. H. Moore, of Taylorstown, Pa., preached at Willow Fork, Taylor County, West Va., on a recent Lord's day. He begins a meeting there on the first Sunday in November. He has resigned at Taylorstown. He thinks of locating in Tyler county, which is a good and needy field.

—Oscar Sweeney, of the Christian Church at Ocean Side, Cal., in renewing his subscription writes: "My appreciation of The Christian-Evangelist grows with the years. May its circulation increase and may the wisdom and strength of its veteran Editor be equal to the present emergency."

—Thomas G. Picton has tendered his resignation at Woodland, Cal., to take effect November 1. In view of the fact that his future plans are indefinite he had to refuse the office of State Superintendent of Bible schools for another year, which position he has held for the past five or six years.

—The brethren at Nevada, Ia., will build a $5,000 church, and will attach the old building to the new, giving a combined seating capacity of 500. B. F. Shoemaker looks for greater prospects in this county seat town when this property improvement is completed. There is a faithful membership of about 100.

—John Encell, of Richland, N. Y., writes, that after more than fifty years in the Christian ministry, he feels like saying to preachers, and especially to young preachers,

> "All speculations lay aside
> To tell of Jesus crucified.
> Tell of the Lamb for sinners slain,
> And preach salvation through His name."

—Pettis, Henry and Benton Counties, Mo., are getting ready to ship their annual carloads of provisions to the Orphans' Home at St. Louis. This will be done under the supervision of W. W. Herold, of Sedalia, and W. A. Morrison, of Windsor. Why can not other counties do the same? This would indeed be a godsend to the orphans.

—A. R. Adams writes that Enis Harvey, who united with the church at the beginning of Brother Adams' ministry in Canada, would like to find employment as minister of the gospel. He is a young married man, a close student, and has acceptably filled the pulpit as supply on several occasions. His address is Milestone, Sask., Canada.

—The congregation of the First Church, Cedar Rapids, Ia., hopes to complete its named loaned fund of $5,000 in the Church Extension work, and will doubtless easily accomplish this, seeing that before this year's offering was made nearly $4,500 had been contributed. G. B. VanArsdall is the minister. A canvass has been made of the church membership on subscriptions for a new building.

—We have announced the homecoming and diamond jubilee of the congregation at Lawrenceville, Ill. A $4,500 parsonage is just about completed there. Twenty-five hundred dollars worth of remodelling has been made on the church building, consisting in the addition of five class rooms, a pipe organ alcove, etc. This church is a living link in the foreign field. H. C. Holmes is its minister.

—Grant W. Speer and the Central church of Toledo, O., appear to be doing a great work. The building has been greatly improved. There is a good Sunday-school, at which 370 were present on a recent Lord's day, with an offering of $60. At the re-opening services $600 was contributed. This congregation is thoroughly missionary, has a mission Sunday-school, and conducts services at the jail, the infirmary and other mission stations.

—W. G. Loucks, minister of the Fourth Church of Christ, Akron, O., has published a little booklet of ten lessons called "Outline Studies in Personal Work." These are prepared for the purpose of helping Christian workers to be ready at all times to do the most effective service, and he will use it in connection with his own Teacher Training Course, and as an immediate preparation for his meeting which begins November 1. It is a very suggestive little booklet.

Those wanting music for Christmas or fall entertainments would do well to send to Fillmore Bros., 528 Elm street, Cincinnati, Ohio., for their new music catalog. They are just issuing an abundance of new, popular music that will have a large sale.

—M. G. Buckner, of Mansfield, O., we understand, is to succeed R. H. Crossfield at Owensboro, Ky.

—The twenty-fifth anniversary of the Colorado Christian Missionary Society is to be observed October 27-30, when the convention will meet with the Central Christian Church at Denver. A fine program has been arranged, and there ought to be a great gathering of the men and women of the Silver State on this occasion.

—On another page we give a write-up of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the Christian Church, of Paris, Mo. This was a very happy occasion. We are in receipt of two local papers, "The Paris Appeal" and "The Paris Mercury," both of which give a report covering several columns. Mr. Bodine, the Editor of "The Mercury," has written the account for The Christian-Evangelist.

—The attention of our St. Louis churches is earnestly called to the November offering. With us it is for both state and city, and the continuance of our city mission work depends largely upon the liberal response to this appeal. This work has won the hearty approval of those in our churches who are watching it. The new points are taking firm hold, and the support of our city evangelist is very largely derived from this offering.

—The West Fourth Avenue Chuch of Christ at Columbus, Ohio, has started into a strenuous campaign. There is to be a series of great revival meetings. Beginning October 4 was promotion in the Bible school, and a church rally with Teacher-Training graduation exercises in the evening. Different departments of the church have special attention given to them on succeeding Sundays. One of the aims is to clear the church of the building debt. Walter Mansell is the minister.

—C. R. L. Vawter, who has been located at Assumption, Ill., during the summer, visited Moweaqua, an adjacent town, speaking three nights, and having fifty people respond—all adults but one. There were forty confessions. He writes that these splendid results are not due to him, but to the work of an earnest church with a tireless spiritual minister, D. G. Dungan, son of D. R. Dungan. There have been seventy additions at Assumption this summer. Brother Vawter will re-enter the evangelistic field.

—J. M. Morris, superintendent of the Benevolent Association work at Eugene, Ore., writes that this is to be enlarged at once. A splendid property worth fully $10,000 has been added, free of debt, to the National Benevolent Association. A Christian home for aged Disciples was opened on January 15, and there are now three sisters in the home. A move will soon be made into a larger building, and an appeal is made for help to furnish more rooms and pay necessary expenses. The address of Brother Morris is 324 East 12th St.

—M. L. Anthony is entering on evangelistic work again, and is in his first meeting at Pearl, Pike Co., Ill. Some twenty-two years ago he held a meeting there, resulting in 116 additions. At that time the M. E. Church was used. Four years later he held a four weeks' meeting with 107 accessions. He hopes for good results in the revival he has just entered upon. F. E. Meaders, of Canton, Mo, is the pastor. Brother Anthony will be ready for another meeting to follow this. His permanent address is L. B. 904, Aurora, Mo.

—The place of meeting of the joint congress of Baptists, Free Baptists and Disciples has been changed. Instead of the Hyde Park Baptist Church, Chicago, the session will be held in the Memorial Church of Christ, Oakwood boulevard, near Cottage Grove avenue. The date remains the same, November 10-11-12. In another column we publish the program. We anticipate that this will be one of the most interesting meetings ever held by our brotherhood. Heretofore we have discussed these questions largely among ourselves. But now our brethren of other bodies will have equal opportunities on the floor of the convention with our own speakers. We hope every one will attend this congress. We have been pleading the cause of union, and to fail to be represented in large numbers on such an occasion as is before us will be a sad commentary on our professions.

—J. K. Ballou is approaching the close of his fourth year of ministry for the First Christian Church at Sioux City, Ia. During this time the remainder of the debt on the new site was paid, and a beautiful building erected. The register shows that two-thirds of the present membership have united with the congregation during this pastorate, Sioux City being considered a difficult field for a long time, but the conditions are now bright for future work. While Brother Ballou has a call to remain indefinitely, it is expected that he will make a change at the close of the present year.

—Charles A. Young has been speaking twice a day for two weeks at Watsonville, Cal., in a meeting with the church of which D. F. Stafford is pastor. In the course of a personal letter to the Editor, lamenting his illness, Brother Young gives chief credit for the success of the meeting to Brother Stafford, who, he says, is a born leader. The local paper gives large space to the revival services, and an account of the clearing off of the debt of $10,000, which has been hanging over the building since its erection four years ago. The original cost of the church was $40,000. Brother Stafford went to Watsonville last February from Louisville, Ky. One of his first duties was to set about the removal of this debt, and he secured the services of Brother Young, who was assisted in the music by Prof. E. Misner. The church has been crowded during the meetings, and when an appeal came for the money, it was raised in a short time. This is the fourth Christian church building that has been erected in Watsonville. The one preceding this having been destroyed by fire four years ago. It is a handsome building, and planned carefully for the purpose of the work.

—Attention is called to the program of the joint congress of Baptists, Free Baptists and Disciples, to be held in Chicago, November 10-11-12; also, to the change in the place of meeting as stated in the communication from Brother Van Arsdall. The program will indicate the importance of the meeting and the interest that is likely to be awakened. The notice has been so short, and the congress coming so soon after our national convention, it will require some special effort on the part of our people to be fairly represented in this joint congress. We trust, however, that our ministers especially, and others, so far as possible, will make a special effort to attend, so that it may not be thought by our brethren of the other bodies in attendance that we are indifferent to a meeting of this character. We sincerely hope that the discussions may be of such character and in such spirit as will bind the three religious bodies mentioned in bonds of closer fraternity and co-operation. The matter of organic unity may be left to the developments of the future, under the guiding providence of God.

THE TIME IS SHORT

Most of the real live Bible Schools have long ago ordered supplies for Children's Day for Home Missions. Hundreds of them are preparing the special program, and making ready for a great day. But some have not yet fallen into line. No school can afford to miss the opportunity in this great day. It is late to prepare the full program. But the best songs can be learned in the next few weeks. Send for the programs right away. Order some Missionary Banks and distribute them among the classes. Make a short sharp, vigorous campaign. Talk Home Missions. Pray Home Missions. When November 22nd comes observe the day with all the other schools of the brotherhood. Give everybody in the school a chance to make an offering. Sing Home Missionary songs. Have the children recite appropriately. Have a short, bristling address on Home Missions from the minister. Pray for America and for the Home Missionaries all over America.

Church Extension Receipts.

Comparative statement for the first seven days of October, 1908, as compared with the same period last year.

	Churches.	Individuals.
For last year	$1,684 62	$386 78
For this year	2,236 28	686 32
A gain of	$ 551 66	$299 54

It will be noted that we have gained during the first week of October $551.66 from the churches, and we have also gained 53 in the number of contributing churches. We have also gained $299.54 from individual gifts. More churches ordered supplies this year than ever before, and we confidently expect to receive offerings from those who have not yet remitted. Send remittances promptly, because October receipts will be published with our Annual Report. Remit to G. W. Muckley, Cor. Sec., 500 Water Works Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

Since the last report of the Board of Church Extension we have received seven gifts on the annuity plan. Five hundred dollars from a friend in Missouri; $200 from a friend in Ohio; $500 each from friends in Michigan; $500 from Brother J. P. Roe, of Iowa, and two others of $700 and $800 each. This makes $3,700 received on the annuity plan during the last two weeks. This last is the 235th gift to Church Extension on the annuity plan. We hope to hear from many other friends. Remember that annuity money builds churches like the other fund. For information concerning this plan address G. W. Muckley, Cor. Sec., 500 Water Works Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

Bible School Mission Rallies.

Right in line with the campaign for state missions is the annual rally now preparing in the Bible schools for state missions. It is exceedingly appropriate that these two great common interests should receive proportionate emphasis in both the great departments of congregational activity at practically the same time. The state offering is taken the first Lord's day in November in all the churches.

Children's Day for Home Missions is celebrated in all the Bible schools the Lord's day before Thanksgiving. The offering from Children's day is equally divided with the state boards, making the month's celebration emphatically a home missionary day, and in a nearer sense a state missionary day. Both days ought to be observed upon the days generally recognized wherever at all possible. It is a good thing to practice Christian unity in every way possible among ourselves. There is a fine inspiration in keeping step with the brotherhood.

As We Go to Press.

Special to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST

St. Louis, Mo., October 18.—Great meeting at Fourth Church yesterday. Twenty-six additions—34 in first eight days, with Wilhite and Gates as evangelists; church and community deeply moved. Great victory in sight.—E. T. McFarland.

DIAMOND JUBILEE AT PARIS, MISSOURI

By P. V. BODINE

On March 10, 1833, a little band of pioneers, composed of Joseph Forman and wife, John Shoot and wife, J. C. Fox and J. R. Abbernathy, assisted by Thomas McBride, who came over from the old Red Top meeting house in Boone county, organized the Paris Christian Church. The first pastor for this devoted little band was Marcus P. Willis, who was followed by such pioneers as Henry Thomas, Peter Donan, Alfred Wilson and Alexander Procter, men among the ablest connected with the early movement in this state. These in turn were followed by others, many of them still living, equally as consecrated in the Master's cause—A. H. Rice, J. W. Mountjoy, H. B. Davis, R. D. Cotton, S.McDaniel, T. W. Pinkerton, L. H. Stine, W. N. Briney, J. H. Wright, J. R. Perkins and Frank W. Allen, the present pastor. The first church building was erected of brick at the foot of Marion street, and is now occupied by Postmaster Flanders as his home. The second was built on the present site in 1848 and was replaced by the present structure at a cost of $12,000 in 1883. Plans are being perfected to erect a $30,000 building next year.

From the humble beginning in 1833 has grown one of the foremost church bodies in the state. The history of the congregation is the history of the town and the county, and its traditions are the romances, at once tender and beautiful, of the lives of devout men and women, the story of a race, which, with a Bible in one hand and an ax in the other, subdued the great Valley and transformed it from a wilderness into an empire.

From the beginning, and in the face of the intense opposition that greeted the reform movement, the Paris church thrived. Within a few years, comparatively, it became one of the leading and most potential bodies of Disciples in the state. It made history fast, and, first and last, sat at the feet of all the noted leaders of the reform movement. The great Campbell himself was here twice in the forties, and there are yet living men and women who remember the prophetic and powerful preaching of the giant Scotsman, his magnetism and commanding personal presence. Raccoon John Smith mentions the Paris church in his letters, and Moses E. Lard and the brilliant Hopson held meetings for it. Jacob Creath, D. Pat Henderson and other noted preachers conducted revivals for it, and under the impetus of their enthusiasm the church started in upon that wonderful work that has resulted in so much genuine good to the brotherhood in this state. There was a hegira of its young men to historic Bethany, and in a short time it began upon its self-imposed task of educating ministers. It gave to the brotherhood the great and saintly Procter, whom Joseph Pulitzer pronounced the biggest preacher of modern Christendom, and upon the roster of its beneficences in this direction are the names of some of the best-known preachers in the church at the present time. The educational movement resulted in bequests by Cephus Fox and Joseph Smith, two genuine saints of the long ago, and the trust fund for this purpose now amounts to $12,000, the interest on $5,000 of which, for five years, was recently turned over to the Bible college at Columbia. The war, with its bitterness, came on, and herein is written the most beautiful page in the history of the Paris church. Its young men rode off to do battle on one side or the other, and its old men remained to pray for their safe return, some asking divine favor for the arms of the Union, and some that victory might rest with the scarred hosts of the Confederacy. Yet, no political difference was allowed to break the tie of love between either young or old, and the saintly pastor, Alexander Procter, led his flock through those terrible years free of rancor and hatred. Never was more beautiful story told than that which fell from the lips of S. S. Bassett about the love between those two brethren in Christ, Thomas Crutcher and Cephus Fox, the former intensely southern and the latter vigorously pro-Union. When the southern soldiers came Crutcher's first care was for "Brother Fox," and when the Union troops came the latter's first care was for "Brother Crutcher."

It was with such traditions in mind that the church has celebrated its 75th anniversary, and the occasion, by reason of its tender and holy associations, will never be forgotten by those present. The event was the signal for a home-coming on the part of former members from every direction, and when the afternoon session began the church was filled. W. H. Alexander delivered a brief address of welcome and was followed by S. S. Bassett in a review of the church's history. Next came Frank Waller Allen, the minister, with an inspiring appeal for the future and he, in turn, was followed by W. T. Ragland on "The call of the church for men." Dr. Richmond offered congratulations in behalf of the other churches of the city, and when the old pastors were called, S. McDaniel, loved by young and old at Paris, made a feeling response.

At 5 o'clock the large crowd was treated to a bounteous dinner, served by the ladies of the church in the Meyers building on Main street, and in the evening the church was packed. The musical program arranged by the choir, including a solo by Hugh Bridgford, was especially beautiful, and put the audience in a happy frame of mind for the splendid address of T. P. Haley, of Kansas City, which followed. Mr. Haley is the patriarch of the brotherhood in Missouri, and has always been a favorite at Paris. His address was among the most enjoyable made. A. W. Kokendoffer followed in an inspirational address on church vision and the occasion closed with a feeling on the part of all present that their spiritual life had been given a genuine uplift. To the young pastor, viewing the happy results of months of unremitting labor, it must have been especially gratifying. If his $30,000 "dream church" did not take on material proportions as the big crowd filed out, it was not the fault of the enthusiasm engendered.

KEUKA COLLEGE—AN OPPORTUNITY FOR DISCIPLES

For some months committees from the Free Baptists and Disciples have been meeting to discuss ways and means of entering upon a plan of joint operation of Keuka College, and after several conferences a plan of co-operation, indorsed by the board of managers of the New York Christian Missionary Society, was effected.

Keuka College is an institution of higher learning located on Keuka Lake, Yates county, New York. It was established by the Free Baptists under the leadership of the late Dr. George H. Ball, in 1890, and has been maintained as Christian College ever since. It aims to furnish a regular preparatory and collegiate course of instruction, and upon examinations under the supervision of the New York state board of regents, to grant the degree A. B.

The location of the college is one of great natural beauty and the best of environment. It was while he was pastor of the Hudson Street Free Baptist Church of Pueblo that Dr. Ball, visiting the spot, said: "This is the place which God Almighty has prepared for a Christian school. God helping me I propose here to found a school where young men and women of moderate means may get a thorough education under Christian influences." The college was accordingly organized and acquired possession of 160 acres of land which was laid out in city lots. A campus of 18 acres lying on the lake front was set aside and the main building erected thereon. It is a five-story brick structure 200x65 feet, erected at a cost of $90,000. Besides the class rooms, chapel and lecture halls it contains parlors and dormitory accommodations for 12 students, while in the basement is a dining hall large enough to care for 100, kitchen, pantry and two large boilers for heating the plant. A pumping plant and a frame gymnasium comprise the other buildings of the college.

About the college has grown up a distinctive college settlement of some sixty houses. These have all been built upon lots purchased from the college, while others yet unsold have the proceeds applied to the college endowment. This settlement, Keuka Park, is connected with Penn Yan, four miles distant, by trolley line, and in summer by lake steamers.

The entire property of the college is worth to-day about $125,000 at a conservative estimate, while the regents of the state value it at $200,000. This is entirely free from any debt. Besides there is an endowment of $12,500, but against this there is an outstanding obligation of $8,000. This obligation, the holder promises, will be cancelled when this co-operative plan becomes operative.

The faculty last year consisted of fourteen, with a student body of 125. This is the lowest it has been for several years, the normal attendance being about 200.

There are in the Central Association of Free Baptists, which comprises all of New York State excepting Greater New York, besides the northeastern portion of Pennsylvania, about 10,000 communicants, while in the same territory the Disciples have about the same number. Add to these our New England brethren, and the combined constituency of the college would be upward of 20,000. In points of doctrine and practice, the two bodies are close akin, and Dr. Ball did his utmost to effect this union.

Realizing these facts, and appreciating that no single agency would foster that intimate acquaintanceship better than an institution of learning, the request of the Free Baptists for co-operation in maintaining the college was heeded. They felt the need of both students and money, and since we had no college east of Hiram or Bethany, it seemed to offer an opportunity long desired. Accordingly the following plan was agreed upon:

1. That the Disciples of Christ co-operate in the management of Keuka College.

2. That the Disciples of Christ be given the privilege of naming four trustees immediately, and that, as other vacancies occur on the board, the number be increased as expedient, until they shall equal the representation of the Free Baptists. (Under present composition this gives us nine trustees).

3. That the Disciples of Christ be given at least one representative on the executive committee, and that they be duly represented in the personnel of the faculty.

4. That the Disciples of Christ co-operate with the college in providing proper support and in conducting a joint canvass for $100,000 additional endowment, the income only of which is to be used for the maintenance of the college.

5. That the Disciples of Christ secure for the college a suitable man to enter upon field service, to aid in securing students and money for the institution.

It is suggested, on behalf of the Free Baptists, that the first president of the college under the new arrangement be named by the Disciples of Christ; and it is their desire that a Biblical department be established under his direction.

The first steps in the working out of the new plan occurred September 3, when the trustees met at the college and elected the following brethren to fill the vacancies on that board: S. M. Hunt, Springfield, Mass.; Robert Stewart, Rochester, N. Y.; Jos. A. Serena, Syracuse, N. Y.; L. C. McPherson, Wellsville, N. Y. The latter was also elected a member of the executive committee. L. C. McPherson was chosen vice-president and field secretary, to enter upon his duties February 1.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS.

Pasadena Revival and Dedication.

The work accomplished by Charles Reign Scoville and his helpers in Pasadena, Cal., deserves to be pronounced monumental.

The company is a well-nigh perfect organization for the work it proposes to do. Each member is an expert in his or her part of the work. They are men and women of rare spirits. Brother Ullom's conduct of the opening part of the meetings, his expositions of Scripture, his personal work during the invitations and from house to house, and in it all his deep spirituality and unquestioned consecration, make him a great power and a great blessing. Mrs. Ullom's work is of the same character and is done in the same spirit. Her beautiful simplicity and manifest sincerity and winsome personality make her services indispensable.

As a leader of song, Jesse Van Camp is magnetic and inspiring, and as a soloist he is very impressive and fascinating. Van Camp's work contributed immensely to the results of the meeting.

Scoville would not be Scoville without Mrs. Scoville. She more than seconds all his work. She is a leader. Her personal work is too effective to be explained, even when account is taken of the graciousness of her manner, her many and rare accomplishments, her rich and well-cultivated voice, and her altogether charming personality.

Hundreds of efforts have been made to describe Brother Scoville and explain his success. I do not intend to add another to the failures already recorded. No one claims to have done justice to the evangelist's masterful generalship, the effectiveness of his methods and the power of his preaching. After all is said about methods, it is Scoville himself and his preaching that account for the marvelous results. His attacks upon sin are fierce and fearless. His appeals to the conscience are powerful. His exhortations are almost and, in multitudes of cases, altogether irresistible. He preaches the Word, and his confidence in the Word of God is sublime. And, best of all, Scoville is a good man, full of the Holy Spirit and faith.

It was a meeting that met; a revival that revived. There were fifty-six additions the first day and exactly the same number the last day. There were 351 who accepted the invitation. It was a season of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. It has been the desire of my life to be in such a meeting. It is now my desire to be in another. The work was thorough, and everything possible was done to make it permanent. The "fellowship meeting" on the last Sunday afternoon was of inestimable value. It was worth all the entire meeting cost, if one should speak in such a way. The church has been put forward in Pasadena many years.

We have a plant costing about $85,000. There is no better location in the city. Leading men here pronounced the building one of the most beautiful and satisfactory in the United States. We began to build in prosperous times. We finished in the midst of the financial depression that was experienced all over the country. A record ought to be made of the wisdom manifested by those who had the leadership of the great enterprise and the spirit of sacrifice that characterized the membership of the church. On two different occasions the church had given, to their own astonishment and the astonishment of the city. We decided that it was wise and fair to carry some part of our indebtedness as a loan secured by mortgage. In addition to this amount, $14,000 more was needed, and that amount was asked for on dedication day. Over $16,000 was pledged. It was the great day of the feast. It was a happy and "hilarious" occasion. Brother Scoville is as great as a church dedicator as he is as an evangelist.

It was a great pleasure to have Sumner T. Martin here on dedication day. He remained several days and rendered great service in the meetings.

C. C. Chapman was an inspiring figure in the pulpit, dedication morning and afternoon. Brother Chapman has endeared himself in many ways to this and all our churches in Southern California. It would not be inappropriate to call him the father of our great forward movement in Pasadena. His counsel has been invaluable. His giving inspired others to give. On the two former occasions when appeals were made for pledges for the new church, Brother Chapman was master of ceremonies. The church owes to C. C. Chapman a debt we do not know how to pay. He was chairman of the afternoon meeting on dedication day. Congratulatory remarks were made by Rev. Albert Hotcher Smith, of the First Baptist Church, Brethren A. C. Smither, J. W. Utter, Grant K. Lewis, W. H. Hanna, of Manila, S. T. Martin and Scoville.

Winnipeg, Man.

Brother Grabill, of Steubenville, O., gave us the pleasure of his company for one day, recently. He was delighted with Winnipeg. He has spent three Sundays preaching for the church at Portage la Prairie and compliments the brethren by saying that he had never seen more representative congregations anywhere. Brother Grabill has filled three important charges in Ohio. He was for nine years in Cleveland. Brother Saunders, of Vancouver, will known to the United States as a singing evangelist, spent September 18 with us. He was en route to Ontario to attend the bedside of his father, who was very ill. Brother Saunders thinks the coast scenery of British Columbia is unsurpassed in all the world, but his hope for our cause is not very encouraging.—A. McMillan has done a splendid constructive work at Yellow Grass, Sask. He took a new organization and led it to build a substantial house of worship, which was dedicated September 20. J. A. L. Romig assisted in the dedicatory services. This section of the country possesses the thrilling romance so thrillingly told by Ralph Connor in his book, "The Prospector." Ernest C. Nicholson, who did such a fine work at Redwood Falls during the past five years, gave us a pleasant visit September 19. Unfortunately Bro. Nicholson was obliged to give up the work at Redwood Falls because of throat trouble. He is supplying at Portage la Prairie at the present time, and we hope that this Canadian climate will restore his voice and that he will remain permanently with us. —I am sorry to announce the death of Sister Hayden, wife of M. P. Hayden. Sister Hayden had been a helpless invalid for more than eighteen months.—Winnipeg gave $83.50 to Church Extension. In deciding to remain with the work here, I have moved into my new home. Last Thursday night the lightning flashed, the thunder roared, and the rain poured, but the members came. We had been to dinner with our Carthage friends, Drs. Charles and Mary Cornelius, and on returning found the house lighted and the members of the congregation in possession. After an evening of pleasure and good things to eat, they departed, leaving four fine pieces of furniture, mission style. Mrs. Mobley and I feel that the strength of this material as a broad foundation assures the erection of a great spiritual superstructure commensurate with our plea and in keeping with the wonderful progress of this marvelous city. Our remaining was made possible by the very liberal help of the American Society.

We must have a large church in the gateway of this golden west. When we have exhausted all our means at home we expect to come to our brotherhood with a call that will magnetize every conscientious soul.

Winnipeg, Man. Ernest C. Mobley.

Texas Christian University.

Texas Christian University has started off its thirty-fifth year under most favorable conditions. The enrollment is considerably larger than it was last year, and indications point to the most successful session in the history of the school.

Prof. E. C. Snow, of the department of mathematics, has resigned to give closer attention to landed interests in South Texas. Prof. C. I. Alexander succeeds him. Prof. Bruce McCully, of the department of English, resigned to take advanced studies in Chicago and Harvard. Prof. Shirley Graves now has the work of that department. The crowded conditions in the oratory, music and academy departments have required the selection of assistants to accommodate the classes.

Mr. Howell G. Knight, of Ballinger, Texas, has been elected editor-in-chief of the "Horned Frog," the year book published by the senior class. Bertram H. Bloor, of Manor, Texas, has been chosen business manager.

The University Sunday-school, with Dan Rogers as superintendent, is making excellent progress. The orchestra and young men's chorus furnish the Sunday-school music.

The board of trustees, at their recent meeting, made an appropriation for the purpose of meeting part of the salary of a minister for the University church, who is to devote his entire time to the religious welfare of the institution.

The living link missionaries of the Tabernacle Church of Christ, Columbus, Ind., will be continued. We support two in the foreign field and give $750 to the work in Oklahoma, our representative in this field being S. R. Hawkins. The Church Extension offering was more than $400, the best in the history of the church. When we consider the financial condition just now and the many who have been employed but a part of their time, we feel grateful for the results. Fred Doeller, the chairman of the board of missions, is largely responsible for our success. He is intensely enthusiastic on the subject of missions and was untiring in his co-operation with the minister in securing the amounts. He supports a missionary in the home field himself. ——Just at this time we are in the throes of an epidemic of diphtheria, a number of cases being in our flock. The Bible-schools will be closed.——The oldest daughter of Brother and Sister Will A. Harding died from the effects of diphtheria Wednesday. The mother is sick also with the disease.

The temperance people of this state rejoice over the great victory won in the special session of the legislature which gave us local option. Governor Frank Hanley, one of the clean and courageous governors of our nation, made it possible.

J. A. Lord will assist in our meeting in January.——Brother Moss has resigned at Franklin to take work in Tennessee.——Harley Jackson has resigned at Seymour and has entered the political field. He is candidate on the Republican ticket for the legislature.——Wm. Chapple, our county evangelist, is doing special evangelistic work for the state board. He is an energetic worker and loyal to the gospel.——J. A. Spencer is succeeding splendidly at Bloomfield.——W. G. Johnston is having fine audiences at Greensburg, and the saloon element and the worldly class in the church are hearing some strong discourses against the evils. He is a fearless speaker. ——Brother Milner is doing a most excellent work in Greenwood. Recently he conducted a good meeting in Kentucky.——D. L. Milligan has been called for another year to serve the church at Scottsburg.

Columbus, Ind. W. H. Book.

Southern California and Arizona.

John T. Stivers has entered his second year of splendid service as an evangelist among our churches. He is a man of great faith and dauntless courage and dares to tackle the hard places. His style is plain, direct and earnest. He believes in the Old Book and faithfully proclaims its "facts to be believed, commands to be obeyed and promises to be enjoyed." At this writing he is three weeks in a meeting at Corona with sixteen added. There is much interest in this difficult field and the outlook is bright.——E. J. Harlow has been called to the work and entered on it at once.——Brother Stivers is scheduled for his next meeting at Budlong Church, Los Angeles, where J. W. Maddux ministers. From there he goes to Oxnard, and then to Figueroa Boulevard, Los Angeles. These are all missions of the A. C. M. S., under our evangelizing board. Our prayer is that his work will leave each point self-supporting. ——W. E. Spicer, minister at Bisbee, Ariz., reports a Cradle Roll of 245 in his Bible school. Evidently he is growing a great church. He is beginning in time and at the right place. Assisted by Mrs. A. B. Carpenter, of Douglas, he recently organized an auxiliary to the C. W. B. M. He is planning a special meeting with home forces for November.——Vigorous work has been done during even the heated term by J. Perry Conder at Tucson. He has passed the experimental stage of his pastorate, and his home is now established there. At great sacrifice, the brethren have built a tabernacle on a leased lot, and with the assistance of our missionary society Victor W. Dorris of Washington began a meeting the second Sunday of October.——The secretary, assisted by the Arizona committee, of which W. H. Salyer is chairman, is calling a convention of their churches in Arizona to meet at Tucson, November 25-27, at which time the Thanksgiving rates prevail on the railroads.——S. M. Martin has this month been holding his second series of evangelistic meetings with the Naomi Avenue Church, Los Angeles, W. S. Meyers, minister. Our last report was of 160 additions.——F. M. Dowling returned refulgent and rejuvenated after six weeks spent in camp life in Little Bear Valley. He left for the New Orleans convention to make a great address on "Home Missions." During his absence his pulpit was supplied by H. H. Guy; Mrs. L. J. McConnell, and Grant K. Lewis.——J. W. Utter, associate minister at Broadway, Los Angeles, spent his vacation in a unique way. With the advice, consent and help of A. K. Crawford, of Glendale, he rented a hall in that thriving suburb and began a meeting, which is resulting in the organization of a new church. Already the charter contains seventy names and the meeting continues indefinitely.——The annual ministerial migration in southern California is now at full tide.——Volney Johnson has returned to Texas and Walter L. Martin, of Boyle Heights, takes up the work that he left at University Heights, San Diego.——E. E. Smith is with the church at Ventura, and L. W. Klinker is the new preacher at El Monte.——W. E. Adams has closed his ministry at Redlands. If opportunity offers, he will remain on the coast.——Cal Ogburn has resigned his work at Bakersfield and established his home in Los Angeles. He will do the work of an evangelist or locate as permanent minister.——

Notes from Fulton, Mo.

On Lord's day, September 20, I had the unusual task of speaking to the young women of the college from which Mrs. Maxey graduated, and also to make the special appeal to the church for church extension.

On Tuesday morning Mrs. Maxey and I attended the formal chapel opening of William Woods College for Young Women. I knew President Jones some years ago before he was called to the position, and the visit was pleasant in more ways than one. I was thrilled with the wonderful development of this college. The high class of work done here, and the very great esteem in which President Jones is held by the people, and has been for many years, more than ever impresses me with the separate school for young women as the best plan for the proper education and culture of the gentler sex. William Woods is equipped well and has a splendid corps of teachers. I say these things merely to commend as I have occasion, and to advise from observation and experience. I have spent six years in one university and four in another, both of which are co-educational, and after having married a young woman who was educated in a separate school for young women, and after further observing, I have come to the conclusion that for a great many reasons the separate school is the best.

R. Tibbs Maxey.

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism," or "by letter."

Arkansas.

Germania, Oct. 7.—I had six days' time before the convention and came here to preach that long. But the meeting will not let us close. The whole community is awakened. Fifteen additions so far, several of them Baptists and practically the entire Baptist church here will probably join before the close of this week. One Methodist preacher was among those added last night.—D. T. Stanley, evangelist.

Arkadelphia, Oct. 6.—State Evangelist J. J. Taylor and wife held a meeting for us at Amity, closing last Lord's day night. There were 21 additions—12 by statement, four by baptism, four from other religious bodies and one reclaimed. The Bible school was more than doubled, the church put in good working order, and money raised for half time preaching. Amity has been a very weak point, but is now in condition for good work.—E. S. Allhands.

Canada.

Milestone, Sask., Oct. 12.—Three young people made the good confession and will be baptized at my closing service Sunday night.—A. R. Adams.

District of Columbia.

Washington, Oct. 7.—Ministers' Association of District of Columbia met at Vermont Avenue Church, October 5. Those present were Brothers Power, Miller, Oram, Stuart, Dew and Smith. Brother Dew was elected president and Brother Smith secetary for the coming year. Additions reported: H. Street, one by statement; Whitney Avenue, one reclaimed, and one by confession and baptism; Fifteenth Street, one by confession and baptism; Ninth Street, four by letter.—Secretary.

Colorado.

Fort Morgan, Oct. 12.—Good services yesterday—two by letter and three by confession. Our Bible school is gradually growing, and all departments of the church work encouraging.—Z. Moore.

Iowa.

Missouri Valley, Oct. 15.—William J. Lockhart and J. P. Garmong recently closed a 19-day meeting with the mission church here. There were 53 additions—mostly adults and parents. It was a great meeting for us, and the church is very grateful to these evangelists who led us to the victory. Evangelist Lockhart is a strong man—his sermons and personal work convict men of sin and of the duty to stand for Christ now.—Murvill C. Hutchinson.

Perry, Oct. 9.—One by confession and two by statement the past two Sundays. We have succeeded in raising a debt of $2,000 on our church building and plan to owe nothing but love by January 1, 1909.—R. H. Ingram.

Indiana.

Flora, Oct. 12.—Our work here is getting along very nicely. I baptized two at the close of the services last night. The attendance at all the services is improving since the warm weather is over, and good interest prevails throughout.—F. L. Davis.

LaFontaine, Oct. 9.—One baptism since last report. Our Sunday-school is about three times as large as it was when I came. Average attendance 151 for past year. Everything is in good shape.—A. L. Martin.

Illinois.

Ludlow, Oct. 12.—Closed the first week of our meeting with six confessions and crowded house. Interest intense. Have been working with home forces, but Loretta Collins, of Normal, Ill., takes charge of music to-day. We are expecting great things.—J. Frank Hollingsworth.

Watseka, Oct. 12.—About three months ago Ellmore Sinclair, of St. Thomas, Canada, began to labor with us as our minister. During this time 25 have been added to the membership at regular services. Our Sunday-school attendance is around 200, the best ever, all departments are working in harmony and the church attendance was never better. On October 18 Evangelist Wrentmore, with his singer, Mrs. Calvert, will begin a meeting for us. Great results are expected.—John L. Smiley, president board.

Latham, Oct. 10.—During September there were seven added to this congregation by letter. The offering for church extension was received, amounting to $9.80.—Clifford S. Weaver.

Barry, Oct. 12.—Three additions here last Lord's day.—W. H. Kern.

Niantic, Oct. 10.—I. Fred Jones was with us in two helpful services last Sunday. We took advantage of his presence and help and called for the offering for state missions at the morning service. The amount reached was $73.55, which, with a previous offering of $37.25 for Villa Grove, totals $110.80. Forty dollars was also contributed for church extension two weeks ago. The enrollment at Bible school last Sunday was 314. This is an increase of nearly 200 over two years ago. Collection $6.86.—J. Will Walters.

LeRoy, Oct. 12.—Our revival meeting, lasting over five Lord's days, closed last evening with a crowded house, splendid interest and five added during the day. Evangelist Monser was called away Friday, and I continued the meeting three days with 13 additions. The total number of additions was 48. A. L. Haley, of Butler, Ind., and J. W. Seniff, of Pittsfield, Ill., had charge of the music.—L. E. Chase, minister.

Armington, Oct. 9.—We are getting nicely started in a meeting here with John Lappin. This is an exceptional community, as nearly all are members of the church—the only one in the community. I stood at the door after dismissal asking as many as I could if they were Christians. Out of an audience of probably 350 I found one that was not a member. Can such an experience be duplicated? There are a few, however, and we hope to reach them. Already six have come forward—five to render primary obedience.—Allen T. Shaw, evangelist.

Iowa.

Elliott, Oct. 7.—Evangelist W. S. Johnson has just closed a splendid revival effort here. The field was well gleaned before the revival, but 43 were added to the church. This is considered a great meeting under the circumstances. Brother Johnson closed the meeting with a great lecture entitled, "Be Sure You are Right and Go Ahead." The audience gave a freewill offering of $25 at the close. Brother Johnson is a forceful yet loving speaker. Miss Ola Bowles, of Des Moines, was song evangelist and did much to make the meeting a success.—J. Edward Cresmer, minister.

Kansas.

Santa Fe, Oct. 13.—Our meeting began last Lord's day with six additions first two days.—J. R. Robertson, evangelist; John F. Cox, singing evangelist.

Lebanon, Oct. 12.—We began a meeting at the Oak Creek Stone Church Tuesday, October 5. Good attendance, good attention, but no accessions yet. We hope for some good results from this meeting.—Levi W. Scott.

Clearwater, Oct. 12.—Meeting continues with great interest. Nineteen added.—Ingle and Zimmerman.

Sharon, Oct. 7.—Meeting begins with fine interest—four confessions to date. The minister, S. E. Hendrickson, and wife had everything well prepared, and are highly esteemed, L. L. Roberts leading with the music.—E. A. Newby, evangelist, 1117 South Main, Wichita, Kan.

Windom, Oct. 12.—Our meeting here with B. E. Youtz, evangelist; E. M. Garner, song leader, and C. S. Wikoff, minister, is growing in interest. Fine audiences. Nine confessions to date—one of these from the Lutherans. Continue about ten days. Next meetings at Manning, Ia., in November and at Irwin, Ia., for a second campaign within the year, in December. This will be the third time C. Durant Jones has called me to assist him in meetings. He preaches for Manning and Irwin.—B. E. Youtz.

Sharon, Oct. 15.—This is my second meeting with this excellent church and pastor, S. E. Hendrickson, resulting in 45 additions in eleven days, 32 of whom were baptized. There is a large chorus under the direction of L. L. Roberts. My next meeting is with Central's mission and E. W. Allen, Wichita, Kan.—E. A. Newby, evangelist.

Kentucky.

Barbourville, Oct. 11.—Some of the best citizens were among those who made the good confession in our meeting here last night. They are arranging to employ a new pastor and to build a new church here. Mabel Myers, of Louisville, is conducting the music.—T. M. Myers, evangelist.

Lawrenceburg, Oct. 10.—We are much encouraged with the progress of our meeting, additions at every service—54 so far. The music is an attractive and helpful feature under the leadership of L. W. Ogle. We continue.—Walter C. Gibbs.

Louisville, Oct. 10.—Closed meeting at Colemanville with 22 additions; also our meeting at Bethany with 25 additions. I am now at Minorsville, Scott county, in what promises to be a good meeting. Had one addition at the Parkland Church Sunday, and received unanimous call for my fifth year. On October 18 I begin my own meeting there. Mabel Myers and Mr. Evans will assist in singing and personal work.—G. W. Nutter.

Princeton, Oct. 12.—Yesterday I closed a short meeting with the Lewistown Church, with 37 additions—32 by primary obedience. On the last night we started a subscription to employ a regular pastor and raised nearly $300. We hope to co-operate with some neighboring church in locating a minister. There is a fine field here for some consecrated man. I should be glad to hear from ministers willing to work in a country field.—C. W. Barnes.

Louisiana.

New Orleans, Oct. 14.—The convention is a marked success in every way. Attendance good,

Mason & Hamlin ORGANS

"The Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs are, in my judgment, the best instruments of their class made either in this country or in Europe. They excel especially in richer, better qualities of tone. The recent improvements are of a great value. A wide acquaintance with musicians enables me to say that they generally regard the Mason & Hamlin as unequaled by any others.

Missouri.

St. Louis, Oct. 19.—Nine accessions at First Church Sunday. About 40 have been added since Earle Wilfley's coming a month ago.—C.

Kirksville, Oct. 16.—After our great meeting at Amoret, Bates county, Missouri, I went to Virginia, six miles away, and continued two weeks, where we had 17 additions—12 baptisms, making in the two meetings 88 additions—60 baptisms. D. M. Shelton, the preacher, was away in other meetings, and was not with us. We had no special singer. The people heard the gospel gladly.—J. W. Davis.

Braymer, Oct. 17.—Just closed a meeting at Cowgill, Mo., next town west of here, in which D. G. Dungan was my singer, being on his vacation. He has now returned to his church at Mowequa, Ill. We were with the Cowgill church just three weeks. Our people there are not strong. We gave an invitation to wayward Christians to return and re-enlist for Christ and about 200 responded. Two of these made the good confession. W. L. Stahl, the minister, aided greatly. We began a meeting here last night.—R. Tibbs Maxey.

Breckenridge, Oct. 4.—Two more additions by confession and baptism since last report.—E. G. Merrill, pastor.

Hatfield, Oct. 12.—Meeting here continues with increasing interest. Souls are being converted and made to rejoice in the truth. Eight have made the good confession. Last night after preaching five more were buried with Christ in baptism—two of them were school teachers. Sunday night the house overflowed. I am ready to answer calls anywhere. Can furnish singer, or can lead the singing myself.—J. P. Haner, evangelist.

Kirksville, Oct. 12.—I began my regular ministry here yesterday. Splendid audiences greeted me and ten were added to the church.—E. J. Willis.

Belleflower, Oct. 12.—We are just starting a meeting here that has a good outlook. Very large audiences already, and a fine interest is developing. Our permanent address is West Salem, Ill.—C. O. McFarland.

Humansville, Oct. 15.—Three additions here last Lord's day—two by confession and one by letter. This makes seven confessions since last report. Our church is doing fine work.—King Stark.

Laddonia, Oct. 12.—Spicer and Douthit, of Texas, are helping us here in a splendid meeting, with 15 accessions to date. We are having great interest and looking for large results. This town has been hard to move, but we think this meeting will break through the indifference and result in much good. This great evangelistic team is doing good work.—J. D. Greer.

Nashville, Oct. 10.—Meeting attracting large audiences. Twenty-six added to date—24 confessions. We are now arranging for our 1909 meetings.—E. H. Williamson and wife, evangelists.

Mountainview, Oct. 16.—Our meeting at Etterville, Mo., closed last Sunday night with 33 additions—24 by confession and baptism, five from the Baptists, two reclaimed and two by statement. Brother Scott, the beloved pastor, had everything ready. I have engagements for Brumley, Bakersfield and New Hope, Mo., and Marshall, Ark. One hundred and sixty-four additions since last report and one congregation and Bible school organized.—T. J. Head.

Novelty, Oct. 9.—I began a meeting here last night; I was detained at Mystic till October 6, closing there with a full house and 72 additions in all. We dedicated their new house last Sunday. One thousand dollars was needed to finish paying out, but so pleased and enthusiastic were the people that they gave $1,400 instead. We return to hold them another meeting in October, 1909. O. J. Marks, of Canton, Mo., sang for me there, and will be with me in the future whenever we can arrange to be together. We have about 125 members here at Novelty, where J. H. Davis, of Kirksville, Mo., preaches one-fourth time, and I confidently expect a great meeting.—Joel Brown.

Columbia, Oct. 12.—In eight days we had fourteen confessions, fourteen to unite with the church by letter, twenty by statement and one reclaimed. H. O. Breeden is a strong, sane, wholesome evangelist. Brother Sexton is rendering good service as soloist.—Madison Hart.

New Hampton, Oct. 15.—We are in a glorious meeting. Great crowds, great interest and great results. The meeting is 16 days old, with 30 accessions—26 by conversion and four by statement. We continue.—S. R. Reynolds and J. T. Alsup.

Springfield, Oct. 15.—Twenty-seven churches enter the simultaneous meetings here November 8. Large audiences are hearing Brother Walter's sermons since his return from his Western vacation.

Nebraska.

Fremont, Oct. 14.—Our meeting is drawing good audiences in spite of outside attractions. We had two baptisms last night. —Charles E. McVay, Benkelman, Neb., singer; E. H. Fuller, pastor.

Miller, Oct. 16.—Revival services commenced in Miller October 1. There has been good attendance and considerable interest, but so far no confessions. We are suddenly and unexpectedly confronted with much opposition. Some of the very people whom we helped to have a successful meeting this summer are doing all they can to hurt this work. But we know in whom we trust and believe he will yet give us the victory.—Mrs. Ella Gibson.

New York.

Niagara Falls, Oct. 13.—The church in Niagara Falls will begin evangelistic meetings Sunday, October 18. Miss Una Dell Berry will come immediately from the national convention to have charge of the music. The minister, W. C. Prewitt, will do the preaching.

Wadsworth, Oct. 12.—One more made the good confession and was baptized into Christ at regular services yesterday. Two of our Christian Endeavor boys have entered school at Kimberlin Heights, Tenn., to become preachers.—Charles E. Taylor.

Delta, Oct. 19.—I am in a meeting here with E. G. Hamilton, minister, and H. W. Tuttle as leader of song. Eight confessions thus far. The field is a difficult one. Van Voorhis and Edward McKinney closed Sunday night with 46 added from all sources—seven from churches, 12 by primary obedience, the remainder by letter and statement. Erick, Oct. 8.—Three added last Sunday—two by letter, one by confession—making five additions since the beginning of my work here September 20. Good prospects for a good work here.—Bishop M. Hopkins, minister.

Oregon.

Grants Pass, Oct. 9.—The Whiston-Longman team, of Nebraska, began a meeting with us on October 6. The house was well filled the first night. Whiston's style is going to take in this Western country. Longman is pleasing the people with his solo work. The outlook is bright for a great ingathering.—A. J. Hollingsworth.

We are in good condition, and the pastor and church united more closely as is always the case when Brother Graves is the evangelist. We will be in an excellent shape for Haddock and Stanley in April.—J. H. McWhirter.

The Very Newest Idea in Life Insurance.

New ideas are scarce, and a new good idea in any line of business is as welcome as it is rare. In life insurance a New Good feature is doubly rare and doubly welcome, because the happiness and welfare of a vast number of homes and families depend upon practical life insurance.

It is one of the attractions of this "new idea" that it is particularly a family idea. It makes possible a provision for the support and comfort of wife and family during a period when, without adequate provision, the wife has to face problems of existence which are often impossible of solution to her unaccustomed mind and her limited strength.

If philanthropy has been correctly defined as making two blades of grass grow where one blade grew before, then it may fairly be claimed that in the working out of this new idea, life insurance more nearly approaches philanthropy than it has ever done in the past.

This "very newest idea" which comes from The Prudential, the Company having the "Strength of Gibraltar," provides a monthly income for the wife and family for a term of twenty years from the death of the insured. This twenty-year period, it will be observed, covers the time occupied in the development and education of the youngest child, the babe in arms. It bridges that period of home training and school education when character is formed for good or evil. It provides food, clothes, education, by a fixed, regular, monthly payment which can not fail.

But the admirable character of this new idea of monthly income insurance becomes more apparent as its working features are considered. The plan contemplates a monthly payment to the wife, heirs or other designated beneficiaries, of such sum as the policy may provide for. This payment can not be anticipated, diverted or commuted. As regularly as the month comes the Prudential Company mails its check without red tape or formality.

The very plan of monthly income instead of quarterly, semi-annual, or yearly, will appeal to the man who knows that monthly accounts are far more familiar to the average housewife than are quarterly. Give her a regular monthly income and she will keep inside it, as she might not do so with quarterly payments.

The comparatively small cost at which this almost priceless provision for the wife and family can be made is another attractive feature of this "newest idea."

Many a man spends fifty cents a day on trifles. If at the age of thirty, he begins to save that amount and apply it on the premium of a monthly income policy, he will have the satisfaction of knowing that his wife will receive $50.00 a month for twenty years, or $12,000 in all long after he is beyond the desire for the trifles of this life.

This plan can be extended to make the payments continue for life at a slightly increased cost.

The simplicity, economy, security and wide application of this plan of The Prudential surely merit the title of the "very newest idea" in life insurance.

ADULT BIBLE CLASS MOVEMENT

The Bible School Vision.

By H. H. Peters.

(An address given at the New Orleans convention.)

The most prominent feature of our work during the past year has been our Bible school campaign. It has been inspiring and exhilarating. To the believer in religious education this is one of the most hopeful indications of our movement. It would have been better if this address had come from some one of our numerous professional and experienced Bible school workers. But it is not entirely inappropriate for the field secretary of a college to speak a few words on the theme under consideration.

Afer all, our colleges must be regarded, and must regard themselves, as simply the continuation of the culture commenced in the home, public school and the Bible school. The wording of the topic saves me any homiletical embarrassment, for it naturally assumes three divisions: First, the thought of a school; second, the text-book of this school; third, the future of the school. I accept, without mental reservation, the analysis proposed, and trust the discussion will be profitable. There are, therefore, three propositions to which I wish to direct special attention in the message.

First—Ideally considered, the church is a school, in which the principles of the Kingdom of God are taught.

Second—The Bible is the text-book of this school and its chief source of information.

Third—In our study of the church as an educational institution, we must pay special attention to the improvement and development of the Bible school.

The School.

The highest conception that one can have of the church is that of an educational institution teaching the principles of the kingdom of God in the most effective way possible. This makes the work of the church rational, not accidental. It gives the church a place in every phase of human society and enables it to do its work in harmony with the nature of man. Jesus was a teacher. This is the only office that completely represents him. In a sense he is a philosopher; in a sense he is an orator; in a sense he is a preacher; but from every angle he is a teacher. He trained his followers to be teachers. His church is commanded to preach and teach. And experience confirms the proposition that the most effective preaching is that which more nearly resembles teaching. When each church becomes an educational center in its community, many of the problems that seem so difficult now will become easy of solution. The teaching function of the apostolic church must be restored.

During the personal ministry of Jesus his followers were called disciples or learners. They were students in the school of the Kingdom. The Master said, "learn of me," and they did it. Jesus put the philosophy of his message in a single proposition, "You shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free." This is the divine order—knowledge, truth, freedom. Life and godliness come to us through the knowledge of the Lord. The supreme attainment of Christlikeness is to have the mind of the Master. Paul presents conversion as transformation by mental renewing.

MARION STEVENSON

"Be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your minds." The way to attain unto truthfulness and justice, righteousness and love, according to Paul, is to think on these things. It is as true to-day as it was in the days of old, that "my people perish for lack of knowledge." The ideal society is pictured as coming in when "the knowledge of the Lord covers the earth as the waters cover the sea." The promise under the new covenant is that all, from the least unto the greatest, shall be taught of him. We are admonished to grow in grace by growing in knowledge. The early church was commanded to preach the gospel to the whole creation and to teach the newly-enrolled disciples all things commanded by Jesus.

Our people have always stood for education in religion. This is the very genius of our plea. In fact, our theory of religion is such that we could almost be accused of teaching salvation by culture. Every pastor and evangelist among us, from the very beginning of our movement, has proclaimed two things: First, no man can become a Christian until he learns how; second, no man can become a better Christian until he learns the way of the Lord more perfectly. Thus we see the emphasis has been placed upon the element of knowledge from the very beginning of the restoration movement. We have called ourselves Disciples. We are learners. We have not learned at all, but are growing in knowledge. Theoretically, we have done very well. But practically we have not always "made good." Many of our churches in the early days opposed the Bible school. It is possible to find churches of this order even to-day. It seems a little strange that a people who are theoretically correct should become so heretical in actually carrying out an educational policy. But it is easy to account for this. When our movement began so-called infant baptism was quite generally practiced. The Disciples were strongly opposed to this custom because of its unscripturalness. The human mind goes from one extreme to the other, and our people went from the extreme of infant pseudo-baptism to infant neglect. Evangelism was restricted almost entirely to those who were in the world, and the work of religious education was mainly kept in the hands of the eldership. Thus it came to pass that a people perfectly orthodox in theory became seriously heterodox in practice.

The first criticism I ever heard of our people was the accusation of "head religion." For years I met this criticism in the annual arguments on religion with my father. I finally admitted my defeat, and acknowledged that our people actually stood for head religion. Or, to put it in another way, ours is a rational acceptance of and obedience to Christ. This is more than intellectual development. It means more than the ability to quote a few passages of scripture. It means more than an entrenched location behind a convenient passage of scripture. It means that we are willing to meet our Creator and reason with him.

Alexander Campbell did two very significant things in the first part of his work. He started the "Christian Baptist" because he believed in the power of the printed page to propagate the principles of the Kingdom. He established Bethany College because he believed in the ministry of cultured disciples in carrying out the purposes of God. We have not grown as rapidly in the creation of literature and in the permanent establishment of educational institutions as the work of Mr. Campbell prophesied. In these two things we have much to learn from the fathers.

A few years ago I heard one of the leading educators of Illinois say, in an address before a teachers' institute: "Ask the teacher who understands his business what he is trying to do; then ask the preacher who understands his business the same question. You will find that they agree. The teacher may use pedagogical terms, and the preacher may use theological terms; but when the terms of the one are translated into the terms of the other they will mean the same." If this be true, and I have come to believe that it is a fair statement of the case, we can study again with great profit the entire problem of religious education. It is not expected of the church that it shall have charge of all education; but that in the realm of the moral and spiritual work shall be done in an educational way. In other words, the church is a school.

The Text Book.

The Bible is the text-book of the School of Jesus. It must be used in the church in all the instruction in righteousness. It must be the foundation of all teaching in the Bible school. It has been said that the Bible is the chief source of information in the Bible school. By this we mean that we are to use all the legitimate helps we can get in our study of the Scriptures. This is a good time for us to say with Whittier:

> "We search the world for truth,
> We cull the good, the beautiful, the pure,
> From graven stone and written scroll,
> And old flower fields of the soul,
> And weary seekers of the best,
> We come back laden from our quest,
> To find that all the sages said
> Is in the book our mothers read."

Teach the child to say, "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path." Hold ever before the church the instruction that "the entrance of God's words giveth light." May we all say with the psalmist, "I hope in thy word." The psalmist of old put this teaching in a beautiful form when he said: "Thy word have I hid in my heart that I might not sin against thee." We have here three important things: First, the greatest thing in the world—the Word of God; second, in the best place in the world—in the human heart; third, for the best purpose in the world—to keep from sin.

There are persons who seem to think that it is sufficient to believe the Bible. They become defenders of the faith rather than students of the Word. They become champions of the Almighty, rather than disciples of Jesus. Not a few spend so much time in defending the "Old Book" that they forget to study it. Many a chapter and verse teacher of the Scriptures knows little or nothing of the spirit of the gospel. It takes more than an accurate knowledge of a few doctrinal passages to commend one as a diligent student of the Word, or an able teacher in the church of God. To cut twenty-five leaves from the Bible would incapacitate many an ardent champion in a partisan conflict. There is a story of a church in our state which gives a case in point. The pastor complained to one of the leading elders, on one occasion, that for four Sundays he had failed to find his text in the pulpit Bible because the leaves had been torn out. He remarked that it would be necessary soon to purchase a new pulpit Bible. The elder discouraged the matter by saying that the brethren had become tired of hearing these texts preached on and had torn the leaves out. This story may be only a creation of the fancy, but there is a moral in it. The longer we study it the more profitable it becomes. A friend of mine was recently telling me of a deacon in his congregation who had twenty-one volumes on how to raise fine cattle, and not a single volume on the work of a deacon. My friend actually referred to this brother as a "short-horn deacon." Of course, this was unkind, but it is not an unusual circumstance.

We buy family Bibles and pay exorbitant prices for them, but we do not necessarily derive any benefit from investments of this kind. A fine, fancy Bible, on a beautifully-carved center table, in a magnificently furnished parlor, in a richly-adorned brownstone front, may be a good thing to worship in time of a storm. It may reveal a high degree of domestic respectability. It may even be a good place to preserve a relic or conceal a church letter. It may be a good object to decorate with the photographs of favorite friends. But it is the Word of God in the heart that counts.

Several years ago I heard a lecture on "The Subjective Bible." The massage seemed fanciful to me at the time, and the position far-fetched. But in recent years I have come to see more in them, and have been able to use the truth of the lecture in my work in religious education. The lecturer maintained that the only part of the Bible which saves is that portion which becomes a part of the life. The Scriptures transcribed into our lives is the need of the hour. The law of Moses was written on tables of stone; the new covenant must be written on the fleshly tablets of the human heart. This means that the law of Christ must be indelibly written in the spiritual consciousness of the individual disciple.

It is said that Jesus taught as one having authority and not as the scribes. Jesus taught out of his consciousness of God and things eternal. The people saw the difference between his teaching and the teaching of the scribes. We are disciples of Christ, not of the scribes. We may have the law written in our lives, then out of the abundance of the heart the mouth will speak the things of the Kingdom. This is the royal road to discipleship and the source of true leadership. In temptation, Jesus gained the victory because he could say, "It is written." Our safety lies in the same thing. Paul's faith in Timothy rested, in part at least, upon his training. He said to him: "And that from a child thou hast known the Holy Scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus." Besides, Paul believed in his early training. Timothy's unfeigned faith dwelt first in his grandmother, Lois, and in his mother, Eunice, hence in him also. Stephen gave sound historical setting to his gospel message. He knew the history of his people and its application. In his martyrdom, therefore, he could see Jesus at the right hand of God.

For almost one hundred years we have proclaimed, in no uncertain manner, "Where the Scriptures speak, we speak; where the Scriptures are silent, we are silent." There is a bare possibility that even so beautiful sentiment as this may become a meaningless motto. In the closing days of the first century of our movement we ought to pay more attention to the study of the Holy Scriptures. But "new occasions teach new duties." And there never was a time when we ought to be more diligent than to-day in our study of the Bible. We have advantages which our fathers knew not of. And we have ways of popularizing Bible study which were unknown to the generations past. Let us accept these opportunities. Let us produce an army of Bible students and a host of leaders in Biblical investigation. This is no time to turn out the lights. The Bible is the text-book of the church of God, and we must know it. We have pledged ourselves to its contents, and we must know its message. There is no hope except in knowledge. "We have nothing to teach but the Bible and nothing to do but to teach it."

Bible School Interests at the New Orleans Convention.

The national conventions at New Orleans mark the beginning of a very bright era in the history of our Bible schools. Upon the foundations we have so successfully laid we shall be able to build a larger and more glorious structure.

The Model Bible School.

The interest began in the model Bible school at the First Methodist Episcopal Church, and was conducted by Herbert H. Moninger. The good people of this church, under the direction of the superintendent of their Sunday-school, gave Brother Moninger full control. All their Bible school workers kindly vacated their offices to the teachers and workers Brother Moninger selected. Such delightful Christian fellowship was highly appreciated by the great body of Bible school workers gathered from all parts of the United States.

The Model Bible School was conducted by the regulation departments: Primary, Junior, Intermediate, Adult, Teacher Training, each under the direction of a competent superintendent and corps of skilled teachers.

The opening services were delightful, instructive and devotional. Frank C. Huston conducted the song service, with the assistance of a good choir. Many visitors observed the work in the different departments that they might go home for better service.

The secretary reported 1,145 present with an offering of $32.87. Out of this sum was paid to the Sunday-school of the First Methodist Episcopal Church the amount of their usual offering; the balance goes to the treasury of the National Christian Bible School Association.

Two Great Addresses.

H. H. Peters, field secretary of Eureka College, gave a noble address on "The Bible School Vision." It was delivered under very favorable circumstances. The readers of The Christian-Evangelist will be glad to have this address.

Hall L. Calhoun, of the College of the Bible, gave a great and instructive address on the subject of Bible School Lessons. Professor Calhoun is our representative on the international lesson committee. His address also will be published in The Christian-Evangelist.

A National Bible School Superintendent.

The most important action of the convention, and one which opens a new era in our Bible school work, was the unanimous action of the A. C. M. S., looking to the selection and support of a national Bible school superintendent. The recommendation of the convention, which was unanimously adopted, provides for the selection of a national superintendent by a committee consisting of the secretaries of the A. C. M. S., F. C. M. S., C. W. B. M., Ch. Ex., N. B. A., and the president of the National Bible School Association. The support of this superintendent is to be provided by the first five societies above mentioned until the National Bible School Association can secure his support.

The action of the convention assures the selection of a strong man who will give all his time, under the direction of the National Bible School Association, to the development of our Bible school interests. Such a man will soon be given proper financial support by our great Bible school forces. In the meantime the great representative interests of our brotherhood will make the financial side of the undertaking secure.

Teacher Training.

Two teacher training classes were taught in the model Bible school. F. W. Burnham, of Springfield, Ill., taught a class of 180 in the first course. We had the privilege of teaching a class of fifty-four in the advanced course.

On Monday night following this great model Bible school Brother Moninger presided at the organization of a great union teacher training class at the First Methodist Episcopal Church. This class will reach an enrollment of 500.

Keep Your Eye on Budd Park, Kansas City, Mo.

The following quotation from a letter just received from B. L. Wray, pastor, will give a good reason for your keeping your eye on Budd Park: "Dear Brother Hardin: This is to say that we received the grades for the work done by our training class last summer. I will also state that Brother Bryan was with us Sunday evening. We all appreciate his visit very much, and as a result we are going to make our Bible school a Centennial school. This aim was passed on and made unanimous by our church board last night. Keep your eye on us."

J. H. Hardin, State Supt.
211 Century Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

Illinois Adult Classes.

The adult department aims do not seem to be clearly understood by our schools. The aim of 10,000 men and 10,000 women in 1,000 classes in Illinois can easily be realized by our schools, when they understand what it embraces.

In the first place all classes whose members are 16 years of age, or older, are included in this list. Then they can be in either men's classes, women's classes or mixed classes.

The standard of organization is that adopted by the international association, and each class must have a teacher, president, vice-president, secretary, treasurer, and at least membership, devotional and social committees, or their equivalent. Such other officers or committees may be added as the class may desire.

The class must be enrolled with the international adult department secretary, Mr. George W. Miller, of Paris, Ill., and have the certificate of membership in this association, which costs but 25 cents. Many of our classes are up to the standard, but are not enrolled and do not have the certificate. Please do this at once.

ABUSES OF THE LORD'S SUPPER.

Topic Oct. 28: 1 Cor. 10:13-21; 11:20-30.

"The cup of blessing which we bless is it not the communion of the blood of Christ? The bread which we break, is it not the communion of the body of Christ?" I wonder if we really remember this as we take of the wine and break of the loaf? We are to do this in remembrance of him. And to remember him is to remember his death upon the cross. Not to discern the Lord's body is to fail of the deepest meaning of the Lord's Supper. Memory is the divine faculty that somehow links us with the suffering of Christ as we sit at his table and commune one with another. "As oft as ye do this ye do show forth the Lord's death until he come again." To remember Jesus Christ is the Christian's supreme obligation and supremest joy. The Lord's Supper is a feast of sorrow, because of his suffering; of gladness, because of his triumph in the midst of all he endured. "For the joy that was set before him he endured the cross, despising the shame, and sat down on the right of the throne of God." Not to discern the Lord's body is to eat and drink to ourselves condemnation. "Whosoever shall eat this bread and drink this cup of the Lord unworthily shall be guilty of the body and blood of the Lord." This is a solemn sentence. Who shall dare to eat? We are not to judge others. "But let a man examine himself, and so let him eat of that bread and drink of that cup." "So"—how? As discerning his worthiness and our unworthiness. We are to remember the Christ and not our own or our brother's failures.

The only failure that can keep us from the Master is a failure to see in him the all-sufficient Savior. After all, salvation is not so much in difference of character as in our attitude toward him, in our acceptance or rejection of the one, only sin-offering. The unpardonable sin is the final rejection of the atonement which is found only in the blood of the everlasting covenant. To reject the blood of the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world is to leave ourselves without "any more sacrifice for sin." To account the blood of the covenant wherewith we were cleansed an unholy thing is to cut ourselves off from the divine mercy, since there is none other Name given under heaven and among men whereby we must be saved.

The commonest abuse of the Lord's Supper, perhaps, is our neglect. To neglect the assembling of ourselves together as the manner of some is, means failure. You never saw a member of the church who constantly absented himself from the Lord's table that did not make a practical failure of his religious life. Evermore we need the bread that came down out of heaven and giveth life to the world. And we need to pray, as those of old, the prayer, deeper with diviner meaning than they thought or we realize: "Evermore give us this bread." And it is pathetically true, with us as with them, that we can not understand the deep things of God. We stumble at the words of the Christ, and many, as the disciples of old, go back and walk no more with him, because we refuse to eat of his body and drink of his blood. O "it is the Spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing; the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit and they are life." It is our shameful neglect of the words of Christ, along with our failure to discern his body, that causes many to be sickly among us and many to sleep.

Last Offering of the Century for State Missions.

This is so sudden! There is no time for prolonged agitation. We can not wait to hear what others are doing. But right on the threshold of the Centennial year we have to make our contributions to state missions—each as he purposeth in his own heart. To disregard the call is not only to fail of our place and part in the great Centennial, but to refuse to provide for our own, which is the worst infidelity.

From year to year we have postponed our duty. This can not longer be put off, for we are facing our last chance of the century. It is now or never. Next year and the new century will have their own tasks and problems. It is not merely a matter of records and credits, but a question of souls and eternal life. How many shall our state missionaries be enabled to save this Centennial year of grace? What will the King say when we stand before him to render our account.

This is not only a call to this year's duty, but to redeem the neglected days of past years. They have been piling up like great blocks of ice in a gorged river. Let the warmth of divine love enter our hearts and release the floods that will make our home missions glorious for the Centennial!

Sometimes.

Across the fields of long ago
He sometimes comes to me.
A little lad with face aglow—
The lad I used to be.

And yet he smiles so wistfully,
Once he has crept within—
I think that he still hopes to see
The man I might have been!

Women Who Forget.

The woman who makes careless promises and forgets to keep them is never popular, no matter how charming she is, and the time comes when she begins to wonder why she is left out of so many plans and why her house is passed by on calling days. A promise is something which should be made with great care and kept at all hazards. When you promise to set a day for the visit of a family to your summer home you awaken expectations which you have no right to drown in disappointment. You are in duty bound to make that vague invitation a real one and do your best as a hostess. Indefinite invitations are common enough, and a failure to make them anything more is so rare that practical women never expect to hear of them again after the first reference.—Selected.

One morning, after family prayers, little Kathryn said to her mother: "Oh, mamma, Lois had her eyes open when papa was praying!" Her mother, looking at her keenly, said: "How did you know, Kathryn?" Realizing that she was cornered, she promptly answered: "I heard her wink."

Caught on the Run.

The judge listened intently to the man. The man was the plaintiff and had charged his wife with cruel and abusive treatment. He was a small man, and his wife—well, it was at least evident that the charge rested on a basis of possibility.

After the plaintiff had finished his testimony, the judge decided to ask a question.

"Mr. Frouble," said he, "where did you meet your wife, who has treated you this way?"

"Well, judge," returned the man, somewhat meekly, "you see it's this way. I never did meet her. She just kind of overtook me."

"I am going to make crabapple jelly, dear," says the young wife, "and I want to make it like your mother used to make it."

"Well, I hardly believe you can," replied the young man. "Mother owned a jelly factory, you know, until the pure food law was passed, and she made pure crabapple jelly out of pumpkin rinds, glucose and coal tar flavoring."

Always True.

There is a mosque in Damascus which used to be a Christian church. So ancient is the building that Chrysostom once preached in it. But, over an arch in this so venerable building there is still sculptured in Greek a legend which the Moslems have somehow neglected to chisel out—"Thy Kingdom, O Christ, is an everlasting Kingdom; and thy dominion endureth throughout all generations." That ancient prophecy was true when first sculptured, is true to-day; is getting truer every day as the world hastens; and notwithstanding all apparent tarryings and setbacks. For your redemption and for mine this Christ died that death of awful sacrifice; but death did not hold him, could not. He burst the bonds of death in glorious resurrection, and now, risen to the right hand of the Father, in glorious majesty, grasps the scepter of a universal rule.—Dr. Wayland Hoyt.

THE BIRTH OF A BUTTERFLY.

BY MRS. LAFE HEATH, ST. LOUIS.

My baby boy and I once saw the growth of a butterfly. We were sitting on the lawn on a summer morning, when our attention was attracted to a bright color in the grass. We ran to see what it was and discovered a large worm, fully one and a half inches long, delicately colored, lavender, yellow and brown. It seemed in a great hurry, on the most important business in the world. We stopped it, and it showed vexation—and really, it seemed surprising what expression we felt from its actions.

While we were examining it two tiny little horns appeared just back of what might be termed the neck, and as it was becoming more and more a wonder, we sat silent and watched. Presently these little horns began to get broader at the upper end, and just about like the hour hand moves on the clock, so they grew broader and broader, and presently the little fellow said, without lifting his eyes: " 'Spect he is making a butterfly of him." I was almost frightened at the wonderful transformation and tremblingly turned away, feeling somewhat ashamed of having stopped the crawling worm and, against its will, watched it being glorified. So I said, "Let us go away and leave it to its glory."

We did so, but in the evening, when we were all out on the lawn again—only five hours later—I thought of the insect and curiously hunted it up. To my exclamation of delight the children all came running, and we beheld a beautiful butterfly, all lavender, yellow and brown, and the wings, now fully developed, as broad at the top as the body was long. I told the children about the crawling worm in the morning and now it was this beautiful butterfly. They exclaimed: "How can it be?"

Again we embarrassed the thing of beauty by examining it, and again it showed vexation—seemed angry. We continued to examine and wonder. When suddenly it began to set those new wings to moving back and forth, oh, how gracefully it handled them! Then it turned its whole body round rapidly, and, before we could have any idea of what it was preparing for, it raised suddenly up, out of our reach, right over our heads, and went fluttering in a most beautiful flutter high up into a maple tree fully fifty feet away. We all screamed and then stood gazing in silence after the wonderful worm of the morning, now so glorified and soaring away up and out of humanity's reach.

We felt, I imagine, like the inventor of a flying machine—goes lovely while it goes, but how will it light? Our delight was not blighted by any calamity, and the wonderful birth and flight of the butterfly was now only a remembrance, and truly there never was a more beautiful lesson.

Oh that the wings of faith in Jesus might thus transform us into the glorious spiritual life, that we, like the butterfly, might soar above the vexations of humanity!—Central Advocate.

World's Largest Boulder.

The largest boulder in the world is in Victoria, Australia. The name of "The Leviathan Rock" has been given to it. Its estimated bulk approaches, if it does not really exceed, three hundred thousand tons. This great rock may be likened to an immense egg lying on its side, the part resting on mother earth being not more than thirty yards square. Hundreds of persons could find shelter under it from a passing storm or the sun.

An agent of the Midland Revision Court objected to a person whose name was on the register on the ground that he was dead. The revision attorney was determined to have conclusive testimony. "But, sir, how do you know the man's dead?" demanded he. "Well," was the reply, "I don't know. It's very difficult to prove." "As I suspected," returned the barrister. "You don't know whether he's dead or not." Whereupon the witness coolly continued: "I was saying, sir, that I don't know whether he is dead or not; but I know this. They buried him about a month ago on suspicion."—Harper's Weekly.

The Case of Bertha

By Clara E. Laughlin

A little less than a year ago there came to Chicago from her Wisconsin home a young girl of twenty-two, or thereabouts. One or two of her school friends had come to Chicago and were doing well; they sent back glowing accounts of what a girl might do for herself in the great city, and Bertha was moved to try. She was working hard up in Wisconsin—cooking in a country hotel for $2.50 a week. In Chicago, she was told, people were paying $5.00 and $6.00 a week for no greater skill than hers. One of her old school friends had a milk route in Chicago; he had glimpses into a number of homes, and he kept a lookout for a good place for Bertha. When he found one, he sent her word, and she came down and visited him and his young wife in their little flat, and they took her to apply for the new place.

That was how Bertha came to us. A better girl never came to anybody's home, bringing with her an eager interest in it and all that pertains to it, so that the wages paid her seem less like so much money for so much work, than like an allowance, the best we can afford, made to a member of the household who never measures her services but gives cheerily of her utmost. A more uniformly cheerful manner than Bertha's I have never seen nor a greater willingness to learn and to do. I would as seriously consider the likelihood of my taking something of hers as of her taking something of ours. She does not gossip, she does not pry, she does not mind any business but her own. She is as modest as any lady I ever knew, and quite as circumspect. In the eleven months she has been with us, I have known her to be out of the house hardly more than a half dozen evenings; and on these occasions she has always told where she was going and whom she was going with—for a moonlight ride on a lake excursion boat, once; to an amusement park once or twice; to a dance or a theater, never. Sunday evenings she takes tea with one or another of her old friends from home, and is back at the house by 10 o'clock. A quieter life it would be hard to imagine. But what, if you please, do you suppose has happened to Bertha?

She is as eager about the comings of the mailman as any girl away from home, and usually gets a number of letters. But several times of late she has, after getting letters, been downcast, even red-eyed. Asked if she were homesick, if she would like to go home on a visit, she said no; and the dreadful truth came out.

We have been glad to pay Bertha $6 a week; she has been worth it to us; also, we have often paid as much to other girls who were worth far less. Now what does Bertha do with her unaccustomed riches? She keeps sending home things for the younger children and for her mother. She buys materials and makes her little sister a complete "best" outfit, underclothes and dress; then adds to it ribbons and shoes and stockings, and expresses it home to her to wear at a Kaskaskia celebration. She buys her mother and two sisters at home each a winter coat before she buys her own. Hardly a fortnight passes but she sends something nice to the home folk; and yet she is so cheerful that she manages to send her mother, who has never seen so much money in her life before, $75.

Now what does Kaskaskia do—Kaskaskia that has no girl in Chicago sending fine presents home? It spreads the report that Bertha is living in gaudy wickedness. No girl, Kaskaskia says, could earn so much money honestly. And, firm in this conviction, Kaskaskia whispers and whispers until the hissing sound of its defamation reaches poor Bertha; she goes happily to the mailbox to get news from home, and the news is that the little home town is so full of shameful talk of her that her family must hang their heads.

It's a situation as old as the world, of course; probably nobody ever, since time began, drank of the cup of success without having to drain the lees of malicious misrepresentation. But knowing that does not make things materially easier for Bertha, or for any of us in her situation.

"What can we do to set you right?" we inquired eagerly, burning with indignation on her behalf.

"Nothing," says Bertha sadly, shaking her head. "No matter what you said, they wouldn't believe you."

They wouldn't! We hardly needed Bertha to tell us that. But the hideous injustice of it all rankles mightily and will not let us keep still altogether. How many Berthas are there? we cry in our hearts; how many of them are strong enough to withstand this bitter experience and to know that the crucial thing is not what Kaskaskia thinks of them but what they are able to think of themselves? How many girls have been so foolish, poor young things, as to think that because evil was said of them they might as well "deserve it"? And what does God think of those whose vicious tongues thus cause a little sister to offend?

One wishes for a pen dipped in that "hot ink" that Dante wrote with—"Dante, who loved well because he hated wickedness that hinders loving"—to cry out in protest against all this condemnation without trial" which loose tongues are daily pronouncing on the innocent, the praise-deserving.

This episode of Bertha has certainly come close enough home to me to make me keenly anxious to write a pleading word to parents whose sons and daughters are in the big cities fighting for a place in the world. There is evil in cities—lots of it! but deep-thinking, far-seeing persons who know many phases of life well, are by no means sure that the city's opportunities for gross sin equal the country's, the small town's. And there is so much good—great, splendid, inspired, uplifting good—in these big cities that it must be hard for a young person who comes hither from a home where "whatsoever things are lovely" are revered, not to be caught up into one of the currents that are flowing steadily and swiftly toward human betterment.

The voice of this city is full of hunger, of pain, of cunning enticement, of leering wickedness; but it is full, too, of most wonderful crying for light, for brotherhood, for uplifting, for purification. It is doubtful if the sun ever shone down on a city so full of struggle toward a better life. You—mother and fathers in Kaskaskia and elsewhere, tearfully anxious for the safety of your children in Chicago—take, I pray you, my word for it that if you started them out all right, the chances are better that your children have been swept into the up-current and not into that which flows down.

"Be sure you're right and' den go ahead," quoted Uncle Eben; "but befo' goin' ahead, remember dat it takes a mighty smart man to be absolutely sure he's right dese days."—Washington Star.

The Beauty Of Firm Flesh

Lies In The Power Of Rich Blood To Keep It Ever Clear And Clean.

Stuart's Calcium Wafers Free.

The secret of firm, strong, supple flesh is—good, rich, constant flowing, blood. When hollow cheeks appear and hidden pigments make the eyes look like burnt holes in a blanket, the blood is sick and out of tune.

The effect of impure and pure blood is seen at once on the face.

Impurities fill it with poisons, the flesh abhors, and the lungs can not eliminate, as they should.

It needs a purifier. Stuart's Calcium Wafers give to the blood through the same channels as food all the strength and stimulus necessary to remove the impurities and to make rich corpuscles which will feed the body or fight its enemies.

Time was when poor blood purifiers had to be used, such as herbs and roots powdered minerals, etc., but thanks to latter day achievement the Stuart process gives to the system the full rich strength of Calcium Sulphide, the greatest blood purifier known to science.

These little powerful wafers are prepared by one of the most noted expert pharmaceutical chemists in the world and so far as sicience is concerned no expense has been spared to make them perfect.

They contain Quassia, Golden Seal and Eucalyptus, each a most powerful aid to the blood of man.

Thousands of people use these wafers with religious zeal, and their testimonial evidence is an unfailing source of interest to one who reads it.

Melancholy marks every suffering woman, yet one should be armed with this knowledge and make up one's mind to try Stuart's Calcium Wafers at once. Every druggist carries them. Price 50c, or send us your name and we will send you a trial package by mail free. Address F. A. Stuart Co., 175 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

SERMONS FROM A SENATOR

Making Money and the Fear of Losing It

Senator Albert J. Beveridge, Indiana's pride, some time ago wrote an excellent little book on "The Bible as Good Reading." Now the senator has written another little book, "Work and Habits," published by Henry Altemus Company, Philadelphia.

Love Your Work.

In the chapter on the subject which furnishes the title of the book, Senator Beveridge says:

"The first thing necessary to the doing of good work is that the man who does it shall love his work. Lasting work means loving work. The greatest cathedral on earth is that at Chartres, in France. No man knows its architect or its builders. It was erected according to plans devised by holy men who cared nothing for their own glory, but cared everything for the glory of him whose servants they were. It was builded by thousands of artisans who came from all over France, and gave their services without price and even without record, as an act of worship. The materials were furnished by tens of thousands of peasants, and each stone they contributed was consecrated by prayer and swung to position with the power of a divine affection. And so the cathedral at Chartres stands, and will forever stand, as the highest type of sacred architecture the world has ever known."

The Golden Rule of Happiness.

"Fall in love with your work. That is the first rule for doing your work well. It is also the golden rule of happiness. Fall in love with your work and your labor will bring you joy as well as money.

"All the happiness this life affords is found in three things: First, a true relation to God; second, the care of other people; third, the doing with all your might work which you love to do. There is no true and lasting happiness possible from any other source. Neglect God, care nothing for other people, despise your work, and wealth will buy you nothing but misery—power will bring you nothing but heartache. Build your life upon these three foundations and you build your house upon a rock."

Helped by a Power Outside of Himself.

"The supreme enemy of bad habits is religion. I do not mean that this is necessary. I have known good men who were not religious and bad men who pretended to be religious. But the man who in his heart of hearts as well as in his daily walk believes and practices the Christian faith, is helped by a power outside himself and above himself. His whole moral being is vitalized. I do not pretend to say this so much from experience—I wish I might—but I do say it with all my might from observation. The wisdom of Aurelius, Epictetus, Confucius is a tonic to the soul; but the words of Jesus are life itself. As a mere matter of practical success in life, as a mere method of making the most out of himself, I would rather have a son, brother or friend become a thoroughgoing Christian than to have any other single good fortune come to him."

Money Making.

In the chapter on "Money Making" the author says: "The man who has amassed wealth with the unwisdom of selfishness, bequeaths to his son, along with the money, a sneering cynicism for all the sound and noble uses to which that wealth can be put. And so these sons and daughters destroy themselves by a life of do-nothingness, an existence foul with cancerous pleasures. Thus, at mid-life, his children have sucked from the golden but fatal orange which their father gave them, an ennui that drives them to desperation.

"I say this much at the beginning to burn in upon your very soul, young man, this profound truth: The making of money for the sake of money is folly, and the very basest and most vicious folly at that. But having said this much I shall not be misunderstood when I say that the very first thing for a young man to understand is that his very first duty in life is to make money.

"Self-support is the first duty of man. You are in no position to help the world until you have demonstrated your ability to help yourself.

The Measure of Merit not Money.

"But the measure of merit is not money; at least the measure of merit is no longer money. That is one of the crude things that we have outgrown. We are living in the twentieth century now, and not in the days of Shylock. The measure of merit to-day is achievement. The twentieth century measurement of manhood is human helpfulness.

"When a man or a family gets up to one hundred millions or more they then become a curiosity—a sort of monstrous by-product of our industrial civilization. The only way such a person can, in these days, win the favorable regard of his fellow human beings is by making his money do helpful things for the rest of humanity.

"Would it not be well for foreigners to know that we Americans do not consider the gilded wanderers from this country, to which the nobility of Europe pays so much attention, as Americans at all. They are not the least bit typical of this fine, free, vital, vigorous, honest American people.

The Old Notion Disappearing.

"The old notion was that a man might do what he would with his fortune, but that concept is passing away so rapidly that it has now almost disappeared.

"Beyond a certain point a man can not use his wealth for his family or himself. That point passed, he must use his riches for his fellow-man. This is the twentieth century ideal of money. This is the belief which has already become a mixture in the minds and hearts of the American millions. And it is an unconscious obedience to that Higher Voice that secretly speaks to the soul of every man—that more and more is making our American millionaires practical and philanthropic distributors of their accumulations for aiding and uplifting Americans whom they never saw and future generations yet unborn.

No Private Fortunes.

"Thus it is that the day of the private fortune is past. There are no private fortunes any more. There never can be private fortunes again as that term was understood one hundred years ago, fifty years ago, ten years ago. And so the excessively rich man has focused upon him the attention of millions upon millions of his fellow human beings among whom he lives. This concentrated searchlight never leaves him. These eighty millions know about him, know what he is doing, believe they know what he ought to do.

"More and more he is taking it into account. More and more he is doing what the millions of his fellow-citizens think he ought to do, and what, in reality, he ought to do, with his wealth. More and more he is conforming to the modern and Christian ideal of wealth.

The Vicious Fear of Losing.

"One night in Washington," says the senator in a very interesting chapter under this head, "A group of gentlemen sat talking about the tremendous moral renaissance that has been uplifting the nation, and were saying that it was akin to the other great spiritual and moral revolutions which have so often moved the Christian world. observation,' said one of the company who were discussing this question, 'extends over twenty years. And what that observation teaches me is that we have too many "winners" in American public life, and too few "losers." What this country needs in its national legislation is more good "losers" and fewer "winners;" what we need is more men who are perfectly willing to be defeated in a fight, rather than to yield on essential points, just because their constituents will be told that they have been beaten if they do not yield.'

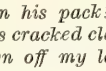
The Rush for the Band Wagon.

"Whenever the capable manager or manipulator of legislation gets almost a majority he immediately makes it clear to the weak-kneed ones that they will lose if they do not come with him. And there is at once a scampering for 'the band-wagon.' Most of the weaklings have no particular conviction one way or the other—their chief desire, and almost their whole thought, is how to remain in public life. And by some strange process of instinct, rather than reasoning, they think they can not keep in public life if they are defeated. So over they go to what they are told is almost sure to be 'the winning side.'"



On Whom Was the Joke?

A young man in a certain New York office put up a joke on the bookkeeper, who was a quiet, steady, serious chap. The joke was for every one to tell the victim that he looked very, very bad indeed. It was wondered what effect it would have.

It was a hot August day when the joke began. The office boy started it.

"Ain't you well, Mr. Quill?" he said.

"Yes, of course, why?" he said.

"Why, ye look so pale," said the boy.

"I feel all right," said Quill, calmly, and he put on his office coat and went to work.

But when the shipping clerk told him he looked ill, Quill frowned and said he had had a bad night, that was all.

When the cashier asked him what made him have such a queer color he said his heart felt strange.

For an hour or so Quill was tormented with anxious inquiries full of gloomy forebodings about his health. Finally, with an impatient, worried gesture he threw down his pen and hastened to the office of his chief. He was gone about five minutes. When he returned the chief was with him.

"Men," said the chief, raising his hand to command the attention of all, "as Mr. Quill is sick, I have granted him a ten days' leave of absence. Please arrange to divide his work equally among you all while he is gone."—Western Recorder.

Practicing Conscientiously.

At the appointed time Edwin Jones had called at his best girl's home. But somehow Miss Wrinkle was not there to greet him, says "Answers."

He seated himself in the drawing room and anxiously awaited her arrival.

Presently the door opened, but alas! it was only her 8-year-old brother.

"Hello!" exclaimed Edwin. "Is your sister busy?"

"She seems so," replied the youngster, "but I don't know just what she is doing. She's standing in front of the mirror, blushing just awful and whispering to it: 'Oh, Mr. Jones, this is so sudden!'"

"Pa, did Moses have the dyspepsia, like what you have got?"

"How on earth do I know? What makes you ask such a question?"

"Why, our Sunday-school teacher says the Lord gave Moses two tablets."

How Many Days Till Christmas?

By A. G. Riddoch

How many days till Christmas Day
When Santa Claus comes back,
And chirrups to his reindeers, "Whoa,"
And tosses down his pack?
My dollie's head is cracked clear through—
She slipped down off my lap—
And Teddy's lost his squeaker and
His overalls and cap.

The pretty set of chinaware
He brought along for me,
You said they cost a dollar bill
And came from Germany.
All but the dainty teapot's smashed
Each tiny cup is gone;
And though it's nice as nice can be
It's not much use alone.

And I've been thinking to myself,
When Santa comes again
If you will let me I will try
To get aboard his train.
And in the teapot I will make
A nice hot cup of tea,
And he will have to fetch the cups—
Won't this be cute of me?

I knew a shadow dark as night
Would cloud her sunny brow
If I should tell her Christmas Day
Is four long months from now.
And so I told her funny tales
'Bout piggies, bears and sheep,
And happy-hearted fairy queens
That dance when children sleep.

I sang about the bright sweet flowers
That blossom in the spring,
And of her little feathered friends
That whistle on the wing;
And though she soon dozed in my lap,
When laid upon the bed
"How many days till Christmas Day?"
She once more sweetly said.

The Night Snivie Became A Preacher.

By Frances J. Delano.

Snivie's real name was Patrick McGee. The boys nicknamed him Snivie because when he cried his papers his voice sounded like a cry-baby's—so the boys said.

The truth is, Snivie was discouraged and his voice did sound different from the other boys. You see his mother had been sick, and food was getting scarce at home, and Snivie's clothes were almost beyond patching, and, of course, Snivie felt as if he must sell his papers. Strange, but it did seem as if the more he needed to sell them the less he was able to do! Everybody passed him by and bought of some other boy. The boys jollied him, too, and said he wasn't game. Well, the fact is, Snivie did feel like crying all the time.

One night after Snivie had been trying for about a week to sell papers, he was standing on the corner with his bundle under his arm thinking of a story he had heard the night before. He had about given up trying to sell his papers. Once in a while he would pass out one to a kind looking old gentleman or to a middle aged woman; but for the most part his mind was on that wonderful story about a boy who had great luck. A mission lady had told it and this is the story:

Once there was a little, ragged, dirty newsboy who was out on the street, one bitter cold night, selling papers. The icy wind blew through his poor little trousers and he was so cold his teeth chattered when he tried to speak.

"P-p-leath thir, b-b-uy a paper?" The little fellow's voice sounded as if he were going to cry. He held up a paper to a nicely dressed gentleman.

"Hello, little cap, what you doing out such a night as this? Where's your overcoat?"

"P-p-pleath, b-b-buy a paper?"

"You'd better run home; it's too bitter cold for such a mite to be out."

"P-p-pleath thir, I ain't got any home."

"What! no home?"

"No, thir."

"Where are you going to sleep tonight?"

"Don't know, thir."

The man took the papers from the boy's hands. "Look here, you see those lights over there?" The man pointed to a house across the square.

"Yeth, thir."

"Well, you go over there and ring the bell. A lady will come to the door; tell her that Mr. A. sent you to her."

The little chap told who had sent him. He was taken at once into the house and seated before a great fire blazing on the hearth. After he was all nice and warm, she took off his ragged clothes and put him into a tub of warm water. She put some good-smelling stuff on his hair, and then she wrapped him in a beautiful soft blanket and carried him downstairs and set him before the fire again. Then she had a great feast spread before him—hot soup, roast turkey, cranberry sauce, and ice cream. Next, he was put into the softest, whitest bed you ever saw and he went to sleep and dreamed he had gone to heaven. The little boy grew up to be a preacher.

Snivie thought this the greatest story he had ever heard. He could see the little newsboy, as plain as day, sitting before a blazing fire eating roast turkey and ice cream. My! but Snivie's mouth watered. If it hadn't been so freezing cold he could have warmed himself almost by that blazing fire, it was so real. Snivie was as ragged and as cold as the boy in the story. That night was very much like the night in the story, too. Snivie, standing shivering, on the lee of a big hotel, kept picturing to himself the fire and the feast that the other little chap had enjoyed. If only one of these fine gentlemen passing in and out of the hotel would take his papers, he said to himself, and would tell him to run across the square and ring a bell. My! Wouldn't he hustle? Wouldn't he, though?

"P-p-pleath, thir." Snivie had spied a man that looked like the one in the story, and before he quite realized what he was doing, he was speaking like the boy in the story. "P-p-pleath, thir, b-b-buy a paper?"

"Awh, w'at ye given us?"

Snivie jumped as if some one had struck him. The nice gentleman passed round the corner and Snivie's faced one of his chums, a newsboy.

"Get on to yer job, there," piped up Newsie, "this ain't no Sunday-school. "Sellin' papers for yez 'ealth?"

Snivie shook his head.

"Tumble on to yer game, thin. Herald! Globe!" Newsie's voice rang out on the air something like the frosty whistle of a locomotive. Scenting a customer, he darted across the sidewalk. "Papies! Papies! All about the 'lection. Herald? Sure thing."

Pulling a paper from his pack to replace the one just sold, he came back to Snivie.

"See that car, kid?" he asked, "red one? Two guys on that car gets papies every night—car slows up here." Newsie thrust a handful of change upon Snivie. "Board her now, an' get a hustle on ye. Papies! papies!"

Snivie gave one look at the car. His license was only a week old and he had never attempted boarding a car; but there were a half dozen boys about ready to jeer at him; board her he must.

"Papies! Herald, Globe, Rec'id, Transcript!" Snivie sang out as loud as he could. His voice didn't sound just right; all the same he sold his two papers and made the change and got safely off the car.

In a minute he was trying another car, and then another, then two women bought papers. After that he sold steadily until every paper was gone. Then he ran home.

"Mar," he shouted, "sold all my papies. This is the way ye do it, Mar, see." Snivie held up a paper and, in a voice worthy an old and experienced hand, he shouted, "Papies! Papies! All about the murder!" Snivie's mother clapped her hands over her ears. "Saints preserve us! Ye'll be avin' the perlice for sure."

"Herald, Globe, Recid, Transcript," shouted Snivie.

"Oh! but ye must be froze stiff, Patsie dear."

"Froze nothin'!" The lofty contempt with which Snivie said this caused a rapt expression to appear in Mrs. McGee's face.

"But it ain't hot so's to notice it down there on the square," said Snivie. "If ye want to give the gran' bounce to a freeze, Mar, ye jest want to sell papies, that's wa'at. Jus' jump on an' off the cars while they'r chasin' theirselves up an' down Boylston street, 'n ye'll be warm all right."

"Patsie, ye'll get killed some day, I knows ye will."

"Awh, come off, Mar! I'm on to my job, I am. Wat's for supper?"

Mrs. McGee eyed Snivie with unspeakable delight. "An' it's a man already he is," she cried. "It's roast taters for supper an' a bowl of gravy, yer honor!"

The prospect of roast potatoes and gravy was too much for Snivie's dignity. He started in on a high class vaudeville performance which threatened serious damage to the floor.

Mrs. McGee hastened to set forth the potatoes and gravy.

"Here's yer supper, Patsie. Come, it's hot as pepper."

Snivie needed no urging, and for five minutes there was silence in Mrs. McGee's kitchen.

"Say, Mar," Snivie struggled with a mouthful of potato, "roast taters an' gravy's as good as turkey. Say,"—again Snivie's appetite got the better of his social proclivities.

"W'at was ye afther sayin'?"

Snivie looked vacant for an instant, then he recollected. "Say, Mar, but they got off a song an' dance las' night 'bout a kid that got in where ther was a blazin' fire an' a big feed. Bosh, Mar! I'll bet I'm warmer'n that kid any day. They put 'im to bed an' he thought he was in Heaven. He was a preacher w'en they got through with 'im."

"Say, Mar, know w'at I'm going to tell the kids w'en I'm a preacher?"

"Will yez listen to this! A preacher!"

"I'm goin' to tell the kids to get on to their jobs, that's w'at. 'This ain't no Sunday-school,' that's w'at I'll say. 'This is business, this is. If ye want a blazin' fire an' a turkey feed ye jus' want to tumble on to yer game,' Say, Mar, ain't I a preacher? Papies! Papies! Herald, Globe, Rec'id, Transcript."—Congregationalist.

Benny's Thank-You Box.

They were going to have a thank-offering meeting at Benny's church. He knew, because his mamma was president of the big society, and sister Gertie attended the band. Benny went, too. He "belonged to both," he said, and he had a mite-box of his very own, and he put a cent in whenever he found a white one in papa's pocket. He had one of the thank-offering envelopes, but it wasn't large enough to suit him, so he begged a box from Gertie, and Benny was happy.

One night, as papa opened the front door, a little boy and a rattling box danced downstairs.

"Do you feel very thankful, papa?"

"What for?" papa asked, tossing the questioner up to his shoulder.

"'Cause you're home, and I'm kissing you."

"Indeed I do," laughed papa.

"Then put a penny in my thank-you-box!" shouted Benny.

Mamma had to put one in because she was thankful that the spring cleaning was done. Brother Tom put in five, because his suit came home just in time for a party. Bridge had the box presented to her for an offering when she said she was glad Monday was such a fine drying day for her washing; and Gertie gave him pennies twice, for two pleasant afternoons spent in gathering wild flowers. So many things to be thankful for seemed to happen, that the little box grew heavy—it was so full that it wouldn't rattle.

But one night soon after, Tom and Gertie were creeping around with pale, frightened faces, and speaking in whispers. The little "thank-you-boy," as Benny liked to be called, was very ill—croup. The doctor came and went, and came again; but not till daylight broke could he give the comforting assurance, "He is safe now." In the dim light Tom dropped something into the little box, as he whispered: "Thank you, dear God." Somehow everybody seemed to feel as Tom did, and when Benny was propped up in bed next day, and counted his "thank-you" money, there were two dollars and a half in it, which papa changed for a gold piece that very day.—Southern Presbyterian.

The Two Little Maids.

Little Miss Nothing-to-do
Is fretful and cross and so blue;
And the light in her eyes
Is all dim when she cries,
And her friends, they are few, oh, so few!
And her dolls, they are nothing but sawdust and clothes,
Whenever she wants to go skating it snows,
And everything's criss-cross—the world is askew.
I wouldn't be Little Miss Nothing-to-do.
Now true,
I wouldn't be Little Miss Nothing-to-do,
Would you?

Little Miss Busy-all-day
Is cheerful and happy and gay,
She isn't a shirk
For she smiles at her work,
And romps when it comes time for play;
Her dolls, they are princesses, blue-eyed and fair,
She makes them a throne from a rickety chair,
And everything happens the jolliest way,
I'd sooner be Little Miss Busy-all-day,
And stay
As happy as she is, at work or at play,
I say. —Detroit News-Tribune.

CONVENTION NOTES AND COMMENTS

Several interesting excursions were made during the convention. But these were not altogether satisfactory, from the fact that when the convention was in session, these excursions drew heavily upon the audiences. This is a matter that ought to be managed in a different way. There was an attempt to do so, at New Orleans; but it was not quite successful. Thursday was set apart for one or two excursions, but when it was found that the convention would not be in session that day, a large number of the delegates went home. Now, it seems to us that this may be remedied, and at the same time the convention itself will be benefited. We suggest that, hereafter, only the mornings and nights be devoted to convention work, and that the afternoons be free for rest or for excursions, according to the wish of the delegates. When the whole day is practically devoted to sessions of the convention, the strain upon those in attendance is very great. The morning session, devoted mainly to business matters, and the night session to hearing addresses, would give opportunity for rest and sight-seeing, and give all the time to convention work that ought to be allowed.

At present, our conventions are too strenuous. They tax the strength of even the strongest to the uttermost. The main difficulty is in having too many addresses. Often very little time is given to the consideration of important matters in the various reports that are brought to the convention. It is not necessary that these reports should be unfavorably criticized. It frequently happens that the reports that are most popular, and against which there can be no valid objection made, should receive very careful discussion, before they are finally passed, but very generally the reports that deserve most, receive no attention whatever. They are simply shot through the convention, as if it were a pneumatic tube, and this is often the last that is heard from them, even when they are printed in the minutes of the convention. But, if the important points in these reports were emphasized, and care taken to impress them upon the delegates, something might come of them, after the convention has adjourned. But now there is no time for such discussions, and they are simply remanded to their last resting place, with delightful haste. Surely we have reached a period when we can get along with fewer set addresses. One or two able addresses at the evening sessions is about all that should be provided for. This change is imperatively demanded by the best interests of our great work.

It was generally conceded that the last night was the best part of the convention. Dr. Case, a representative of the great Baptist body, made an admirable and fraternal address. It had been arranged for Herbert Yeuell to speak on that occasion, but he graciously gave place to hearing Dr. Case, and the committee wisely asked Brother Yeuell to respond to Dr. Case's address. This he did in a very happy way. His address was followed by some remarks of W. T. Moore, who was acting as chairman of the meeting. All these addresses were characterized by the most cordial sympathy with the union movement, especially with that between Baptists and Disciples. The enthusiasm finally rose to a very high level, and it was the universal testimony that those who went away before this meeting made a great mistake.

The social feature of the convention was perhaps the best of all. The headquarters, at the St. Charles Hotel, furnished every opportunity for the fullest development of this feature. The spacious lobby of this hotel was sometimes filled by those in attendance at the convention, and there were very few people in attendance who did not have opportunity to become acquainted with all the delegates. While it is possible to overwork this feature, even to absenting one's self from the convention sessions, at the same time, when wisely worked, it should be encouraged at all our conventions.

A conspicuous feature of the convention was the absence of the older men. Only two or three of our aged preachers were present. This feature becomes more and more noticeable at every convention that is held, but the old men who were present were highly honored by all in attendance.

Most of our leading colleges had banquets. Some of these drew from the audiences of the convention, as they were held at times when the convention was in session. The chairman of the convention, wisely, as we think, rebuked this habit. At the same time, it is a fact that these banquets furnish an important feature of our conventions, and without these, there are not a few who would not attend the conventions at all. The real difficulty is that we are always pressed for time; and yet, on Thursday we had the whole day at our disposal, without anything special to do in the convention. We suggest that in the future time ought to be given to our colleges, just as a day and night is given to the Foreign Society, the Home Society and the C. W. B. M. Our colleges certainly deserve as much recognition as any other feature of our conventions, and it is time for us to provide for them in some suitably definite manner.

The brethren of Texas fully realized their opportunity in a nearby national convention, as well as their obligation to support the meeting while it is in the South. Their delegation was not only large in numbers but prominent in the meetings. Four of the new living link churches were from Texas. At the Sunday-school Christian Endeavor meeting, the best chance for everybody to speak, the majority of all the talks were by Texans. All the brethren from the Lone Star report most optimistically.

Among the several laymen whose influence in the church has become widespread, and whose names have become as familiar as many of the prominent preachers, is Arthur A. Everts, of the East Dallas Church. He not only practices but vigorously teaches tithing, being largely responsible for the large band of tithers in his own church that has made it famous as a liberal giver and a living link from its birth. Brother Everts has a standing reward of $100 for any one who finds tithing a failure, and displayed this prominently at the convention.

Among the men who came from the far west of Texas to the convention were noted: Baxter Golightly, of Odessa; John W. Smith, of Brownwood; C. C. Scittern, of Procter; E. J. Bradley, of Lampasas; J. A. Arnold, of Clarendon. These are all strong, growing young men, capable of handling the hard problems of the growing West.

One of the chummiest pair of delegates at the convention was observed to be A. J. Bush, who, for almost a third of a century has evangelized in Texas, and his son, George Bush, of Gainesville, who, though yet a young man, has almost a dozen Timothys to his credit. The father is one of the grand old men whose ambition is to die with the harness on. He has settled to the quieter life of the pastorate at Wichita Falls, but they say they can not hold him down; every once in a while he returns from a short trip reporting the agitated waters of baptism in some neighbor town; and as enthusiastically happy in it as a first year "Bibe" in his virgin meeting.

A man who can wake up a fagged out, depleted audience at 10 o'clock at night and make them take a fresh start at staying, certainly possesses some unusual originality. No one could deny this of Dr. J. B. Cleaver, of San Antonio, who stirred the audience on Tuesday night by his report of prohibition conditions in Texas. He said: "Texas witnessed the marvellous spectacle of a safe Democratic convention being turned into a submission or prohibition convention; and it was the members of the plain Christian church that did it." It was in a meeting held by Brother Cleaver for W. T. Moore in the early days of the Central Christian Church, Cincinnati, O., that the Assistant Editor of The Christian Evangelist publicly confessed Christ.

Editorial

What is the Difference?

We call attention to a communication elsewhere entitled, "What is our Basis of Unity?" by William Hurley Smith, of Oklahoma, which should be read before reading this article. In the editorial to which he refers, entitled, "An Impregnable Basis," we expressed the conviction that there was need for a restatement of some of the fundamental things of our plea, and this letter is proof of the truth of that statement, whether the writer expresses his own perplexity, or, what is more probable, aims simply to indicate a confusion of mind which he finds exists among many.

The doctrinal statements which he quotes from "Orthodoxy in the Civil Courts," are views expressed by a single witness, most of which would be accepted in the main as substantially correct. But what we wish to say is that they are utterly without authority, and no one ever thinks of them as a creed or an unauthoritative doctrinal statement. Even if they expressed with perfect accuracy the views held by the great body of those connected with the churches of this Reformation, they would still constitute no part of the foundation on which the Church of Christ rests. Not to understand this fact is to fail to apprehend the chief significance and value of our plea as a Christian union movement.

It was a sublime act of faith when our fathers in this movement committed themselves to the fundamental truth of the divinity and messiahship of Jesus of Nazareth as the rock-basis of the church. It was an untried experiment since the days of the apostles. They believed that as Jesus entered the Temple of old and cleansed it of all that defiled it, so if he were received into the heart by faith he would not only purify the heart but would clarify the understanding so that all false or harmful theories would ultimately give place to the truth. No such radical step as this had been taken since the dawn of the apostasy. Other reformers had said, "We must form elaborate creeds to guard the church from error and to constitute the bases of our denominational life." These men said, with Paul, "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." If a man have this faith we may tolerate his erroneous opinions and conclusions on many subjects, so long as his life is in harmony with his faith in Christ. When, early in the history of the movement, a minister wished to find fellowship within it, coming from the Universalists, while still holding to the view that all men will ultimately be saved, this opinion of his was not made a bar to his fellowship, nor was it a hindrance to his usefulness in the ministry. He was only required to hold it as an opinion, and not seek to bind it upon the conscience of anyone else.

This, then, is the difference, deep and wide, between us and those who formulate human creeds covering the whole ground of Christian doctrine and making them a basis of fellowship. True, the difference is not so marked now as it was in the days when creeds possessed an authority which they no longer have; but the difference is still marked, and will be as long as any other faith is required of men in order to Christian fellowship than faith in Jesus Christ as the Son of God and the Saviour of the world. Men's views differ about original sin, about the nature of inspiration and of the atonement, and a hundred other subjects. We can not have union on a uniformity of opinions, but if the facts of sin, of inspiration, of the atonement, etc., be accepted, as they are by every believer in Christ, they may be one through their faith in him, in spite of differences of opinion.

This, perhaps, is the most distinctive feature of the reformation inaugurated by the Campbells, and it certainly presents the only feasible or possible basis of Christian union. A clear presentation of this basis has been a mighty source of strength to us in the past, and any confusion concerning it now is certain to weaken the force of our plea and bring about division among ourselves instead of promoting unity with others.

Our reply, then, to our correspondent's closing question is, that we may hold to these doctrinal statements set forth in the book he mentions, and in tracts and sermons, as our intellectual conclusions and understanding of the teaching of the Bible, but we can not make them a part of the basis of unity, and hold to the plea inaugurated by our fathers.

Government by Newspapers.

We hope all our readers will give careful attention to the article which appears elsewhere from the pen of our thoughtful and venerable brother, W. T. Moore, entitled "Who Shall Decide?" It is a vigorous protest against the easy method of certain editors of attacking men and organizations and condemning them without the formality of an investigation. It is a protest, too, against the assumption, which editors are prone to fall into, that they are the infallible judges of what is right and what is wrong among us, and know better how great institutions and missionary organizations should be managed than the men who are charged with these grave responsibilities. It is not the first time, of course, that such protests have been made, but the habit seems to be pretty well fixed among us of submitting to government by newspapers. We would be among the last to underestimate the value of religious newspapers, or to deny them the right of free criticism within the limits of what is just and proper, and for the well-being of the Cause. We have long recognized the fact, however, that most of our troubles and dissensions, throughout our history, have come from our religious newspapers, and that unless some method can be devised by which these journals can be held responsible for their utterances and policies, most injurious results will follow.

A divided journalism means, ultimately, a divided brotherhood. That many do not seem to see this, is only evidence of the truth that some people do not trace causes forward to their inevitable results. More than two years ago the Editor of this paper, on his own personal responsibility, foreseeing the evils of divided counsel among our religious journals, undertook to bring about a better understanding between at least two of our leading papers, to the end that they might work together, as they had done in the past, for the unity of the brotherhood. His efforts met with no response. Later a movement was inaugurated, at first without our knowledge, but later with our hearty approval, for the appointment of a large committee to bring about this much-needed harmony and unity in our religious journalism. There was no thought of a trust, or of larger dividends in the contemplated enterprise, but only the desirability of working together, through our periodical publications, for the best interests of our common cause. There never was a full meeting of that committee, which is evidence sufficient that the importance and gravity of the work committed to them was never appreciated by at least a portion of the committe. The result is that but little has been accomplished, so far, and the committee has asked for further time.

That there should be any hostility to a movement among us looking toward the bringing of our religious newspapers into harmony, for the good of our common cause, and for their own mutual benefit, in the end, seems difficult to believe. And yet such opposition has existed and does exist, either through a misconception of the end which is sought to be accomplished, or because of a decided preference for the present friction and strife, over unity and co-operation. That men of means and of influence in the brotherhood have not taken a deeper and more active interest in this movement that looks toward increased efficiency and harmony in the publication department of our work, shows how good men may be so engrossed with their own business interests, as not to be able to see and realize the tremendous issues that are at stake, nor feel the heavy responsibilities that are upon them.

One might infer from much that he sees and hears that the trouble among us arises from the fact that a part of the brotherhood is in favor of standing for the Bible, for the old faith of the gospel, for the authority of Christ and the New Testament, and for loyalty to our great plea, while the other part is ready to surrender all these, or to compromise them, and, in the pride of its intellect, to invent something better than the gospel as the remedy for human sin and suffering. Such is not the case. Here and there, of course, there may be a doubting Thomas, or one who has made shipwreck of his faith, either by a moral lapse in his life, or through an overdose of rationalistic philosophy; but the great mass of the brotherhood are loyal in heart and mean to be loyal in their teaching, to the Bible, to the Christ of the Bible, and to the great principles of the Reformation which we are urging. No, that is not the issue. The great issue among us is the original issue we made with the religious world, namely, the value of Christian unity and the willingness to sacrifice personal opinions and preferences for the sake of that unity. Some of us are studying the problem of unity among ourselves, and are seeking to know how we may present a united front to the divided religious world. We believe that one way to do this is to get our papers to working together. At every point, so far, we have been thwarted by the efforts of those who prefer division among us, rather than unity on the broad basis of charity and of liberty which our fathers advocated. We may as well open our eyes to this fact, and face the issue as it actually exists. Shall we be a united, or a divided brotherhood? That is the question which presses for immediate solution.

With Dr. Moore we would greatly prefer that the contest, if it is to come, should be in the open. Let us know what the issue really is, and who are its friends and who are its foes. For ourselves, we have hoped and prayed and labored that these differences might be adjusted by mutual counsel, by Christian forbearance and by peaceful methods. And we have been blamed for pursuing the methods of peace, when those of war were thought to be in demand. But if the necessity comes for the conflict, we shall be found at the front, battling for the right and for the truth, as God has given us to see them. In other words, if the matter is to be left to the newspapers to settle among themselves in the field of polemics, then the sooner the issue is made the better. Nothing is to be gained by continuing the present condition of "armed neutrality" between those holding to opposite ideals.

In a personal letter from Bro. W. F. Richardson to the Editor of this paper, he says of the New Orleans convention: "The Spirit of the Lord Jesus was manifestly present throughout its sessions, and the harmony and enthusiasm have never been surpassed in any gathering of our people. Not a word of bitterness, and few words of criticism were heard during the entire week. The welcome of the New Orleans people was more than we could have anticipated, and it surely gave an uplift to the cause of primitive Christianity in all the Southland."

What higher praise could be given to a convention than to say of it that "the Spirit of the Lord Jesus was manifestly present throughout its sessions"? This Spirit of Christ in any people insures unity and progress.

Notes and Comments

The Second Baptist Church of this city, under the leadership of its able minister, Dr. W. C. Bitting, has erected a magnificent new church building on Kingshighway, which they are dedicating this week and next, in a series of discourses by leading ministers of the city. The church has issued a leaflet entitled, "Our Ideals," which it is circulating among the people of the city that they may properly understand the spirit and aims of Baptists, and particularly of this local church. This is the mother church of Baptists in this city, having a large and influential membership, with possibilities in its present environment and under its able leadership of great usefulness.

In the first of the "ideals" set forth in the leaflet mentioned occurs this statement:

"We hold to the 'competency of the soul Godward.' Hence we reject priesthoods, disbelieve in any spiritual efficacy of baptismal waters, or communion bread and wine, and refuse to recognize human authority in the religious life."

We who are content to be known as Disciples of Christ, or Christians, can sympathize with Baptists in their desire to correct the false impression that they believe in baptismal regeneration, or attach any magical efficacy to baptism. It is well, however, for both Baptists and Disciples to guard against the danger of minimizing the value of divine institutions in seeking to correct a popular error. It is not a question of the efficacy of "baptismal waters or communion bread and wine," but of obedience to Christ in the ordinance of baptism, and of communing with Him in the use of the emblems which he asked us to partake of in memory of him. Dr. Bitting, we imagine, would hesitate to deny that there is any spiritual value in the proper use of these symbols, given us by our divine Lord. The New Testament, including the words of Jesus himself, do attach very great value to the proper observance of both these ordinances, and what Jesus Christ has emphasized we ought to be careful not to minimize.

How prone we are to go from one extreme to another! Because Romanists and some other High Church ecclesiastics make baptism a regenerative ordinance and an indispensable channel of grace, without which there is no salvation to either infant or adult, many Protestants, in running away from Rome, run far beyond Jerusalem, and treat these divine institutions as if they were human expedients that could be dispensed with at the caprice of any man. Jesus taught that he that observes "the least of the commandments and teaches others to do so shall be called greatest in the kingdom of God." We believe there is "spiritual efficacy" in yielding loving obedience to Jesus Christ in the solemn ordinance of baptism, in which we are buried in "the likeness of His death," and from which we rise in "the likeness of His resurrection" to "walk in newness of life." We believe there is "spiritual efficacy" in getting into heart-communion with Jesus Christ through the mute but tender symbols of the bread and the wine which he himself made memorials of his broken body and of his shed blood. We also believe in the "competency of the soul Godward," to use Pres. Mullins' phrase. Whenever and wherever the trusting soul meets God in his own appointment, there is spiritual blessing and the toning up of spiritual health. Without faith and love these ordinances are, of course, meaningless and valueless, but with these they are means of grace by which the soul comes into more vital touch with God.

A few leading brethren whose judgment we highly esteem, in personal letters to the Editor, have commended very highly the recent editorial entitled "Our Greatest Centennial Aim." As that aim, according to the editorial, was the promotion of unity among ourselves, we are glad that even a few prominent brethren agree with us as to the importance and urgency of this matter. It has been a source of both surprise and of deep regret to us that so few, comparatively, have seemed to apprehend the drift of things among us and whither it is leading. No doubt, many more have perceived the real situation than have expressed themselves on the subject. Some, however, whose age and position give assurance that they would not knowingly lend their influence to any divisive movement are, unwittingly, let us hope, doing so. We have determined, in view of the importance of this subject and its bearing on our future welfare, to publish a symposium soon in The Christian-Evangelist in the hope of calling attention to what is really the most important work just now ahead of us. This will not interfere with any other Centennial aim, but will stimulate every good work among us and give fresh hope and courage to many who are discouraged by the present condition and outlook.

The "Christian Century" of October 24 contains a criticism of The Christian-Evangelist for printing in an advertising circular an editorial comment from The Christian-Evangelist concerning Professor Willett's view of miracles. Of the reprint of this editorial comment in a circular, the Editor knew nothing until it came to him in his sick room through the mail. Concerning the good taste of that sort of advertising, therefore, we have nothing to say except that it could not have been done with our approval. But that anything "deceptive" was intended is not in evidence. The writer in The Century, "C. C. M.," however, implies that the editorial itself misrepresents the facts in saying that Professor Willett's view is not in harmony with the views of "the great leaders of thought in the various evangelical bodies." If this can be shown to be true, we will only be too glad to make the amende honorable. We had specially in mind Professor Willett's statement that "the redemptive facts of Jesus' life are independent of miracles." We do not believe that statement represents the view of evangelical scholars, in any ordinary meaning of the words used. We believe these scholars would say that such facts as "the virgin birth of Christ, his unique sonship, his sacrificial death and his resurrection from the dead" possess the element we call miraculous, and that their redemptive power is inseparably bound up with their extraordinary or miraculous character.

At the Eureka College banquet, during the convention at New Orleans, it was decided to hold a great Eureka College and Illinois rally next year in connection with our Centennial convention at Pittsburg. It is believed that this will be better than an expensive banquet and more in keeping with the purpose of this great gathering. A good program will be prepared in advance and the rally will be made one of the important side features of the convention. All our college interests ought to be well represented in Pittsburg.

One of the old Missouri boys who came through the College of the Bible of Kansas University to Texas, was welcomed by many of the old college mates with special fervor. It was Walter P. Jennings, now in his sixth year at Taylor, Texas, who had a hard time of it last winter with appendicitis and other complications. He is now in the best of health and in a growing successful work.

J. W. Holsapple, of Hillsboro, Texas, a member of the Dixie welcome committee, did fine service in working up the Texas delegation which loomed so large in the crowd. And he enjoyed it all.

Every man naturally thinks his own work the greatest field for service. None, however, seemed to be happier and more hopeful in his task that Dr. Clinton Lockhart, president of Texas Christian University. The growing number of young preachers to be trained there and the unlimited need for preachers in that growing field, is certainly enough to stir the pulses of this consecrated scholar.

In the temperance hour Miss Berry sang with great power, "God give us Homes."

J. J. Morgan and E. M. Waites took in the convention together, being true yokefellows in the work of their large congregations in Fort Worth, Texas. Fort Worth has come to possess in a goodly degree that spirit of city evangelism which reaches out instead of centralizing in a big shell down town; and it is due to the spirit of these men, with their other pastor, C. P. Craig, who could not come to the convention.

Perhaps Kentucky would claim Miss Virginia Hearne, but Texas certainly has the ownership of her time and splendid abilities just now; for she was active in every nook and corner of the C. W. B. M. work, leading the Texas crowd of women as corresponding secretary of the work in that state.

Cephas Shelburne, who now preaches for that well known liberal young church, East Dallas, Texas, gave on Sunday night a mighty plea for concentration on the work of preaching the gospel, without turning aside to heresy hunting.

The Texas brethren think they have the best all-round corresponding secretary of any state, in the person of J. C. Mason. In the national convention his quiet wisdom was valuable and his optimistic countenance was always cheering. Brother Mason spent his summer in the fast growing Panhandle country of cool and healthful climate. He called it his "vacation," though he managed to preach almost every day, organize several churches in new towns, with a Bible school, a C. W. B. M. and a Christian Endeavor society in each one. This is what he calls "organizing."

W. M. Williams, of Belton, Texas, was a happy man in the convention, as he is in his home work. A superintendent of schools for a dozen years and more, he heard the higher call of the ministry during the past year; and with the help of John L. Brandt as evangelist, has waked up the dead church, making of it a power of evangelistic force.

Too much praise can not be accorded the local committee. W. M. Taylor, minister of our New Orleans Church, deserves especial mention. With unbounded faith, with the utmost consecration, and untiring energy, he has led the forces and won a great victory.

"I'd as soon think of introducing George Washington," said President McLean, as he called on Dr. Dye to speak.

The convention went on record as not favoring planning for two years ahead. Perhaps this was wise in view of the fact that the constitution provides for a strictly delegate convention hereafter. This will not be so difficult to handle, but if we continue to have great mass meetings we see no reason why provision can not be made for them by selecting the place of meeting at least two years beforehand. Topeka wants the convention in 1910. It is rumored several other places want it, but their voices have not been heard, and doubtless the go-ahead men from Kansas will win out when for the third time they make their appeal at Pittsburg.

The convention remembered J. H. Garrison who, this year, missed for the first time in many years.

Never has our convention been received with such cordiality by the business men of a city. The proprietors of the St. Charles Hotel not only made a special rate for the convention guests, but contributed $500 to the expenses of the convention prior to the arrival of a single delegate. Some of the restaurant men also made donations to the expenses.

Marcellus Ely, a former pastor of the New Orleans church and now engaged in the difficult work of building up a church in Charleston, S. C., attended the convention.

The communion service was a very enjoyable one, but its end was rather marred by what was intended to be a helpful incident. R. A. Long presided, and J. B. Briney and W. T. Moore made talks and prayers that were uplifting and peculiarly appropriate. Indeed, this was one of the best services of the kind we have ever attended. Could the offering for ministerial relief, which is usually taken on this occasion, have been made and the congregation dismissed without the confusion that did follow, it would have been, indeed, a great service. The offer of Mr. Long to double whatever collection was raised, up to a thousand dollars, was accepted, but the rear of the hall was in confusion for a part of the time, which greatly marred the spirit that ought to have characterized this occasion.

It was a source of regret that Prof. C. T. Paul, of Hiram College, was, by reason of sickness in his family, unable to conduct the mission study classes, but Secretary Corey and H. A. Denton rendered very effective service in his place.

Of the churches out of the state we believe the Union Avenue Christian Church, of St. Louis, again carried off the honors of having the largest delegation from its membership. There were nineteen present at Norfolk and sixteen at New Orleans. The Christian-Evangelist Special had a delightful party on board, and made the trip without any accident other than about 40 minutes delay on the scheduled time of arrival. The usual vesper service was held, and ours was the first special train carrying big delegations to arrive in the convention city. Besides St. Louis the other largest delegations from the North came from Des Moines and Kansas City. Of the churches in the state we believe that at Baton Rouge had one of the largest delegations, numbering twenty-four, which is more than one-third of the membership. Far-away California sent a big and little man of boundless activity in the persons of A. C. Smither and Grant K. Lewis. Northern California was represented by I. N. McCash, from Berkeley.

When Van Camp sang his temperance song, "A Straddler of the Fence," President Long said he objected, as every time Van sang the refrain he looked at Mr. Long.

The convention music was good, as it has been on recent occasions. Professor Hackleman was in charge. The Netz sisters and Miss Una Dell Berry rendered most of the special music, and Brother VanCamp lent variety on two occasions and Leonard Daugherty conducted on the last night. A large chorus choir was very helpful in keeping up the swing of the music.

A platform motto, "America, however bad, is worth saving." "American however good, needs saving." In either case. —Home Missions.

While educational interests had no special place on the program, the New Orleans convention was attended by a good representation of our colleges. Among these Butler College was represented by Pres. Thomas C. Howe, Drake University by Pres. Hill M. Bell, Hiram by Pres. Miner Lee Bates, Texas Christian University by Pres. Clinton Lockhart and Colby Hall, Transylvania by Pres. R. H. Crossfield, the College of the Bible by Prof. Hall Calhoun and W. T. Donaldson, Virginia Christian College by its Secretary, M. Davis, Kimberlin Heights by Prof. Ashley Johnson, the new college at Enid, Okla., by Pres. E. V. Zollars, while other educators present were H. L. Willett, representing the University of Chicago and the Disciples' Divinity House, Prof. Wallace C. Payne, of the Bible Chair at the University of Kansas, H. O. Pritchard, representing Cotner University, and H. H. Peters, Eureka College. What may become an important addition to our educational work, Keuka College, New York, was represented by its newly elected vice-president, Lowell McPherson. Morton H. Pemberton and W. T. Moore were present from Christian College, Columbia, Mo., and Mrs. St. Clair from Hamilton College, Lexington, Ky. There may have been others present, but all these we saw.

During the session a number of conferences were held by the heads of colleges in which measures touching the general interest of the colleges were discussed. Presidents were brought into closer touch with each other, and they reported that from their point of view the New Orleans convention was the most helpful meeting they had attended in years. It is clear that our colleges are making steady and satisfactory progress in strengthening their curriculum, raising their standards of work, and bettering their physical equipment. The whole tone of the college men was hopeful, and it looks as if a better day were coming for our educational work.

Dr. James Butchart was described by President McLean as "a gold medal man from the ground up." He has been seventeen years in China.

"I feel good," said W. T. Moore, at the conclusion of the report of the F. C. M. S. He had the honor to make the first speech ever made for the Foreign Society and he wanted now to compliment the officers and workers on the splendid report this year. This drew out other encouraging words. A. C. Smither thought it was remarkable that in such a panicky year the society was within 10 per cent of the largest activity of its history.

One of the pleasant and festive occasions was the entertainment in honor of the college men by Pres. E. B. Craighead, of Tulane University.

Editor's Easy Chair.

This chill, gray October day, with its sharp wind and its somber sky, impresses upon us the fact that the summer has indeed gone, and the winter draweth nigh. One need not sigh over the summers which have fled, and which lie like beautiful islands in the ocean of the past. Nor need we mourn too keenly the passing away of some of the beautiful dreams and ideals of our youthtime, which have gone to return no more. Other hopes, aims and ambitions have come in to take the place of those which have served their purpose, and have faded away like the flowers of springtime. Our aims and our ideals change with the passing years, and we must see to it that the lower are always giving place to the higher. None is so poor, none to be so pitied as he who has lost the hopes and ambitions of youth, and has not gained, in their stead, higher and more enduring hopes and ambitions. One of the world's greatest characters, from whose mind the illusions of youth had long since been dispelled, and who was impressed with the changing order of things in his day, and with the transient character of all temporal things, exclaimed: "But now abideth faith, hope, love, these three; but the greatest of these is love." Blessed is the man who, as the dreams and illusions of youth fade away, comes to recognize, and to cherish in his heart, those enduring elements of character which shall abide forever!

What is faith? How far short of the reality do our definitions often fall! Faith is spiritual perception. It is the soul's vision of unseen realities. "It is the substance of things hoped for, the testing of things not seen." It is the power that distinguishes the spiritual from the material; the temporal from the eternal; the higher from the lower good. When temptation offers its alluring bribe, involving dishonor and the forfeiture of God's approval, faith is the quality that discerns the superior value of the spiritual blessing that would be forfeited, over the material good that would be gained, and that spurns the offer. By faith we hitch our wagons to a star, and work in harmony with the infinite and the eternal. Through faith men of ordinary abilities may become heroes and achieve the most difficult and daring deeds. Through the channel of faith God communicates his saving truth and grace to the believing heart, purifying it, and making it the very temple of God—a dwelling place for his Holy Spirit. By faith men prefer poverty to dishonesty; persecution and bitter opposition to popularity in wrongdoing; a good conscience to the highest position obtained by false methods; truth, at the price of rack and prison, to error, with all earthly emoluments. "Faith comes by hearing." It comes by doing right as we see the right. It allies the soul with God. The man who says he has faith and turns his back on God for gain, or popularity, or position, falsifies his profession. In a word, "we are justified by faith," because faith brings us into reconciliation and harmony with a just God.

What shall we say of hope? In its enduring form it is the child of faith. It is the beautiful angel that is always singing its sweet songs of cheer through the dark and cloudy days. Its eye is to the future, and it never fails to see a silver lining on the darkest cloud that shadows its pathway. If the path be rough and steep and thorny, hope says: "It is better farther on." If the night be long and dark and painful, hope says: "Affliction may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning." If earthly hopes all fail, and all our plans are frustrated, then hope lifts up its voice and declares that we have an inheritance eternal that fadeth not away, which God hath reserved for us." In the darkest hour of earthly loss it sings such songs as, "There's a land that is fairer than day," "The Home Over There," etc. And so by its anticipations, by its appropriations in the present of all the riches apprehended by faith in the future, hope dispels the gloom of the present and fills all the pilgrim journey with brightness and cheer. No man is poor who has a great hope; no man is rich, no matter what his earthly possessions, if he have no great enduring hope. Hope links us to the future, and makes us realize that we are children of immortality. "We are saved by hope"—when our hope centers in a divine Saviour.

But love is the greatest. "God is love." To love is to be Godlike. It was God's love for us that gave us a Saviour from sin. It was Christ's love for us that made him stoop down from being on an equality with God to the lowly position of a servant, and to the humiliation of the cross "for us men and our salvation." Love is always stooping down to lift up the fallen. It is, therefore, the inspiration of all our missionary activity. It is the power which causes our young men and women to turn their backs upon their native land and upon the honors and pleasures of the world, to preach "the unsearchable riches of Christ" in far distant lands. It is the love of Christ which they proclaim, and which they manifest in their lives, that is transforming the pagan world, and bringing it to the foot of the cross. Love is the great cementing power. It binds together families and churches and all associations of men, which have for their object human good. Love unites. Hatred separates. If we loved more and hated less, the church would be more united, and the world would say: "Behold, how these disciples love one another!" There is nothing more important at the present time than that the church universal, and our own particular Zion, should give heed to the things which abide, and especially, that they give the supremacy to love as the only power adequate to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace.

There is a growing feeling at the heart of Christendom that our present divisions are wrong, and that we must get closer together if the church is to accomplish its mission in the world. No better evidence of this fact could be asked than the great meeting of Protestant Christendom, which is to convene in Philadelphia on the sixth of December next. It is the first meeting of what is to be known as the "Federal Council," on the basis agreed upon in the great New York meeting three years ago. The representative men of all Protestant religious bodies of this country are to meet on that occasion with one question, whose answer they will seek, namely, "How may we best promote the fulfillment of Christ's prayer for the unity of His followers?" No such meeting would be possible if there were entire satisfaction, as there used to be, over the present divided condition of the religious world. It is because of the growing consciousness that unity is of God, and that divisions are carnal, that the churches are sending their representatives to meet in fraternal counsel, to consider ways and means of healing these divisions, and of bringing into closer co-operation all the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ. With what intense yearning the great Head of the church must look upon such an assembly, convened for the purpose of hastening the realization of that for which he prayed, and for which, indeed, he gave his life! Let the prayers of all who believe in the unification of the children of God, in order to the conversion of the world, pray that his blessing may rest upon the deliberations of that great assembly.

While co-operating sympathetically with all movements which look toward unity among Christ's followers, let us seek, as a primary duty, to close up our own straggling columns, heal our own divisions, emphasize lovingly, but loyally, the principles of the Reformation to which we are committed, and seek in every way to make our movement worthy of so holy a cause as that of Christian union. If, under the leadership of God's Spirit, we may go up to our Centennial at Pittsburg with hearts knit together in one great purpose, and pulsating in common with one great love, and animated by one great faith, in spite of difference of opinion, then we may worthily celebrate the completion of a century of history, and the world will take notice that, both by our plea for union and our practice of union, we are setting an example worthy of imitation by the whole religious world. There is only one path by which we can reach that goal, and that is the path of unity in faith, or in things essential; liberty in opinion, or in things not essential; and love in all things. In other words, it is only by restoring the original spirit and breadth of our plea that we can bring it to a victorious consummation.

How to Interest Our Business Men in Missions

Being the Presidential Address delivered at New Orleans at the Session of the American Christian Missionary Society.

By R. A. Long

When I was first informed that the subject of "How to Interest Our Business Men in Missions" should be the subject assigned me for this occasion, I was greatly pleased, believing it an easy topic to discuss, but I had not given it much thought before I discovered I was greatly in error, for I found that this question correctly answered would practically solve the great and vitally important problem of how to early convert all of the people of all the nations of the earth to the worship of "Christ, our Lord," and hence a question involving so much could not be intelligently discussed without most careful thought and consideration, and even then a most difficult, if not an impossible question to satisfactorily solve. My reason for making the statement that this question properly answered means the early conversion of the world is, that money in plenty and the influence of the lives of such men would produce this result, and if we can open the understanding of our business men as to the great value of this work, and touch their hearts as to the requirements of our Lord, the money in quantities sufficient will be forthcoming, and we must understand, brethren, from this source, and this source alone, can we hope to obtain money in great quantities, and so we can see at the outset, it seems to me, the gravity of the subject before us.

A Statement of Conditions.

The question might be asked, "Why the need of such great sums of money in order to the early conversion of the world?" Brother G. B. Van Arsdall, in an article entitled, "The Unshepherded Church and Ministerial Supply," published in The Christian-Evangelist July 23, of this year, among other valuable suggestions, said: "Two distinct problems are involved. First, the most effectual care of our existing churches by our present ministry. Second, the enlistment and training of a future ministry for the church. These are not speculative questions. The relation of the ministry to the Church is primary, fundamental. 'Tis true of religion as well as all other movements—their issue or success is primarily dependent on their leadership."

These statements are true, as every practical man will admit. The article also contains the statement that the Christian Church alone has 6,619 preachers, and between 10,000 and 11,000 congregations. Only about one-half as many preachers as congregations, the latter increasing at the rate of 150 annually. About 2,200 of them have no preaching at all; about 5,000 with preaching only part of the time, leaving somewhere between 2,500 and 3,000 having preaching all of the time. Who can doubt that, if we had sufficient men and means, all of these congregations would have preaching every Lord's day, and would be reaching at least twice the number of people and doing double the amount of good that now applies? Thus we need to increase in large numbers the ministry, and especially a highly educated ministry; a ministry, a large portion of which could fill with credit any pulpit in all the land. If I understand it correctly, only a very small proportion of our present ministry are so qualified. In order to this end, we need large sums of money for the endowment of schools or colleges in this and foreign countries; for the supplying of scholarships in abundance for free disposition, making it a comparatively easy matter for our young men to prepare themselves for the ministry as compared with present conditions. Such a provision, I believe, would supply the demand for an educated ministry, and hence take care of one of our most important problems. A sufficiency of money would mean our ability to send this ministry to preach the Word to the people in every hamlet throughout the world, and thereby fulfill the loving command of the Master. A sufficiency of money would enable our Church Extension Board to respond to every worthy call looking to the housing of congregations as soon as organized. With such an equipment, we would be in position to prepare the way.

In the material world, when the ground has been well prepared, good seed sown, the crop properly cultivated, an abundant harvest is usually the result. Why, under similar conditions in the spiritual world, should we not expect a rich harvest of souls, and even to a greater extent, for the loving Father is certainly more interested in our spiritual than in our material welfare. I venture the assertion, where men are properly approached, it will apply, for by nature we are a worshipful people; I mean the peoples of all the world. With an educated, industrious, pious ministry, we will have access to the understandings of our fellowmen, and when this result has been accomplished, we may soon hope to reach their hearts, and when their hearts have been deeply touched, their whole possessions, time, talents and money, will be at the command of those engineering the work for the Master.

Another one of the great and essential needs of money is to supply the physical needs of the helpless. We need money to establish in foreign lands most practical institutions of different kinds that will immediately appeal to the natives of said countries, for when we have shown our ability to help them in practical ways, we will have but little trouble in securing their most careful and earnest attention to the gospel of Jesus Christ, our Lord. We need money to build homes and care for the needy orphan children, in many cases take them out of the slums of our great cities, turn them from a course of sin and degradation to that course leading them to live the lives of honored Christian men and women. Can there, brethren, be a more sacred ministry, and is it not true that we are not, even to a limited extent, assuming our responsibilities in this direction?

The Success of Catholics.

In my opinion, the Catholic church is adding continually and greatly to its popularity, and hence to its membership, by their disposition, through hospitals and orphanages, to care for the unfortunates of the world, with or without money. This course not only appeals to those immediately helped, but those not needing such assistance are attracted by such humane interest and are led to become believers in such a religion.

Again, it would mean a fund to take care of a superannuated ministry, which it is a humane duty to meet, to say nothing about it being a religious duty; and just here I want to say, with all possible emphasis, qualifications considered, we pay our ministers much less than is paid by those engaged in commercial life, and I believe I speak the truth when I say, when an individual has been employed by a commercial house any great length of time, misfortune in the way of loss of health, or any other condition of a serious nature befalls him, he is usually looked after and cared for by his employers. Can we hope to pay our ministers less and then fail to take care of them in time of need, and even satisfy our own consciences, to say nothing about maintaining the respect and confidence of the world? If we fail in this, can it be said of us, "When I was thirsty, ye gave me drink; when I was hungry, ye gave me meat"? or, rather, will the opposite not apply? May God help us to be deeply impressed with this practical, humane privilege and sacred duty.

I made the statement a few moments ago that the influence of the lives of our business men meant much toward the conversion of the world. I made this statement for the reason that such men are usually leaders in the industrial world, are employers of workmen in numbers, in proportion to the magnitude of their business. In the aggregate, great armies are so employed, and the lives of their employers, or leaders, are closely watched, are an example to the employed in no small degree, and so it matters much as to whether their example be for good or for evil; and so, with such an important problem before us, is it not worth while to give most careful and serious consideration to the subject in hand?

But how are we to go about it to get the required attention of our business men? As a commercial problem, much of value might be said along the lines of the higher civilization, causing less of governmental expense, less of taxes, more consumption of those items entering into commercial life, leading to a great financial profit, but we should want to appeal to their higher and better senses.

My first suggestion would be that we should seek to educate our business men from the pulpit and through personal conferences to think less of selfish interests, showing them that selfishness disqualifies us for happiness, is one of the greatest sins of the age, prevents us seeing and comprehending the broader views of life, those visions that lift us into a higher plane of living. With all this evil removed, we are healthier, happier, better men, and much more useful in the communities in which we live; better fitted to preside over the household of which we may be husband and father, or the head.

The Intrusion of Self.

We should, in some systematic manner, get before our business men the great need of the work of missions; of what the influence of the teachings of the Master mean to communities, to states, to nations, and, above all, to individuals. Of course, in a sense we understand this now, but not in its deepest and truest sense; selfishness intrudes to prevent. In our great rush hither and thither seeking to make money, we do not stop to give thought as we should to the higher things of life, of our duty to Him in whose image we are made, of our duty to our fellowmen. For, after all, when we have failed in our duty to our fellowman, we have failed in our duty to God. But, again I say, how are we to get this before our business men so as to command their serious and most intelligent consideration? In my opinion, our financial secretaries of our various organizations could do much to solve this problem. It should be a most important part of their duties to visit and have a personal conference with our business men who are able to give from reasonably good to large sums to the work, but, in fact, are giving nothing; and to make these visits in the beginning more as a matter of education than for the purpose of raising immediate money, for education is quite necessary along these lines in order that men may understand and perform their duty. One of our wise old patriarchs, at one time, in talking to me about a husband and wife, who were splendid people, yet were not giving to the Cause as they should, said: "Considering that they were raised by most economical parents, and all their lives lived very economically themselves, they were doing very well. In fact," he said, "noting their growth and broader views, compared with some years ago, I feel greatly gratified."

Not Always Meanness.

And so I believe, in many cases, it is not a matter of meanness or littleness of heart, but a need of education looking to a larger view of these important matters; and, may I say, I am fearful our secretaries are too much inclined to solicit from our liberal givers, where the money may be easily had, even to a point of resentment, rather than to perform the unpleasant task of educating a greater number of our men to join those who already are responding so liberally and joyously to the calls of our Lord. And permit me to say right here, if we could get twenty of our men to give $5,000 a year each to some important matter that, say, three-fourths of them might agree upon, for a period of five years, it would be a move that not only in and of itself would accomplish great good, but I believe it would lead to a much larger number joining in some such proposition, and eventually accomplish results far beyond our fondest expectations. As I have before stated, I would be glad to be one of this number, and I repeat the offer at this time. To be very frank, I believe our ministry are somewhat to blame for the lack of this knowledge permeating the lives of our business men. Their counsel, advice, association, are rarely ever sought regarding such matters, and they only hear of the work when a sermon is preached on such a subject on a given day, when money is called for, or when they are approached at their office for a contribution. Such a course is likely to incline this class of our people to feel that they are not worth while only when their money is wanted. I should say, if they are expected to take an important part in this work, they should be consulted with to an extent.

I am of the belief that parlor conferences, as often as four times a year, should be held between the local minister and a few of the ablest and wisest counsellors of his flock for the purpose of discussing missions, as well as possibly other important problems involving the work of the church. This body of men should decide upon some definite plan of action, and I should say at least twice a year call meetings, at which dinner should be served at so much per plate, inviting all the men of the church, and at least two men foreign to the locality, good speakers and well posted on the topics to be discussed, to be present and give talks of about thirty minutes each. The remainder of the evening to be consumed by general discussion. Such a course would induce a spirit and interest, following later with substantial contributions that could hardly be expected when only hearing of the work from a sermon on one Lord's day. The work of the Y. M. C. A. is conducted somewhat on this plan, and the result of their efforts in the way of raising money for new buildings in the last few years has been marvelous. With such a plan in effect, it would not seem difficult to induce a gathering once or twice a year of a few of the ablest men of our churches, and more especially of our strongest churches—in each state—with a fixed program defining the subjects to be discussed. Soon this would result in such a meeting representing all the states, or national in its character. We have such conventions representing our business interests, lodges of various kinds, and I verily believe if the matter is taken hold of in the proper manner we may hope for such co-operation as will eventually produce the desired interest on the part of our business men. But let me emphasize the statement that, first of all, the local church must (and I believe through its pastor) create a local interest or organization, before the men of such a congregation will take the desired interest in a state or national conference.

I would advise that our national conventions be delegate conventions, and a fair percentage of said delegates be of our ablest business men. Our present plan is, according to the oft-repeated statement, "What is everybody's business is nobody's business," and the result is that no especial effort is made to get our business men to attend these conventions, such as would be true if delegates were selected, and hence we are minus their presence and, in consequence, in a very large degree, minus their counsel, their interest in the great missionary work of the church.

Business Men on Programs.

Again, I would advise, by all means, having our business men represented on our convention programs, for you can not get such men interested as you like unless you give them something to do. Business men are not satisfied in idleness; neither do they like the thought that they count for naught except when there is a call for money. Mr. Bryan, in his speech of acceptance, said: "There is a divine law of reward. When the Creator gave us the earth with its fruitfulness, the sunshine with its warmth, and the rains with their moisture, he proclaimed as clearly as if his voice had thundered from the cloud, 'Go work, and according to your understanding and intelligence shall be your reward.'" A practical truth, but as I understand it, it has to do only with the material world, and the reward is accumulation. While I believe it right and proper that we should honestly exercise our talents to their greatest possibilities in the accumulation of worldly possessions, yet the greater reward, "happiness," if you please, comes in the distribution, and may it be the prayer of the people, of the whole people of this convention assembled, that our business men everywhere may give to God their lives, their influence, and their accumulations to the end that his gospel may be proclaimed and take hold of the lives of all the people, in all the nations of the world.

AT CLOSE OF DAY.

The autumn wind is blowing
And o'er the ground is sowing
A shower of sere, dead leaves.
The sun is sinking slowly
Bathing the sky with glory
And the brown and crimson trees.

And when my life be ended,
The shade and shine all blended
In one harmonious whole;
Oh may the Light all glorious,
O'er sin and death victorious,
Bathe in beauty all my soul.

PRODUCE GAS

Hence Certain Foods Not Nourishing.

No matter how agreeable an article of food may be, if it causes bloating and gas in the stomach, it is not likely to be nourishing.

The gas thus formed is liable to cause actual, immediate harm by pressing against the heart.

An Oregon girl suffered in this way until she found the right kind of food. She writes:

"Two years ago I had given up all hope of having health and strength. After eating I had severe pain around the heart, and a choking sensation.

"During these spells I had to sit perfectly still, the slightest movement causing increased pain. Even breathing caused such sharp pain my heart seemed to turn over, making me take short quick breaths.

"Night after night without sleep, I would sit up and wait until morning, when the pains gradually lessened. I began to fear serious heart trouble.

"One day I was so miserable the doctor was called. After a careful examination he said it was gas from fermented food, pressing against my heart, that caused the trouble—otherwise my heart was all right.

"His medicine gave only temporary relief. I tried going without food, hoping I could find something which would agree with me. After I became quite weak, an aunt suggested Grape-Nuts.

"The first meal of this food caused no unpleasant effects, but made me feel stronger. At every meal I ate Grape-Nuts and grew better daily. I now have no trouble when I avoid pasty, starchy foods and stick to Grape-Nuts."

What Our Prosperity Should Mean

By H. K. Pendleton

A Convention Address.

The Apostle Paul said to the church at Rome: "I am debtor both to the Greek and to the barbarian, both to the wise and to the unwise, so as much as in me is I am ready to preach the gospel to you that are at Rome also."

He was, no doubt, thinking of the obligation which grew out of the fact that he had received the gospel. Christ had put the chain of salvation about his neck and led him captive in the service of others.

He was like one of a company of men in the desert perishing of thirst who had been given a drink on the condition that he must carry water to others. Now, while the obligation which springs from the gospel itself is the highest and strongest of all, still every blessing has its accompanying duty, and this same principle runs through them all. Every gift which God bestows upon us makes us debtors to some one. I am asked to speak this afternoon on, "What Our Prosperity Should Mean." I am asked to listen attentively to the divine message ringing in the great chorus sung by the ten thousand voices of prosperity, and proclaim this message to you to-day. The message is very easy to hear, but who has the wisdom or eloquence or zeal to proclaim it in all its fulness? Mr. Gladstone estimated that the wealth which was permanent, and could be handed down from one generation to another, produced during the first 1,800 years of the Christian era, "was equalled by that produced in the first fifty years of the nineteenth century, and that as much more was produced during the next twenty years." According to the estimate it is safe to say that one who is born to-day is born into the midst of five times as much wealth as one who was born previous to 1800.

Slaves Working for Us.

If we count all the forces that man has learned to use; steam, water, wind, fire, electricity and animals, it is a conservative estimate to say that in the United States there is a force equal to five able-bodied men working for every man, woman and child in the whole land. There are five mechanical and animal slaves at work for us from the time we are born until we die, every one of them given to us through other generations of toilers.

Josiah Strong estimates that the wealth of the United States increased between the years 1850 and 1904 from seven billion to one hundred and seven billion dollars. This marvelous material wealth is only a part of what has been given to us. The most intelligent men and women of the race have labored through long millenniums to produce a literature, and God has handed it to us at the nominal cost of printing and binding. The scientist, the inventor and the mechanic have been working for ages like so many bees storing up the rich product of their brains for this generation. The wisest and bravest of generations past have in heroic struggle poured out their intellect and their blood without reservation or measure, that we might sit under the sheltering shadow of the best government on earth. The great apostles of education and religion have battled with almost infinite patience and self-denial to prepare a people among whom it is our unspeakable privilege to dwell. There is no measure to the obligation of the man for whom God has wrought out through the ages the cradle of a Christian mother's arms, and laid him in its sheltering care.

I am only able to point a finger at the infinite in trying to give you some conception of the riches that are included in the term, "Our Prosperity."

But What Does it Mean?

First, Negatively: what if we shall fail to hear its message? What if we shall be faithless to the obligation which it brings to us? What if, instead of leaping upon its crest and making it carry us upward in the scale of manhood, as the vessel rides the waves, we allow it to roll over us and submerge us in materialism? A mighty force has come upon us and there is no escaping it. If we transform it into the forms of avarice, idleness, luxury, vanity, pride, cruelty, dissipation, it will destroy us, body and soul, root and branch. The heart will grow putrid with selfishness and vice, the body will rot under the influences of idleness, luxury and dissipation, and the mind be dragged from its throne of truth by the power of falsehood and passion. There is not one ray of hope, not a single star of promise, nothing but a dreary process of decay and devastation, disgrace and ignominy awaits us if we are carried away into the ocean of materialism by this flood of wealth. If we fail to hear and heed the message of this tidal wave of prosperity we stand before God and man convicted of ingratitude; the most contemptible of vices, mingling the elements of selfishness, injustice and cowardice in such proportions as to produce the qualities of the vulture's heart, the serpent's venom or the tiger's cruelty. Even the tiger seems to retain a memory of parental care and tenderness, which forbids it to hunt those beasts that have the semblance of its mother; but man's ingratitude ravishes the very heart of God from whom all blessings flow. Since it is true that as the gold-producing touch of Midas wrought his ruin so the touch of selfishness transforms the forces of prosperity into streams that blight and ruin us. It must be that God intended they should speak some other message than that of selfishness.

If you should see a great nation gathering millions of its men in camps, drilling, arming and equipping them, collecting great stores of ammunition and provisions, repairing roads, building bridges, throwing up fortifications, hurrying its navies from ocean to ocean with feverish haste, you would say all this preparation is not merely for amusement, to make a gala day, a parade and sham battle for the people; it means real war. And so the thoughtful mind can not look upon the preparation that God is making in this generation, and believe that it is all intended to minister to our selfishness and work our ruin. No, it means that God has a great campaign on hand. His prodigal children have wandered into far-off lands, and have been captured, degraded and enslaved by sin, and he is gathering his forces for their rescue. The war is already begun, the marching orders are already given, and the struggle is not to end till the last one has had the offer of liberty.

Brethren, this terrible prosperity seems to speak a message of divine desperation. God seems to be saying: "If my authority will not send you to the ends of the earth with the gospel message; if my pleading love fails to send you; if the wail of lost souls will not waken you from your selfishness and make you go, I will so glut you with wealth that your barns will not hold it and your selfishness can not consume it and you will have no other use for it but to send the gospel to the whole wide world."

On the other hand it speaks great encouragement. This wonderful task—the evangelization of the whole world—this task which heaven has been watching with supreme interest through the ages; this task that will make the age that accomplishes it the most famous throughout all eternity; this task has become possible to us, we can accomplish it in our day if we only will.

As I read those wonderful words of "Old Hickory," "The Union must and shall be preserved"—and thought how he meant them, how he was willing to give his time, his services, his prosperity, his very life to accomplish his purpose; I said to myself, if the Church of Christ would only say in the same way, with the same courage, the same self-denial, the same utter abandon of all self-interest, the whole world must and shall hear the gospel, it would not be ten years until the last slave of sin would have the offer of liberty.

DIDN'T KNOW

That Coffee Contained a Drug.

There are still some well-informed persons who do not know that coffee contains a drug—caffeine.

This drug is what causes the coffee habit and the many ailments that frequently develop from its habitual use.

"I was drinking coffee twice a day but did not know it was hurting me," writes a Neb. lady. "I don't think I had ever heard or read that coffee was harmful.

"Sometimes I couldn't lie down, had to sleep in a sitting posture, as the heart action was slow. The doctor did not ask me if I drank coffee and the medicine I took did not seem to help me.

"Finally I got so bad I could not drink half a cup, as the dull, heavy pain around my heart would be worse. I stopped it for a while and felt some better, but was soon drinking it again, and felt the same distress as before.

"Then I decided coffee caused my trouble, also my husband's, for he complained of severe heartburn every morning after breakfast.

"My daughter had used Postum on a visit and asked why we did not try it. We did, following directions about making it, and for four years we have used it and prefer it to coffee.

"My old trouble has entirely left me and my husband has no more heartburn. I can say from experience now that Postum is the most wholesome of drinks; any one can drink it three times a day without harm, but with decided benefit."

The Church of Christ and Men

The First Part of an Address delivered at New Orleans at the Foreign Christian Missionary Convention.

By C. M. Chilton

One of the most significant religious movements of our time is the current awakening of religious interest among the laymen of the church. This movement is not confined to any one denomination or group of denominations; nor has it any common origin or form of activity. It is appearing spontaneously wherever there are progressive Christian communities. It seems to be coming up from the depths of the growing spiritual life of the church.

What we have thus far is not an agitation that promises any immediate radical changes, but a gentle tide, as gentle as the dew, that is drifting multitudes of men Godward. Many a pastor's heart is being made to glow these days by the unexpected coming of increased numbers of men into active, generous service. There is a new responsiveness among men everywhere.

It is unaccountable that such a movement should arise at this time. Two characteristics mark the present age in its relations to religious faith: The first is a rampant commercialism. A succession of great discoveries and inventions has opened vast new fields of natural wealth for exploitation, and we are in the midst of a great industrial period which is offering unprecedented opportunities for gain. It is a feverish period, and multitudes are mad with its enchantments. Still greater multitudes are left to live in grinding poverty and ignorance.

Another Characteristic.

Criticism is the second characteristic. The modern mind, with its widening horizons, and free from the bondage of the past, has entered upon a new intellectual inspiration which is a veritable renaissance. An enthusiasm for the truth has seized upon it, and we are passing through a period of criticism. No institution, or tradition, however fixed, is free from its merciless inquiry. The most sacred truths of our religion are being subjected to its fierce fires. The people are bewildered and the church itself is feeling the chill of it. A spirit of materialistic skepticism pervades the times. And, lo, up into the midst of it all there comes from the depths a gentle, wide-encircling wave of warm, glowing life and multitudes of men, weary of the world with its vanity and despair, borne in by it are seeking the heart of God.

What shall be the outcome of it we can not know, but let us hope that it will bear us far. One thing is clear, the hour has come to send out a clarion call to men and to press upon their consciences the claims of Christ and his church.

The cause of righteousness is suffering incalculable loss by the neglect of men. Is is not true that Christian men seek power in the world but shun it in the church? In this mighty age with its enchantments, with its tremendous life pressure, and with its vast, titanic enterprises, which tower to the sky and fill the world with its clangor, men's spiritual vision is dim and their ears are not sensitive to the whisperings of Jehovah. They do not appreciate the supreme place of Christianity among the forces that make for individual and social progress. They do not grasp the essential value and dignity of its work. In consequence, though its members possess a very large portion of the world's wealth, the church is shamefully neglected and poor, and is often left to the women and children. The laymen's movement gives us hope that we are at the beginning of a new order.

A problem that confronts us upon the very threshold of this movement is that of its organization. Various societies, clubs, and brotherhoods have sprung up. Usually they enjoy a brief period of enthusiasm, with banquets, lectures, and other forms of entertainments. In time, however, the interest flags, and after a more or less prolonged illness, death ensues, though some for a long period continue to have a name to live. Many are experimenting and seeking to find a place that will insure a permanent interest. Some have suggested the use of ritual and passwords, such as are used in the popular secret orders of the day. But as yet no entirely satisfactory plan has been evolved, and there is no general drift in any direction.

Meanwhile the church itself is offering to us the plan of God for the organization of Christian men, and it may be that in looking for another we are in danger of sending adrift the whole movement. If Christianity itself, in its essential life and work, can not be made attractive to the men of this age, then it is perhaps hardly worth while to resort to other means.

Masculinity of Religion.

The church is essentially a masculine organization. Our religion from the first was cast in a masculine mold, and the masculine impress is upon every feature of it. It has a place for women and children in its perfect provision for human life, but man is recognized as the spiritual leader of society. It is instructive that from its very beginning God himself is conceived as masculine. From the first, the sacred covenant and its affairs were committed to men. The patriarchs, judges, prophets, priests and kings were men. The sacred writings were written by men, and breathe their masculine spirit. John, the forerunner, was a rugged man of the hills, having "his raiment of camel's hair and a leather girdle about his loins: and his meat was locusts and wild honey." Our Savior came as a man, the one truly kingly man that has lived, who wore the crown of royalty upon his soul and emblazoned in his person all of the graces of a perfect humanity. Matthia Claudius says of him: "A Redeemer from sin! A Savior such as the Bible depicts the Lor l Jesus to have been, who went about doing good, yet had himself no place where he might lay his head; who spared no pains, and refused no shame; who humbled himself even to death upon the cross, that he might finish his work; who came into the world to save the world; who was therein scourged and tormented and departed thence with a crown of thorns upon his head! Didst thou ever hear of such a thing, and do not thy hands fall down on thy lap? It is truly a mystery and we do not understand it; but it comes from God and heaven, for it bears the stamp of heaven and overflows with divine mercy. One might well suffer oneself to be branded and broken on the wheel for the mere idea, and he who can be stirred to laughter or mockery must be mad. He whose heart is in the right place lies in the dust, rejoices and prays."

Christ Worked for Men.

The teachings of Jesus are masculine; they mainly concern the problems of men. His parables for the most part were of men and his miracles upon men. Men responded to his call and were ever in the foreground of the great scenes of his life. He chose twelve to be his apostles, and it is to the proof of his power that they were held to him, save one, by an unfailing devotion until death; they worship him! He trained them for leadership, and at the last committed his sacred cause into their hands. Under the direction of the Holy Spirit the church was an organization of men. Its apostles, its elders, and deacons, and evangelists were men. Pentecost, with its twelve apostles in the foreground and a multitude of Jews, "devout men out of every nation under heaven," pressing around them, with its sermon by Simon Peter and its overwhelming triumph, was distinctively a men's meeting. Apostolic Christianity was masculine. Its most typical figure was St. Paul, a veritable second Ulysses, who loved to picture the true life in the images of warfare and the arena. And so the church has come down to us through the centuries, ever masculine.

Our first task, then, is to bring the men of to-day to know and love the church itself as Christ's own organization for his men. Whatever subsidiary organizations may prove to be necessary, it is well first to exhaust the resources of the church in its vast wealth of service and helpfulness for men. The idea is capable of an infinitely richer interpretation in every feature than it has ever been given. It offers opportunities for the widest expansion of activity, and is designed to music every chord of the human heart.

But churches are narrow and selfish and cold. "They teach for doctrine the commandments of men." They are divided into parties and sects. There is no glow, no fervor, no Christlike love, no large humanitarian enterprise, no vision, no sacrifice, no heroism, no deep devotion that expresses itself in the most delicate refinement in every detail of its life that inspires the finest art, the purest speech, the noblest conduct.

The current effort in behalf of men is demanding an entire regeneration of church life. The liberalizing movement which began with Luther must continue till the Church is a real democracy where every member has an opportunity for the fullest expression and development of his entire spiritual nature; it must come to be the very body of Christ in which every member feels himself an essential and integral, though self-conscious, unit, possessed by the spirit of Christ and moved by his every thought and purpose. There must be a generous disposition to use in official and other service all of its powers for the accomplishment of the saving work of Christ. Strong men will not long be satisfied with being mere paying attendants, especially where a few small-minded men have arrogated to themselves the authority, and where the Church has become a mere human pretense, its altar fires all gone out. They will not rebel, they will quietly retire.

Let us contemplate the ideal of the Church. First is its material expression, the house of God. The Greek religion inspired the noblest painting and sculpture and architecture of antiquity. Our holy religion offers a far richer inspiration in its wealth of tradition and truth and emotion. The ideal church will be greater than Karnak and more beautiful than the Parthenon. And there is the invisible presence of God and Christ and the Holy Spirit filling the house and making it sacred far beyond every other earthly shrine, and the very image of the heavenly. And there is the life divine, pure as the crystal river that flows from under the throne, and "sins though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool." Is it not a beautiful idealization—the coming of God's children upon the Lord's day in sweetest fellowship to worship and to cultivate the life of God in their souls, their elders and deacons leading them like shepherds, and then going out with the glow of the altar upon them to purify the life-currents of the world? And what beautiful and impressive services with their simple religious melodies and prayers and solemn instructions from God's word! And the ordinances—baptism and the supper—with their simple, yet sublime symbolism. Do we grasp their profound significance? I fear in our radical reaction from Rome we ourselves have need to set out upon a search for the Holy Grail and the Sacred Sepulchre. These ordinances are beautiful gems set to adorn the beauty of the bride of Christ. They ever reflect his humility and glory. And the Bible—that holy book from whose pages shines a light that is from heaven. Its writings are "profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." And over all these sacred elements, leading on like a pillar of fire, is the hope of immortality.

My brethren, the Church is a perfect organization for men, that towers like its beautiful spires above all the low-lying levels of human life, infinitely rich in its provision for man's moral nature. Higher we may not go. All other lights are borrowed lights. Remove from Masonry and kindred orders their Christian truth and you have destroyed them. There is no light that ever shone in any temple that is not in this sacred shrine. There is no glory that ever sat on prophet, priest or king that is not here. Here men may come with their families to find God. Here the pageant of history passes and Memphis and Babylon and Athens and Rome speak their solemn oracles and every age and generation brings its offering. Here the word is made flesh and we behold "his glory as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth." Here is the heart current of the world's life; here are the most solemn and impressive services; here official service is invested with true dignity. Here are the profoundest reflections and the sweetest treasures of memory. Here sin is forgiven and men become sons of God and learn to live in simple faith and love and hope.

But we have yet to consider the work of the Church, for another problem that lies at the threshold is what shall we give these men to do? For it is certain that if they are not given work that appeals to them, they will turn away to the more congenial tasks of the world. Many suggestions have been made—lecture courses, banquets, socials, various educational and benevolent enterprises. Here again we are in danger of going astray. For, again we may say, if we can not make Christianity in its essential life and work attractive and congenial to men it were hardly worth while to resort to other means. The Church must convince them of the worth of its work, for however beautiful its ritual and forms, if it can not be made to appear that there is a substantial enterprise with substantial results it can hardly hope to survive in this practical age. Let us consider then the enterprise of the Church.

Flashes of Thought and Humor at the Convention

By JAMES SMALL.

Frank M. Dowling, in as stirring and able an address as the convention heard, said in it: "If the Disciples stand for nothing, I move that we stand adjourned."

Ira M. Boswell told of a colored preacher who came to see him in his study. This preacher, it seems, was in trouble over an appointment he had received. He said to Brother B.: "Good morning, doctor; I am in trouble." "Well," said Boswell," if I can help you I shall certainly be glad to do it." "Well, sir, you sure can. I have great confidence in your ability, sir." "What might the trouble be?" "Well, you see, sir, I was elected last night as chairman of the trustees of the Baptist Church, and I wants you to help me to functionate my capacity."

"Ordinarily," said one of the speakers at the C. W. B. M., "I weigh one hundred pounds; but when I get mad I weigh two hundred. Now if we can get pitched up to a high key of enthusiasm, each one of us will weigh a ton this Centennial year."

A speaker, addressing a college, spoke so long that the young men got very tired. The lecturer noticed it, but thought he would save his audience from stampeding the room, and said: "Young men, I want you to understand that I am speaking to future generations." One of the young men yelled, as he was going out the door: "Yes, and if you don't stop soon they will be here to listen to you."

J. M. Gordon, of Wilmington, Ohio, in an address at the First M. E. Church, said: "Young men are entering life in a new age. The whole trend of thought is different. The old idea was that the life that got the most out of the world was the successful life. Now greatness consists in studying how much we can put into it. The old idea was 'Come up and get saved!' The new idea is 'Come up and get lost—lost to self, and lost to one's ambition'." In a word: Come up and be saviors.

That was a great verse he quoted when he told the story of Conrad the cobbler, as written by Edward Markham. After telling how Conrad waited for the Great Guest to come, and how, while he was waiting, he helped the beggar and the poor woman and the homeless child, he quoted the poem, of which the following is the last verse:

"The sun went down in the golden west,
And with it the hope of the blessed guest;
And Conrad sighed as the world turned gray,
'Why is it, Lord, that your steps delay,
Did you forget that this is the day?'
Then soft in the silence the voice he heard
'Lift up your heart. I have kept my word—;
I was the beggar with bruised feet,
I was the woman you gave to eat,
I was the child in homeless street.'"

"The present Christ" is found, as Brother Gordon said, "in the needs of men."

R. H. Crossfield was toastmaster at the Transylvania University banquet, and he was a good one. In introducing W. H. Sheffer, of Memphis, he said that Brother Sheffer had preached once at a place and the announcement in the paper the next morning read: "W. H. Sheffer, of Memphis, preached yesterday in the Christian Church. The house will be closed for repairs for the next three weeks."

They told this one on A. C. Smither, in the convention. It is well known that he has been in California for a number of years and that at every opportunity he says a good word for that country. At a Quaker funeral, which he attended, the preacher failed to show up, and there was no one to conduct it. After a solemn silence, however, Mr. Smither rose to his feet and said: "In the absence of any other speaker, I rise to make a few remarks on the climate of California."

One of our preachers went out into a backwoods community and fell in with a "darkie" preacher who learned that our preacher was a minister in the Christian Church. On hearing the news he remarked genially: "Well, doctah, there's one o' you-all's doctrines that I suttinly does b'lieve, an' dat am baptism fo' de commission ob sins!"

John A. Stevens went into one of the counties of Mississippi and was accosted by one of our old brethren who had, as he thought, for many years fought the battle single-handed. "Well, sir," he said, "I have been standing here alone for many years, and I have kept telling them that we did not believe in religion; and I am mighty glad, Mr. Stevens, that you have come along to prove it." He was a Campbellite, sure enough.

Miner Lee Bates told of a man that was so cross-eyed that when he cried the tears ran down his back, and so he had performed an operation for backteriology.

Mrs. Ayars, of St. Louis, said that at one time she said it was impossible for Wm. M. Taylor to take the convention to New Orleans; but when she saw his wife she said it would be possible—and it was!

Some one told a story of an Irishman who went to see a phrenologist. The learned gentleman gave Mike quite a favorable examination, remarking that Mike, by the great bump he had on his head, ought to have been a bishop. Mike, always ready, replied: "Indade, if Patrick Murphy had hit me a little harder, I moight have been a pope!"

Some one said this about James Small. When he went once into Brown County, Ind., to preach, he took a team of horses. A boy was sent to put them up. He asked Small several questions, among them being "Is this your team? Is this your harness? Is this your rig? Are both these horses yours?" At this juncture Mr. Small replied again in the affirmative, demanding from the boy why he asked this latter question. To which the boy replied, "Why, my pa said you were a one-horse preacher."

The Foreign Society's Sessions

Foreign Mission day, as represented by the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, was, as usual, on the Monday of the convention. This was the thirty-third annual meeting. Before the business session there was a short service of song by the choir, under the direction of Prof. W. E. M. Hackleman. President McLean announced committees. Among the men on the platform were President Long, representing the home society, and W. S. Dickinson, for many years treasurer of the foreign society. The latter occupied the chair during a portion of the session. President McLean varied his announcement to the ladies, remarking on this occasion that they "will remove their magnificent creations of the milliners' art so that the men behind them may see." F. M. Rains called attention to some of the things in the report, pointing out that it was the hardest year of the society's work, yet never had there been such interest. The average of the gifts was about one dollar more than ever before, but the smallest amount in annuities had been raised since this method had been adopted. There were four new living-link churches in Texas alone, and two in Cincinnati, both of these latter being new churches. Calling attention to the wonderful work in Africa, Secretary Rains said, in his striking way, "Bolenge is not in Texas or Ohio." This church gave over $600 in American money, which puts it in rank with even the best churches in the homeland; but when one considers that the wages of this people are about 10 cents a day, the contribution is equal to $6,000 contributed by any American church. Brother Moon who, with his wife, expects to go to Africa very shortly, will be supported by G. H. Waters, while Miss Ford, of Michigan, will support her own missionary. "You may have heard of the question of expense—some of us have," said Brother Rains, as he brought out the significant fact that the mission churches themselves have contributed about $36,000 more than all the cost of the society, which from one point of view vindicates the whole question of expense. He called for fifty new living link churches this year. The past twelve months, he said, had been a hard time for borrowing money. "It reminded us of war days; kept us awake at night, but we are still here, friends, and we are going on to do larger things." President McLean was cheered as he rose to read his report, an abstract of which was published in our columns last week. The number of conversions was not as large this year as last year, yet gains are encouraging, and the percentage of increase high. All told, 1,314 conversions were added during the year, being an increase of about 13 per cent. The work is growing especially rapidly in the Philippines. The next largest number of additions was in Japan—224—with Bolenge following with 216 converts. These figures, of course, do not represent the actual progress. Chairman Dickinson stated that the treasurer was not present, so F. M. Rains gave a summary of the financial report. It showed an expenditure of $26,000 more than the amount taken in. The payments of the year amounted to over $300,000, while loans, returns of deposits and miscellaneous disbursements made up about $10,000, leaving a cash on hand September 30, 1908, of nearly $17,600, about half the amount that was in hand a year ago. The direct receipts of this year amounted to over $274,000. The adoption of the report having been moved by T. A. Abbott and passed A. I. Myhr led in a prayer of thanksgiving and supplication.

Then came the hour for the introduction of the missionaries. First came M. D. Adams, with his twenty-five years' record in India, with brief return trips on three occasions to the homeland. It was a joy to all present to see this man who, like G. L. Wharton, has given himself body and soul to the great land of idols and caste. Brother Adams made a brief speech, and was followed by G. W. Brown, who told of the educational work in the same great country. Dr. Butchart, who has spent many years in China, said that the thing they had to fight most was skepticism. He pointed out how medical work gave a point of contact with the people, just as Standard Oil and other western products. The Chinese find these things good, and are willing to use them, so when they find themselves helped by the medical missionaries, they are ready to listen to them when they attempt to deal with their spiritual natures. He drew a contrast between the first year of their work, when he had but a dozen cases, and the last year, when no less than 33,000 patients visited his hospital. Mrs. Butchart spoke of how she went calling with her husband, and instanced some of the funny things that happened before they were able to get on friendly terms with the women. Dr. Layton, formerly of the Congo, but more lately of the China field, spoke of the growth of opportunity in the open doors, and said that it was perfectly reasonable to assume that amid the changes there will, also, be a change of religious faith. H. P. Shaw, of Shanghai, reported that the Chinese have a work of their own at his station among their fellows. There is a school of 100 boys at the institute. They sadly need a new building. Mrs. Shaw asked the question whether it was worth while. She told of how one old Chinese woman of the age of 72 had been the means of bringing 300 into the church. Dr. Nina Stevens told of her kindergarten of 80 messengers of the gospel, and Miss Armbruster brought greetings from the Tokyo mission, which in June celebrated its silver jubilee. W. F. Hanna, after six and one-half years' experience in the Philippines, said he wished to spend his life in the work in this land, which had been the football of politics so long. He told of almost 3,000 converts, many of them from heathenism, and many, also, from Catholicism. He said there were 200 men and women who are now able to preach to others. Hermon Williams was merely introduced, as he was to speak on another occasion. Mrs. Dye, who almost sacrificed her life in her enthusiasm for the work at Bolenge, said she had seen the miracle of the gospel and its effects on the people of the dark continent. W. D. Cunningham, of Tokyo, gave a brief account of his work among the better classes of the people of that city. Brother Cunningham is not under the direction of the F. C. M. S. Mr. and Mrs. Moon, Miss Parker, Miss Sylvia Siegfried, who are to go to the foreign field shortly; Roscoe Hill, late of Cuba, and several missionaries of the C. W. B. M. were also introduced. Then came an address from Dr. Dye, on "The Call of the Congo." In his thrilling manner he narrated some of his experiences among the people, who "wore not much more than their birthday clothes," and where, as he said, there is "not even slang in the language yet, though we may take some of it back to them from what we pick up at home." As a result of missionary influences he was able to say that Bolenge was "a little more Christian than New Orleans to-day, for when a chief wants to get on a drunk he has to go away from home." Dr. Dye was careful to point out that this African mission had been the work of no one man. Credit belonged to others than those at present engaged in it, while the Lord's hand was in it all.

Then came the most thrilling moment of the whole convention. The missionaries grouped themselves on the platform, and "Jesus Loves Me, This I Know," was sung first in Chinese, then in Japanese, Hindu, Illocani of the Philippines, and finally Dr. and Mrs. Dye gave it in a duet in the Lunkundo language of Africa. The chorus was taken up each time by the large audience in English.

Immediately after the morning session, a photograph was taken of such of the delegates as cared to stay, and will be found on another page. After the devotions opening the afternoon session, Finis Idleman gave an excellent address on "The Preacher as a Missionary Leader," emphasizing that the occasion is ripe for active missionary undertakings; natural paralysis would follow any stoppage of the quests and researches after knowledge. The world, he said, can be won for Christ if the energies of all workers are bent in that direction.

H. K. Pendleton delivered an address which will be found on another page. Its title was, "What Our Prosperity Should Mean." It was one of the briefest of the convention addresses, but was quite to the point, and delivered in an effective manner.

F. M. Rains conducted a symposium on "The Centennial," during the course of which there were a number of brief talks. A. R. Moore spoke on "The Centennial and Wider Missions," saying that there were three essentials necessary to a great cause, namely, great principles, capable leaders and adequate means. He claimed that it was the duty of the living church to follow and obey the Master, and if our Cause does not succeed, it will be because we have been untrue to our principles. J. C. Mason spoke on "The Missionary Character of Our Plea." The most destructive criticism in our work to-day, he said, is the criticism of our work and workers. This will destroy missionary activity. Cephas Shelburne made a strong plea for larger gifts. We need to feel the burden as never before, he said, and preach, pray and give ought to be the dominant notes of every Disciple. One thousand men, he said, could give $1,000 each and not feel it. Ten thousand men could give $100 each and be made the richer. One hundred thousand could give $10, and there are a million who could throw into the basket a dollar each. G. L. Bush spoke of "The Centennial and Missionary Obligation." The Centennial, he said, gives the opportunity to every man—to thousands loafing—to do his duty. The church, he said, would have to be converted to missions before the heathen can be converted to Christ. J. J. Morgan spoke on "The Centennial and the Missionary Preacher." No other men, he said, have preached so successfully as those we have on the mission field. Are we, he asked, now going to let down the banner? Rather, he said, should we pursue the sole purpose of the church, which is to make Christ known to the ends of the earth. President H. M. Bell spoke of "The Relations of the College." The twelve apostles, he said, were prepared men—each trained under the divine Teacher, who never commissioned ignorant or untrained men to do his great work. Alexander Campbell, too, saw the necessity of an enlightened ministry, and established Bethany College. The foreign society realizes this, and is choosing trained men. But our colleges are not adequate to meet the demand. A. P. Johnson made an excellent speech on "The Missionary Study of the Bible in Relation to the Centennial." All people are missionary, he said, unless tampered with, and emphasized the need of studying the lives of Christ's disciples, and all who have been missionaries. H. C. Garrison, speaking on "The Missionary Spirit of Our Plea," said that the supreme regard for the will of God had led to our zeal in evangelizing, to which we owed the splendid victories which we are to celebrate at Pittsburg. Any waning of loyalty would mean a waning of power. A. W. Fortune said the great mission of Jesus was to bring the more abundant life, and that we would not fulfill our mission if we give merely to make big records or to surpass other bodies. The highest aim is to know Christ better, and to exalt him more. W. H. Hanna spoke of the present day opportunities in the Philippines, where we need six iron-hearted evangelists who can swim and have no fear. We need a medical missionary, and there are splendid openings to us through the schools. M. D. Adams, speaking of the opportunities in India, said there are great openings, because the government there is stable; because there are such fine railroad facilities, and because India holds the key to the Mohammedan world. Miss Armbruster, speaking for Japan showed how the period of imitation had led to the period of receptivity, and how it was encouraged by the gift of the emperor to the Y. M. C. A. The election of A. W. Place to a professorship in the university, where he is to give two hours of lectures on Christianity, is a great step in advance. Dr. Dye spoke of the great openings in Africa, and President Bates, of Hiram, addressed himself to "The Centennial and What Next?" This was an especially fine deliverance, and we hope to give it in fuller form. This most helpful session was closed by the Netz sisters singing "Cast Thy Bread Upon the Waters," and the benediction by Evangelist A. Martin.

In the evening S. J. Corey spoke on "The Strategic Things in the World Conquest." In his opinion, the most strategic thing in this century for the accomplishment of that purpose is the Bible school, as it prepares the young people for missionary labors. One hundred years ago seven-eighths of the inhabited portions of the earth were barred from a missionary, but now the barriers are all down. A hundred years ago the Bible was translated into 136 languages and dialects, while now the number is 516, and eight-ninths of the population of the globe can have access to the Word of God. He made a strong plea for world-wide evangelization, and the bringing into line the Bible school with this end in view.

H. P. Williams spoke on behalf of a college in the Philippines. For a great many years there was no missionary from any of the Protestant churches in that country, and not even parts of the Bible were permitted to enter, but the situation is now altered, and any Christian church has free entry. Our own brotherhood is represented by four missionaries, 34 churches, 41 unorganized groups and 171 native preachers. The need for the college comes from the fact that these men ought to have training. While two Filipinos have come to this country, one to prepare himself as an evangelist and the other as a mechanical engineer, the vast majority of the natives are unable to do this, being poor. The proposition, therefore, is to buy a farm and give the natives an opportunity to make a living while studying in our college.

The next speaker was C. M. Chilton, whose theme was, "The Men of America for the Man of Galilee." This was one of the greatest addresses of the convention, nad we publish on other pages the first part of it, and will conclude it next week.

The Interests of the Home Field

Ernest W. Elliott opened the Home Society program on Tuesday morning with a reading of the scriptures. F. W. Burnham delivered the convention sermon, which was in every way worthy. On motion of W. F. Richardson, a telegram of sympathy was sent by the convention to J. H. Garrison, whose illness prevented his attendance and keeping his engagement on the program. W. J. Wright called attention to the report, reading extracts. G. W. Muckley made a statement about the committee on calendar, explaining the genesis of the meeting of the committee and the action taken upon it by the board of directors, which had wiped out the committee that had been continued at Norfolk, and made provision for a new committee, which is to include three representatives of all the societies, with the exception of state organizations, which are each to have one representative. The recommendation to the convention was adopted.

When the time came to present the new constitution there was some confusion just as there had been in the board meeting, where the matter was thoroughly threshed out. W. R. Warren read it as a report of the board of directors to the convention after a revision of the committee's report. It was finally adopted.

George W. Muckley presented the report of the board of church extension managers, and moved its adoption. He made the statement that a committee appointed at Buffalo had, for two years, been working on this report. By the new constitution, the delay caused by sending the papers of the church extension board to the home board at Cincinnati would be avoided. He also stated that the change was recommended by the American Society Board. After this explanation the report was adopted without discussion.

Palmer Clarkson, presenting the matter of the publication house in the absence of the chairman of this committee, C. S. Medbury, said that several meetings had been held by various members of the committee, but this was not ready to make a complete report, and asked further time, which was granted. Professor Deweese moved that the chair appoint a committee of three to consider amendments to the constitution. There followed a fine address by I. J. Spencer, "The Shepherd and the Missionary Problem." This we hope to give in fuller form in the columns of The Christian-Evangelist, so will make no effort to epitomize it here. It was received with great favor. Just before the close of the morning session W. M. Taylor pointed out that $14,000 was charged in the report to administration, which really ought to be charged up on missionary education. This matter was referred to the executive committee for consideration in next year's report.

L. W. McCreary led the devotions in the afternoon session. The first speaker was R. H. Crossfield, the newly elected president of Transylvania University. He spoke on a subject, the two parts of which he is thoroughly familiar with. He is an expert Sunday-school man and a successful evangelist. His theme was "The Relation of the Sunday-school to the Evangelization of America."

R. A. Long, president of the A. C. M. S., and chairman of the convention, then delivered his address, which will be found in this issue of The Christian-Evangelist. It was expected that it would discuss some phase of the business men's relation to the church. It was a practical address, well thought out, and Mr. Long had no occasion whatever to apologize for it. If he has not had the education of the schools, he has a grip on the problems of every day life, and his treatment of such a theme as how to interest business men in home missions was as vital a one as could have been discussed in any session of the convention. After the presentation of some flowers to Mr. Hackleman by A. C. Smither, on behalf of admirers, J. B. Briney suggested that the president's address be published in the minutes and widely distributed.

The nominating committee here made its report.

When the board of evangelization members were named a point was raised, and the word "committee" was accepted instead of "board." I. J. Cahill, reporting for the committee on time and place, named Pittsburg, of course, and October 11-17 as the date. Brother Long remarked that this committee "deserved our thanks for the hard work performed." W. R. Warren read letters from the mayor and other important functionaries in Pittsburg from which it appeared that our membership in that city has more than doubled since 1891.

C. A. Finch, on behalf of a Kansas delegation, moved that it be the sense of the convention that Topeka, Kan., should entertain the convention in 1910. The motion, however, was tabled, the convention seeming to feel that it would be unwise to make a definite promise. Brother Sebastian moved that the recommendation of the board of directors that a committee should be appointed to work with a similar committee appointed by the Foreign Society, with regard to the matter of a permanent building for the societies, be approved, and this was adopted, as was also the report of the prayer-meeting topics committee.

There followed a very interesting half-hour with the home missionaries, a number of whom were introduced and made brief talks. A photograph of some of these men and women appears on our cover page this week. H. A. Denton had charge of this part of the program. Claude E. Hill spoke of the great openings in the South; John A. Stevens, the veteran evangelist of the American field, who began work for the A. C. M. S. nineteen years ago, told of some of his experiences in the Southern field. He has established over fifty churches. There were but three Disciples in five counties when he started the church in Hickory, Miss. Mrs. Stevens, who is his able helper in all his work, told how she had a hand in putting up the tents, cleaning the lamps, leading in music and carrying on personal work. R. L. Porter, of Baton Rouge, where there has been such a heroic struggle to save our church building, said that a little congregation of forty active members had raised $1,500 last year. Among those active members only six were men. F. F. Grim told of the opportunities in the great state of New Mexico. "Now is the time," he said, "to get in on the ground floor. It is a great opportunity for Christian union." One thing he noted was that he had failed to find a single individual in that great territory who had gone there to increase his spiritual health. Marcellus Ely spoke of Charleston, conservative as a clam, but which is one day to be one of the great ports in the Southland. Lawrence Wright, from the Dakotas, said that there were but twenty-six of our congregations in both these states of wide extent. The importance of the field was merely suggested in the remark that a thousand carloads of immigrants were taken there in one month. J. A. L. Romig spoke of a still greater territory—Northwest Canada—where four millions of acres were taken up in homesteads in the first sixteen days of September. During the last three years more than 300,000 Americans have gone there. So glowing was his picture that President Long remarked: "I think this is a land agent we have." Grant K. Lewis, the live wire of Southern California, spoke of its unrivalled climate and other glories. As for our progress, we have sixty-nine churches, and all these save three had resident pastors last year. Nelson Trimble, full of enthusiasm, told of his work at Christian Center, Baltimore. Mr. and Mrs. Taylor, who represent our cause in the convention city, were introduced. He said: "New Orleans is my field, the gospel my message, the A. C. M. S. my support, and my good wife my defender—she fights all my battles for me."

William Pearn spoke of opportunities in the Panama Canal Zone. E. C. Harris spoke briefly of the work in East St. Louis, and H. K. Coleson, who has long worked in the delta of Mississippi, told of the social ostracism of the vast heathen population of that field. G. A. Reynolds, of Jackson, Miss., told of overcoming prejudices, and the adding of sixty new members from the older religious bodies during the past year. J. J. Taylor, corresponding secretary of Arkansas, spoke of conditions there. J. E. Spiegel said that more men had been employed in Mississippi during the year, more money raised, and probably more additions than in any previous year. T. A. Cox, of Florida, had a brief word, and Thomas Lenox, of Pensacola, said that in the congregation there every member had contributed for home missions. J. L. Haddock, who has worked widely in the Southwest, spoke of the great camp meeting originated by O. J. Wood, who was present in the audience. New churches are dotting the district, and it is expected that this famous meeting will be given up. R. A. White, S. J. White, W. G. Walker, Mrs. Haddock and J. B. Arnold were other missionaries introduced.

There was a fine attendance at the evening session, which started out in the martial spirit that is inspired by the singing of "Onward Christian Soldiers," which was led on the cornet by Mrs. J. A. Stevens. F. M. Dowling was the speaker of the evening, and his address on "The Conquest of America," was given with all his best eloquence. At the conclusion of this address a telegram received from J. H. Garrison, in response to the one sent to him by the convention, was read, and A. L. Orcutt reported the figures on the collection taken at the communion service on Sunday. Very appropriate, following such a speech as Brother Dowling's came the singing of "America" by the Netz sisters.

The program called for an address by E. L. Powell on "The Disciples of Christ, their Plea and Progress," but the speaker failed to appear. The time was, therefore, given to the temperance board, which had been scheduled to make its report on Wednesday afternoon. Dr. Hall, the secretary, read the constitution, which was quite a lengthy document. He stated that an evangelist had been secured by the board and had been very well received. Among the recommendations was the one to preachers to devote one sermon annually to the subject of the temperance work, and take a collection; the suggestion that there should be a temperance committee in each church, the condemnation of alcoholic wine at the communion service, and a protest against the shipment of intoxicating liquors into states where there was prohibition, was made. J. H. O. Smith, the programmed speaker, failing to appear, the convention was aroused to new enthusiasm by the substitute, J. B. Cleaver, of San Antonio, Texas. Brother Cleaver is not well known to the brotherhood. Many years ago he was known as one of our brilliant preachers, and was located in New York City, among other prominent fields. It is impossible to epitomize his speech, but he aroused the audience to enthusiasm with the facts he presented, and the unique way in which he set them forth. No speech in the convention made a greater hit. William Oeschger, of Vincennes, Ind., followed in a speech with points as well as humor. After the adoption of the report Mr. Van Camp, Charles R. Scoville's singer, entertained and stirred the audience with two temperance action songs.

The Affiliated Interests

Old Ministers and Church Extension.

The board of ministerial relief was to the front on Wednesday morning. J. W. Holsapple led the devotions, after which A. L. Orcutt presented the report of the board. This indicated that the number of contributors was a 25 per cent gain over last year, while the amount of contributions was 35 per cent more than last year's. There was 100 per cent gain in the $100 contributions, and in the five-year contributors there was a 44 per cent gain.

Vernon Stauffer made a great speech on behalf of this cause. It was altogether the most finished address of the convention, and those who heard Brother Stauffer in his great effort at the St. Louis convention will have some idea of the character of his production. The man was filled with his message, and he gave it forth as one who deeply believed that the cause of Christ shall be served by self-abandoned men. We hope to be able to give at least a part of this address to the readers of The Christian-Evangelist.

George W. Muckley presented the report of the church extension board, and had a large map to illustrate some of its work. He pointed out that the blue spots on the map, indicating certain churches to whom money had been loaned, had returned $800,000 of these loans. He also noted that $700,000 was in the permanent fund, and all the transactions of the board had been carried on with a loss of only $560. Since the first of May no applications have been granted, except some small ones from named loaned funds. An outline of the report will appear elsewhere.

Fletcher Cowherd, president of the board, made an admirable address on it and its work, and this will be reported more fully in another column.

Burris A. Jenkins was a special speaker on behalf of this cause.

The first order of business on Wednesday was the reports from committees. L. D. Riddell presented that on courtesies. President Long especially emphasized the meed of praise due to W. M. Taylor and his fellow workers, and A. L. Orcutt then moved that it was the sense of the convention that something worthy should be done in the way of help to the church in New Orleans. Finis Idleman handled the matter of recommendations, and Colby Hall the report on Christian Endeavor. There was no educational session proper. The national Bible school program was introduced here, it having been decided to have no session on Thursday afternoon. Some report of this has already appeared in The Christian-Evangelist. Prof. H. L. Calhoun was the special speaker, and we hope to give in fuller form than is possible here his address. He sketched the history of Bible schools and dwelt on the question of the international Sunday-school lesson system.

Benevolence.

Then came the National Benevolent Association's session. Mrs. Ayars was in the chair and made a very happy reference to the chivalry of the South and the statue of Margaret in New Orleans, the only one in all this land erected to a plain woman. The report of the nominating committee, whose chairman was W. J. Morley, was presented by Sidney Thompson and was adopted. The new president is J. W. Perry, a member of the Hamilton Avenue Christian Church, St. Louis, and a man prominent in banking circles in that city. J. H. Mohorter presented the report of the year's work, which is one worthy of attention. R. H. Stockton's name was cheered. Incidentally it was mentioned that there is such a demand for all the available space that there is no room in the association's home for the daughter of Jacob Creath. The financial report was presented by Lee Grant. These reports will appear later.

The association had been peculiarly fortunate in securing a promise from Charles Reign Scoville to speak on its behalf on this occasion. The noted evangelist reached the city on the evening before. He had prepared for the occasion, having his address typewritten, but he frequently put that on one side, and spoke straight from the heart, though he proved, also, an effective reader of the written word. It is not too much to say that Brother Scoville made, so far as his immediate audience was concerned, the most effective speech ever delivered for this cause at a convention. He brought into play those forces that are so effective in his evangelistic campaigns. He kept ever before his hearers the benevolent work, and with illustration and exhortation drove home its importance and urgency. Preaching the truth and working for converts, he said, was what we ought to do, but benevolence was part of our work also. He met a cheer with the quick remark: "There's too much cheering in the great convention with the hands and not enough cheer when we get home." A very effective illustration was that he used in reference to the work of Masonic lodges. He had just come from Wichita, where 500 men had paid in $67,500 for the purposes of their lodge. He wanted to know why the Christian churches were not doing the same kind of thing in their work for humanity.

Centennial Session.

A special session was held on Wednesday evening with the Centennial in mind. Louis D. Riddell led the devotions. W. R. Warren presided, and Hugh McLellan made the chief address. It goes without saying that it was eloquent and well adorned with the flowers of speech. "It was," he said, "no small distinction to go just before the King, and that was the fortune of New Orleans which was in preparation for Pittsburg." He urged hard work so that the convention, which is really a missionary rally, next year will, also, show splendid results. Not the least achievement in our history is the Centennial itself, he said. The period of strife and contention had developed into our glorious missionary period. There was more inspiration, he said, in our one century of modern sainthood than in forty centuries of Egyptian kings. He went on to state some of the advantages of a century's history. Among other things, it brings us back to the beginning; but we go up to meet a future, not merely to celebrate a past, and it will be the part of wisdom for us, he said, to send out hostages for the future. We will enunciate our policy along four lines: We must define and state our duty on education. We ought to show we are more committed to missionary work than ever before. We must place a new emphasis upon benevolences. What a pity, too, it would be if we go up to Pittsburg leaving behind the men who made Pittsburg possible, who can not go because of their poverty.

W. R. Warren presented the statistical report, stating several things that account for the fact that a plea known to be growing marvelously remained about the same during the past three years. About 2,000 churches have insisted that a part of the brotherhood has apostatized and they will be listed separately. We lose many, also, because of the lack of shepherding. So far as the secretary has been able to get statistics the figures are as follows: Churches, 11,654; Bible schools, 8,962; ministers, 6,833; communicants, 1,330,980; Bible school enrollment, 927,783; value of property, $28,489,266. These figures include our churches throughout the world.

A number of short speeches were made on different phases of the Centennial work. Crayton Brooks spoke for state missions, showing that with twenty-five different nationalities in Western Pennsylvania there was a great field for foreign missions right at home. O. L. Smith had foreign missions as his theme. With one-third of our churches not yet reached, we are in the ninth inning, he said, in this particular campaign. He emphasized the call for $400,000 this year. J. T. Ogle illustrated his remarks on behalf of church extension with a chart of the human body with which he gave us a short study of spiritual anatomy. Next in importance to the head, he urged, is the heart. Church extension he likened to this, which sends out the lifeblood, returns and goes out again. C. H. Winders said that to neglect the old guard would be to show our poverty of spirit. L. W. McCreary made one of the most finished of the short speeches, pleading for national benevolence. "Conquest and Service" was the motto around which he centered his remarks. S. M. Perkins made a strong speech on behalf of the Bible school work, and E. W. Elliott spoke for Christian Endeavor, and T. C. Howe for the colleges. Grant K. Lewis touched upon the thorny problem of the press, pleading for the support of Christian journalism on the part of every church member, urging greater use of publicity opportunities. J. E. Davis spoke for a restoration of apostolic evangelism. Arthur Everts made a great plea for tithing. "Give me tithers," he said, "and I can hit the center of every aim hung on the Centennial ball." This speech we hope to give somewhat in extenso. R. G. Frank spoke briefly of the ministers and the Centennial, touching upon some of the reasons of the small supply.

W. Daviess Pittman made a statement about the Business Men's Association, or Brotherhood, announcing that a committee had been appointed to take up this work, composed of B. A. Jenkins, C. M. Chilton, F. Feldner, R. A. Long, J. H. Allen and W. Daviess Pittman.

A telegram was read from C. S. Medbury in acknowledgment of his selection as president of the A. C. M. S. next year. After the local committee had been called to the platform Mr. Long expressed his appreciation of courtesies extended him as president and the people of New Orleans, and wound up by stating that while he had mortgaged his income for several years, and could not do very much towards purchasing a lot and building for the New Orleans church, he would be glad to pay the expenses of an evangelistic meeting to be conducted by Brother Scoville.

Christian Union.

The Christian union session came off, though there were some changes, both of time and program. It was a great pity that there was a misunderstanding about the coming of the fraternal delegates. This led to the calling off of both the morning and afternoon sessions of the last day of the convention. The evening session was programmed as an evangelistic meeting, with a sermon by Herbert Yeuell. As J. H. Garrison was unable to take his part in a response to the two Baptist brethren, this duty had, some weeks ago, been assigned to George H. Combs, and Brother Combs was at New Orleans with his speech in his brain and heart, and the manuscript in his pocket. At 9 o'clock on Thursday morning the Assistant Editor of The Christian-Evangelist snapshotted our Kansas City friend as he was on the way to take his train for the North. At 10 o'clock the Assistant Editor ran across Dr. Case, pastor of the Delaware Avenue Baptist Church of Buffalo, N. Y., one of the fraternal delegates. He had come in on the morning train expecting to make his address about 3 o'cock in the afternoon. Many of the delegates had left for their homes, thinking that there was nothing but the evangelistic service in the evening. At once steps were taken to make a place for Dr. Case on the evening program. It was arranged for W. T. Moore to act as chairman, Dr. Case to make his address and Brother Yeuell to make a reply to this. There was an excellent audience despite the fact that so many delegates had left, and the occasion was one of the happiest of the whole convention. Dr. Case's speech we hope to give somewhat in extenso.

Christian Endeavor Sessions of the New Orleans Convention.

Two of the most largely attended and enthusiastic sessions of the convention were those devoted to the interests of Christian Endeavor. One meeting was on Saturday night at 7:45 o'clock, and the other Sunday evening at 6:30. On Saturday night the great hall was filled with delegates to the convention and young people from the various churches of New Orleans. Claude E. Hill, national superintendent, presided over this meeting. Prior to the introduction of the speakers, the national superintendent submitted his report, which revealed the fact that Christian Endeavor is in a very healthy state, so far as the Disciples are concerned. Last year our increase in new societies was equal to about one-fourth of the total increase among all religious bodies. Over 600 societies, Junior, Young People's and Intermediate, were organized during the year, and these societies gave nearly $35,000 for missions. The reports from the various states indicate that a great forward movement is on among our young people. Mr. Hill laid especial emphasis on the Centennial aim for Christian Endeavor, and expressed the conviction that the aim would be realized, to-wit: that at our Centennial convention the Disciples should stand first in Christian Endeavor.

Following the report of our national superintendent, addresses were delivered by W. F. Richardson, of Kansas City, and Ira M. Boswell, of Chattanooga, Tenn. These addresses were limited to fifteen minutes each, but were packed full of good things. They aroused the enthusiasm of the convention and brought back memories of the days when Christian Endeavor attracted the attention of the whole country because of its enthusiasm. The Saturday night meeting, so far as Christian Endeavor was concerned, was a distinct success.

Another great Christian Endeavor meeting, held on Sunday evening in the Atheneum, was in charge of Colby D. Hall, of Texas. This meeting was also largely attended and full of enthusiasm. A great many took part in the meeting, representing nearly every state in the Union, and the one hour was too short for all who desired to take part. Brother Hall demonstrated himself as a skillful leader as well as an enthusiastic Endeavorer.

The interest manifested in Christian Endeavor at this convention augurs well for the progress of the movement through the year and the accomplishment of the Centennial aim now before our young people.

Recommendations.

The committee on recommendations, of which Finis Idleman was chairman, commended the urgency of our secretaries in the realization of the goal set for our Centennial year, and recommended a renewal of zeal by every pastor, elder and deacon to make these aims actualities. Believing that the greatest and latest forward movement among us is the Bible school work, and in order to articulate our state organizations and to stimulate our brotherhood Bible school campaign, the committee recommended that a national Bible school superintendent be chosen to devote all his time to this work, under the direction of the National Bible School Association. It recommended that this man be chosen by a committee composed of the president of the National Bible School Association and the secretaries of the F. C. M. S., A. C. M. S., Church Extension Board, National Benevolent Association and the C. W. B. M. respectively, and that the support of the said superintendent be solicited from these societies until the Bible School Association can provide for its support. It recommended the unparalleled results of the teacher training campaign under the inspiration of Herbert Moninger and Marion Stevenson, and expressed approval of the union Bible classes being organized as an agency of bringing in the unity for which Jesus prayed. It recommended the work undertaken by Brother Pearn in the Panama Canal as being worthy and essential, and commended it to the Acting Board, and asked that if it should be thought advisable a missionary be sent to the Zone during the period of construction. It recommended, also, for careful attention of the Acting Board the work in the Southland among the Scandinavians. It recommended the efficient work of the secretarial force of the A. C. M. S. with its present division of labor in the face of financial stringency, and recommended that the A. C. M. S. use its offices in an effort to gain the co-operation of all the national societies in support of the splendid work of the superintendent of Christian Endeavor. In order to secure the highest degree of efficiency in the administration of our funds, and that there may be no suspicion of extravagances in the expenditures of the American Christian Missionary Society during the Centennial year, it recommended that a committee composed of three representative business men of the brotherhood be appointed at the convention to carefully scrutinize the methods of administration at the home office, and to report such findings to the Acting Board, such report to be taken as the will of the convention. City evangelization was recommended as the distinctive Centennial aim of the Society this year. To this end, and in keeping with President Long's address, it recommended the selection of a committee of representative laymen to have as their special work this year the conducting and financing of distinctive city campaigns. It recommended the co-operation of the A. C. M. S. with the city board of New York City in the conducting of work among the Russian Christians. It approved and endorsed the executive of the A. C. M. S. for the work done in the union of Baptists and Disciples in Canada; favored a continuance of this co-operation and its extension along scriptural lines with full organic scriptural union on the New Testament basis as the ultimate goal; and with a view to the enlargement and strengthening of this union it was resolved that the executive be authorized to conduct negotiations with the Baptists of Western Canada, and to employ such evangelists and officers as may be deemed necessary to carry on the work effectually, and generally to do all acts and guide all movements that have for their end the promotion of this much-desired and beneficial object.

Our Budget

—We give extended space to a report of the New Orleans convention.

—And there is more to follow. All other news must give place to convention news.

—The next thing on the calendar is State Mission Day.

—This will be the first offering in the Centennial year.

—Let there be a great outpouring of funds to make known our plea in every state. Next Lord's day is the date of the offering.

—The congress of Baptists, Free Baptists and Disciples will be held in Chicago, November 10-12. This ought to awaken much interest on the part of our brethren. It is for the rank and file, and not merely committees, and should be largely attended.

—We are especially indebted to Miss Virginia Hearne, F. F. Grim, Colby Hall, Prof. T. C. Howe, Claude Hill and James Small for aid in our convention reports.

—J. N. Crutcher is to read a paper on "The Miraculous Element in the New Testament" before the Kansas City preachers on November 6. He is supplying at Belton, Mo., during his rest on a farm near there. He will assist T. H. Capp, of St. Joseph, Mo., in a meeting shortly.

—Ben. N. Mitchell has resigned at Virginia, Ill., to take work with the church at Litchfield, which is one of our best churches in Illinois. —"This week's Christian-Evangelist has just come. I am so delighted with the full report of the C. W. B. M session, that I must write my appreciation. I think it the best report ever given of our sessions, for it gives a real glimpse of the convention."—Annette Newcomer, C. W. B. M State Secretary of Iowa.

—I. A. Wilson and wife, on the occasion of their fourth wedding anniversary, were surprised by members of the congregation at Valley Falls, Kan., to which he has ministered during the past five years. They were presented on this occasion with a purse of money as a token of esteem and appreciation of their labors in this field.

—R. B. Briney, of Lexington, Mo., recently visited Independence and delivered an address to the men of that congregation on the subject of "The Larger Brotherhood." They have organized a brotherhood in this church. The first meeting was in the nature of a banquet. Brother Briney reports that L. J. Marshall is doing a magnificent work in Independence. The new building, which is nearing completion, will be one of the most beautiful and commodious in the entire state.

—The Georgia State Convention, which was to convene at Augusta, will be held instead at Fitzgerald, November 9-11, owing to the flooded condition of Augusta. The Fitzgerald church deserves credit for taking hold of the convention on such short notice, but as they are noted for doing things, those who attend may expect a pleasant visit. The two congregations have recently been united, and are now working as one in the beautiful new stone building of the Central Church.

—Brother John S. Sweeney, whose death occurred at Paris, Ky., on October 13, removes from our midst one who has filled a large place in our church militant in the earlier days. Brother Sweeney was easily the prince of debaters among us in the days when the battle raged fiercely, and when our orthodoxy was challenged on all sides. In strength of argument, in clearness of statement, in quickness of repartee, and in his familiarity with the Bible, he had no superior, if, indeed, an equal. But he was more than a debater; he was a strong preacher. Down beneath his logic there was a warm heart and he could tell the gospel story with great effect. He held many important pastorates. Brother Sweeney was born near Liberty, Ky., in 1832, and had, therefore, reached a good old age. He had been in feeble health for some time, but he has now passed on to join the company of heroes who have preceded him to the heavenly home.

—We call attention once more to the Union Congress to be held in the Memorial Church of Christ in Chicago November 10-11-12. It is not an "Illinois Congress," as the title of the program unfortunately ran in our last issue, but a National Congress which will be attended by representative men of the three great bodies of immersionists—Baptists, Free Baptists and Disciples of Christ—in the United States. To come in contact with the spirit of such a gathering and to have one's mind fertilized with the great thoughts which will be presented, will be a privilege of which we trust a large number of our readers and especially of our ministers will avail themselves. In addition to the interesting list of speakers and topics announced in the program we have published, it is hoped that arrangements will be made with Brother George H. Combs, of Kansas City, to deliver the address which he was to have delivered at New Orleans on the Union of Baptists and Disciples.

—"The New Christian Century," which is the old Christian Century under a new company and partly under new management, is announced, and the first issues of the paper under the new management have arrived, and give evidence of new life and vigor. We congratulate our Chicago contemporary on the new arrangement, and especially upon the improved character of the paper. We have always believed that our cause should be represented in that great center by a religious journal, and we shall rejoice to see the Christian Century under its new management prosper, and meet the demands made upon our religious journalism in that center. The Century states that "in the editorial organization of the new paper Charles Clayton Morrison comes into cooperation with Dr. Herbert Willett. Orvis F. Jordon has been selected Assistant Editor." Brothers Gates and Campbell will continue their respective departments as contributors. We may have occasion to cross pens with our Chicago contemporary on some questions, but if so, we are sure that the discussion will always be on a plane worthy of Christian journalism.

WHAT WE THINK OF THE CONVENTION

A New Orleans Spokesman.

Many have been the words of congratulation and thanks for the humble service rendered the brotherhood by the little church in New Orleans in the entertainment of the international missionary convention, but I seize this opportunity to say that the obligations are all ours, for the reasons given below as expressed by the citizens of New Orleans.

The leading business men of the city are unstinted in their praise of the character and appearance of the delegates to the convention. The hotel men say that never in all their experience has it been their privilege to entertain such an excellent body of people, so intelligent, sociable, easily pleased and appreciative. The representative of the Progressive union of New Orleans, the organization of the bankers and commercial men of the city, has just called on me to express the gratitude of the business men to me for having done so much for our city by bringing this convention to them, which he declared to be the greatest ever held in New Orleans. I asked him if the business men were satisfied as to the results of their contributions towards the fund for caring for the conventions; he responded by saying that they were much more than satisfied, that they are truly grateful and shall be glad to do anything they can for us at any time. The newspaper reporters tell us that this has been the greatest convention ever held in New Orleans; that in addition to something like 3,000 of our delegates, we have brought nearly 7,000 strangers into the city on our convention rates; they say that before this convention was projected the people of the city looked upon us as a mere insignificant sect, tolerated but not respected, but now, since the coming of the hosts in convention and since the people had seen their smiles and the beams of intelligence on their faces, observed their deportment, and heard their message, the Christian Church is on a par with the most popular denomination in the estimation of all of the people.

It is my judgment that the convention in New Orleans is but the result of a purpose of God. Every step taken in connection with the securing, entertaining and conduct of this convention has been accompanied with evidences of God's presence and approval and special providence; and it is my honest conviction that no greater missionary work was ever done during any one week of our history than has been done during the past week by the holding of the convention in New Orleans, and that every dollar spent by the delegates in attending this convention is as truly missionary money as any they may put in the treasury of the church.

W. M. Taylor.

After Twenty-five Years in India.

The New Orleans convention has been a great inspiration to me. It will mark a period in my life. In twenty-five years, it is the third general convention which I have attended, and for this reason, if for no other, it was of unusual interest to me. But long residence in India is not the only reason why I have enjoyed it so intensely. The genuine worth of the fellowship and excellent addresses, and the great reports of things accomplished and of work in hand, have been, and are a great delight to me.

I also rejoice that my brethren are seeking the things of truth and the kingdom of Christ.

The great and growing ability of our brotherhood is also a source of joy to me. The arm of flesh upon which our cause may lean is a strong one. But all our strength is from God, and if he be for us, and we are so loyal to him that he may use us, what power of darkness can withstand us!

However, I did feel that the great convention was lacking, in a measure, in the attendance and help of the business men of our brotherhood, who, after all, must furnish the sinews of war. What great results might grow out of the grand speeches that were made if they had been present in large numbers, to hear and enter into a lively sense of the need of our work! For this reason, I much regret that when the president of the convention sought to give more prominence to the Business Men's session, the preachers ungraciously turned the move down. It is to be hoped that the day may soon come when the conventions will be more largely attended by these brethren.

Morton D. Adams.

By Dr. Royal J. Dye.

This was one of the grandest of our conventions I have attended.

The spirit of enthusiasm and the largeness of vision was a marked feature of every address. The general increase in interest in the larger and world-wide missions was noticeable and the missionaries from the foreign field felt the inspiration of this. More people visited the exhibits of the Foreign Society and stayed longer and showed more real interest in the native life and handicraft as shown in the curios than ever before at one of our national conventions.

The promises of larger fellowship made from all sections of the country were more numerous and general and the real fellowship enjoyed by the missionaries was most encouraging to the workers who have toiled on the "firing line."

We were made to feel that the church as a whole is developing a larger vision and a greater feeling of responsibility concerning the "world's evangelization" than ever before.

The Centennial aims, we believe, will be realized if every man and woman puts the shoulder to the wheel and pushes. The magnanimous giving of our great liberal-hearted Brother Long has set the pace for the brotherhood. Surely it was but the first rain drops of a great shower of gifts from all over this great God-prospered land of ours. We shall see our men giving to the Lord's work even as they have spent for their own personal enjoyment. Is this a dream? I believe not. We are past the day of little things. We have become a people with a mission and a message. This convention has meant much to the missionaries.

One Thousand Dollars Each from One Thousand Persons for the Centennial.

On the train, returning from the New Orleans convention, Charles Reign Scoville proposed to be one of one thousand persons to give a thousand dollars each to missions, benevolences and education in the Centennial year upon which we have entered. The pledge is not conditional. The great evangelist simply steps out as a volunteer and calls for 999 more to do likewise!

Among our people there are several whose normal gifts, from year to year, run from ten to fifty thousand dollars each. One has devoted a hundred thousand to education in one donation. Even if they should not be moved to celebrate the Centennial with double, quadruple or tenfold offerings, each of these can enroll many names from his family or his friends in the Centennial Book of Gold beside his own.

Of course all of us understand that such publicity as is necessary to carry through this undertaking is not for vainglory or the praise of men, but to provoke one another unto love and good works and to witness tangibly and practically to our King's glory. So R. A. Long, in real modesty, gave, at New Orleans, that which will be counted the first thousand of this Centennial offering to Ministerial Relief. Every one distributes his thousand as he chooses, giving through his local church, if he will, but allowing the aggregate amount to be reported to Pittsburg.

This will bring in a million dollars this year. It will inspire tens and hundreds of thousands to multiply their sacrificial offerings. It will move ministers, missionaries, nurses and teachers to perform prodigies of service. It will reinforce the preaching of every evangelist. Thousands will be won to Christ by this demonstration of Christian love. Every department of Christian service will be stimulated to an intensity that will guarantee the reaching of its Centennial Aim.

From his wide acquaintance with the brotherhood Brother Scoville believes the thousand volunteers will be found. Let every editor, every secretary, every college president, every minister, every disciple become an active agent to secure the names as speedily as possible. The quicker they are reported the greater will be the help to not only the causes immediately concerned but to every interest of the King. Help the state offering by seeking the thousand!

W. R. Warren, Centennial Secretary.

Thirteen have been buried with Christ in baptism—two from other bodies, one from the Mormons. Other souls are deeply interested. One old lady 70 years old was baptized. Bellflower, Oct. 12.—We closed a splendid meeting of nineteen days' duration at Alvin, Ill., with 40 accessions—28 by confession and baptism. Of this number nearly all were adults, and people of prominence. Our meeting here is starting out in fine shape. McFarland and wife, evangelists.

I baptized several during the summer. Our Bible school has doubled in attendance. We have two organized adult Bible classes. On October 4 we had our annual rally and roll call, which was a great success. We have graduated a class in teacher-training and J. H. Hardin, of Kansas City, will deliver the graduating address November 6, at which time we hope to organize an advance class, and, also, a beginner's class.—J. Quincy Biggs.

Nebraska.

Fremont, Oct. 22.—Eight accessions so far in our meeting. We expect a good many more before the meeting closes. Ragland, of the First Church, Springfield, Mo., beginning November 1.

Oklahoma.

Okmulgee, Oct. 19.—I reached home from New Orleans Saturday. We had two great services yesterday, three being added during the day. There have been twelve others since last report. Erick, Oct. 20.—There were five additions Sunday—four by statement, and one by confession, two by statement last Wednesday evening, making seven since last report. The official board was reorganized, and all departments start with renewed vigor. At the close of last Sunday morning's service I was handed an envelope containing $5 as a special gift from the Ladies' Aid. Hopkins and Wikoff began a meeting at Altamont, Kan., November 8.—Bishop M. Hopkins, minister.

Pennsylvania.

Uniontown, Oct. 19.—The Central Christian Church, of which J. Walter Carpenter is pastor, received six persons to membership yesterday. There are additions almost every Lord's day, and at midweek prayer-meeting confessions are not unusual. At a recent prayer-meeting four took the stand for Christ. The Sunday-school is doing the best work and is the largest in point of attendance at any time of its history. During the summer the attendance kept above 400 compared with a regular attendance of about 160 three years ago. The school is graded and has operating the most improved plans of modern Bible school work. Mrs. Carpenter, who superintends the junior department, has made it one of the leading junior departments in the great Sunday-school state of Pennsylvania.

Washington.

Seattle, Oct. 13.—Additions to Seattle churches for Lord's day, October 11, reported through the ministerial association, are as follows: First Church, J. L. THE IDEAL STATESMAN.

Topic November 4.—Exodus 18:21.

We would hardly expect to find the ideal statesman in such a humble, obscure man as Jethro, Moses' father-in-law. But such we are justified in calling him. Or, if not himself a statesman, he nevertheless gave most excellent counsel to Moses, showing that he possessed in a rare degree the wisdom of the true statesman and man of affairs. And the ideal statesman must be peculiarly a man of affairs—the man who does things himself and has the faculty of getting others to do them. The true statesman is the man who has initiative combined with executive ability. Sometimes we find these combined in a remarkable degree in men of modest pretensions.

I suppose, however, that Moses the man of God is the one here chosen to represent the ideal statesman. That he was a remarkable man and a statesman of pre-eminent abilities is evident from the legislation that bears the impress of his great personality and name. When we speak of the "Mosaic Legislation" the intelligent world recognizes that altogether remarkable body of laws found in the Pentateuch. Concerning this man known the world over as Moses the servant of the living God, H. L. Hastings says: "Moses led the world's first emancipation movement, liberating three million slaves; organized this horde of bondsmen into the world's first republic, the United States of Israel, with most of the varied advantages of which modern republics boast; legislated for the first constitutional monarchy—a government of laws and not of men, where kings and rulers, as well as people, were amenable to law. Moses made every Israelite a landholder, with inalienable rights; introduced homestead exemption; cancelled debts after six years; gave every weary toiler a weekly rest; protected the poor; made the person of every Israelite sacred; guarded captives from outrage and abuse; protected bondsmen from bodily injury and limited their terms of servitude; prohibited usury; forbade cruelty to animals; and ordained a system of legislation more humane than any the world has known. Moses organized the world's first total abstinence society, with stringent rules and iron-clad pledge. Moses introduced the world's best sanitary system. Moses organized a new nation, and after more than thirty stormy centuries, they are to-day the healthiest, purest blooded and most law-abiding people on earth, their death-rate, even in the United States of America, being only about one-half the death-rate of the people at large. The legislators of antiquity are forgotten; their literature and laws are lost in oblivion; but the laws of Moses have been translated into more languages, read in more lands, and have influenced more people than all the laws of ancient monarchs and legislators combined."

Moses showed his good sense and good statesmanship as well by listening to what Jethro had to say and straightway acting on the suggestions. The wise statesman will hearken to the voice of the people and will call to his aid the united sympathies and help of those who are especially fitted to administer the affairs of the people in the interests of justice and fair dealing. A government of the people, for the people, by the people really had its beginning in the wise policies suggested by Jethro and accepted by Moses. The directions are still timely for the great republic in which we live and for the statesmen of to-day: "Thou shalt provide out of all the people able men, such as fear God, men of truth, hating unjust gain; and place such over them, to be rulers of thousands, rulers of hundreds, rulers of fifties and rulers of tens; and let them judge the people at all seasons." There is no doubt but that the old "Town Meeting" of our New England ancestors found its example and authority in this wise arrangement adopted by Moses. And out of the old-time "Town Meeting" grew the representative form of government which we have to-day. Most of our laws, based on the old "Common English law," rest back on the old Mosaic legislation. The Law of Moses was the law book of the Puritans of New England.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY,
St. Louis, Mo.

Dear Sirs:—

I received your letter and blank for three months' club offer. In three hours' work I had the blank filled, and sent it back. I am sending another list of nineteen names, all outside of the Christian Church, except one. I will try to get more.

I am fifty-two years old, and do all my housework, yet I feel I must do something to show our appreciation of The Christian-Evangelist, and the noble stand it takes for the union of all God's children on the Bible, the only stand we can take to fulfill Christ's prayer.

My husband and myself have been close readers of the paper for twenty-two years, and can't think of doing without its regular visits at our home.

Our prayer has been going up for that grand old soldier that occupies the Easy Chair; may the Lord spare him a few more years, to paint those beautiful picture of the Christ, and the Christ life, from God's Word, and also from nature.

Yours in the faith,

MRS. ALICE MIKEWORTH.

"GO THOU AND DO LIKEWISE," is not only a scriptural admonition, but one entirely appropriate in this connection.

We believe the circulation of The Christian-Evangelist can be doubled in ten days.

ADULT BIBLE CLASS MOVEMENT

MARION STEVENSON

The Bible School Vision.

By H H. Peters.

The Bible School.

First—The hypothesis upon which this message rests is that the church is a school, whose text-book is the Bible.

Second—It will be very easy to draw the conclusion that the church must make arrangements for the education of its membership and constituency.

The Bible school is the channel through which this work may be carried on. The Bible school must include everybody. It must have its cradle roll and home department, and must plan to instruct in righteousness all who come between these. In the past most people thought of the Bible school as for the children, and regarded it as a pious duty to send the children. Even the elders, in numberless instances, felt no compunction of conscience in absenting themselves from the Bible school. It was regarded as a side issue, and very little attention was paid to it. It is hopeful that we have passed beyond this stage of development. "Every member of the church in the Bible school and as many more," is a motto worthy of any religious movement. The time has come when our best churches, theoretically at least, regard every member of the congregation as eligible to membership in the Bible school. This is a distinct victory, and one that has been gained within the past few years. We have made more progress in Bible school work in the past five years than we ever made. It is equally encouraging to note that the past year has been by far the best in our history. We have not solved the problem, however. We have only admitted the correctness of the theory. It is our business now to actually get the membership of our churches in line for systematic Bible study. It will be more difficult to do this than to get the brethren to admit the correctness of our theory.

2. We must have a course of study that will include all from the cradle roll to the home department. The Bible school of the future will pay more attention to the course of study than to-day. We can not maintain the infallibility of the lesson leaf nor the divinity of the international lesson series. The international lessons have served a noble purpose in unifying Bible study, and in bringing about a certain degree of co-operation among the Christian forces of the world. But many leaders in religious education are beginning to feel the need of a course of study more in harmony with human nature and the progressive unfolding of God's revelation in the scriptures. I have no scheme to propose. In this you are fortunate and I am relieved from responsibility.

We are recognizing as never before that religion must be included in any plan of education which claims to be complete. President Butler, of Columbia University, has appropriately said of education, "It must mean a gradual adjustment to the spiritual possessions of the race. These possessions may be variously classified, but they certainly are at least fivefold. The child is entitled to his scientific inheritance, to his literary inheritance, to his æsthetic inheritance, to his institutional inheritance, and to his religious inheritance. Without them he can not become a truly educated or cultivated man." Our public school system enables the child to come into gradual possession of at least four-fifths of his spiritual inheritance. And "the religious element may not be permitted to pass wholly out of education, unless we are to cripple it and render it hopelessly incomplete." The Bible does not have a place in the general scheme of education of to-day. There is an atmosphere of religious confusion in many schools. Doubt and worldliness sometimes find their way into the public school. Irreligious persons are not always barred from official positions on the boards of education or in the teaching force of our public schools. In many cases the Bible is not even given the rank of a classic. These facts point out the business of the church. The church must teach the scriptures. The church through the Bible school can furnish the agency for this special instruction. To do this work the school must be carefully graded according to educational methods. Mr. G. W. Pease has pointed out that in doing this work we must recognize at least four principles. 1. Pupils will be classified according to mental ability, based somewhat upon the grade in the public school. 2. There will be unity, but not necessarily uniformity, in the lesson system. 3. The method of presentation will be adapted to the intellectual development of the pupils. 4. There will be promotion from grade to grade through the various departments of the school.

A Suggestive Plan.

A great many plans have been proposed. One which seems to me to be in a general way suggestive is presented by G. W. Pease in his "Outline of a Bible School Curriculum."

Department and Age.	Grades.
Primary (4 to 9)	Kindergarten, Sec. 2—A. B.
Junior (9 to 13)	Primary Sec. 3—C. D. and E.
Intermediate (13 to 17)	4—A. to D.
Senior (17 to 21)	4—A. to D.
Adult (21 up)	Various classes suited to membership.

3. We must make a careful study of child-nature. The Bible school work of the future will be compelled to take into account the problems of psychology more than ever. We are dealing with human beings and not with machines. Our study of children will consist of more than a few elementary questions with academic answers. It will include a thorough and far-reaching study of growing childhood. The literature of this theme is growing with marvelous rapidity; and it is hoped that we shall not be compelled to tarry long in the technical, but go at once into the practical problems of the science. The whole science of child-culture rests upon two fundamental propositions. First, the child has within himself instincts that can be trained upward or downward. Second, these instincts give early manifestation of their existence. I like the word instinct. It seems to go to the bottom of the problem. It is native. It belongs to the child. The outline of the study of the relation of instinct to character as given by Elizabeth Harrison, principal of the Chicago Kindergarten College, is of such value that I deem it wise to present it in this address. The subject is presented under the threefold theme of body, mind and soul. Those relating to the body are the instinct of activity, or the training of the muscles; the instinct of investigation, or the training of the senses. In relation to the mind we have the instinct of power, or the training of the emotions; the instinct of love, or the training of the affections; the instinct of continuity, or the training of reason; the instinct of justice or right and wrong punishments; the instinct of recognition, or the training of the will. For the culture of the soul we have the instinct of reverence, or the training of worship; and the instinct of imitation, or the training of the faith.

This may seem an arbitrary classification, but it has within it an element of suggestiveness. The truth is, we must always remember that we are dealing with a religious animal. Man's religious nature is as much a part of him as his ability to see or feel. In fact it is more so. We recognize the truth of this statement in our ordinary conversation. I say, this is my body; I have a mind. But what am I? What is that eternal ego which lays claim to personality and the possession of the body and mind? It is the real self. It is the soul. The soul is capable of culture. The Bible school must recognize this fact. We may not be willing to go as far as Horace Bushnell and maintain that the child ought to grow up a Christian and never know that it had ever been anything else. But we do maintain that the religious nature of the child ought to unfold naturally and normally, in faith and obedience; and that under normal conditions the child will take his place in the church as naturally as he exercises any other function of his being. The cripple, the idiot and the sensualist are all exceptions to the law of growth; and we ought to be as greatly surprised to find the one as the other.

With Professor Hopkins, of Williams College, we "refuse to call that education liberal which fails to provide for the part of man which is noblest and highest, which refuses to recognize the universal aspiration and longing of humanity after goodness and beauty, after spiritual truth, after perfection, after God. A Christian training, if consistent, must account sinfulness as well as ignorance a factor in its problems, and must believe in the spirit of God as a power available for its work. It must recognize the personality of Jesus Christ a fact and force as unquestioned as heat, light or electricity, and no more to be ignored or driven out than gravitation. Under the unreligious training men dwindle as they go. In the name, therefore, of the spiritual nature, we protest against any organized educational system 'for the extirpation of the religious faculty through disuse.'"

4. We must have more thoroughly trained teachers. C. M. Chilton has well said, "Perhaps the greatest need of the average school to-day is that of a conscientious, thoroughly trained and disciplined corps of teachers. Every other advance waits upon this. In this connection the current teacher training agitation is encouraging." It seems to me that we are justified in glorifying ourselves just a little over the results of our teacher training campaign. But this is only the beginning. We are simply doing primary work. The results of this movement must be a more thorough course of study for advanced classes and a more extensive work even for beginning classes.

We certainly can not be expected to remain in the hand-book stage of our development for the training of the teachers very long. I most heartily indorse what has been done, am greatly pleased to give my encouragement to what is being done for the enlargement of the work, and hopefully express the conviction that better days are before us in the matter of teacher training. The signs are right.

Success Depends on Teacher.

The success of the Bible school in the final analysis depends almost entirely upon the teacher. We have changed our notion very radically about the teacher. There was a time when the proper age was about the only qualification required of the Bible school teacher. Fortunately we have passed by that milestone and are going on up the road. Theoretically at least we expect our teachers to be prepared. Mr. Marion Lawrance has well said, "The average teacher when poorly prepared will usually lecture to his class; if well prepared he will ask questions of the class; if thoroughly prepared he will endeavor to provoke questions from the class. The art of combining the last two is the highest teaching." Another great teacher once said: "Not what I may remember constitutes knowledge, but that which I can not forget." This would be a good motto for every Bible school teacher. When the things of the kingdom become a part of the spiritual consciousness of the teacher, he can teach as one having authority. We talk a great deal about learning things by heart. This is exactly what the teacher of Christian truth must do. A deep personal experience, a genuine knowledge of the gospel, is the primary qualification of a good teacher. One who has spent a great many years in work of this kind has given the secret of his success as a teacher in the Bible school in this unique summary, "I just keep shelling my pod of P's—pray, plan, prepare, pour out, pull in."

5. The Bible school must be the means of deepening the spiritual worship in the congregation. The school must teach religion. But it is almost useless to teach the intellectual side of religion if we fail in the development of the devotional. Enthusiasm is a good thing. But if our enthusiasm means the destruction of the reverential spirit the enthusiasm must be reduced. It is all a mistake to assume that we must cheapen the session of the Bible school to please the children. Popular and enthusiastic songs, drills and marches, entertainments and concerts may be all right, but it is easy to carry these things too far and destroy the devotional spirit of the Bible school session. In all our Bible school work we must remember two things. First, we are teaching God's revelation to his children. Second, we are training his children to worship him in spirit and in truth. Everything which interferes with either of these must be rejected.

6. The Bible school must have an enlarging place as an evangelizing force in the life of the church. A great deal has been said recently on the subject of evangelism. We hear much talk about the new, newer, and newest evangelism. I have no particular interest in the classification. But to me there is a classification which is fundamental and vital. There are two methods of evangelism—the cultural and the conversional. Jesus said, "Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not." He still says this. The child will naturally accept Jesus, just as the flower opens its petals to meet the morning sun. To those of maturity Jesus said, "Except ye turn and become as little children ye can not enter into the kingdom of heaven." The first is the cultural; the second is the conversional. The second is necessary because the first has been neglected. The child ought to pass normally into the kingdom of God and the old must become childlike to find its door. If one fails to grow up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, then the exceptional must be resorted to and he must turn and become as a little child to enter the kingdom. Most of our evangelism has to be carried on along the line of the exceptional. This is no criticism on our evangelism. It is necessary, but it is exceptional nevertheless. The line of development for us at the present time is religious training through the agency of the Bible school.

I have in mind two churches. One of them began as a Bible school in a very humble way. Its work was gradual but substantial. It grew in grace and in the knowledge of the Lord. It trained its workers and put only trained workers in the leadership of the affairs of the church. Its methods were normal. It relied upon the processes of culture. It consecrated its energies completely to the education of its constituency in religion. It has had a gradual growth. Every year has added strength to the membership and increased its power in the community. Its revival meetings have been graduating periods, the harvest time of the year's work. From present indications the work will be a gradual ascent in the knowledge of the Lord until the church shall grow unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Jesus.

As the Story Goes.

The other church has had a different career. Its story is stormy. Once upon a time, as the story goes, an eloquent and able evangelist invaded a city of some considerable size, for the purpose of holding a series of evangelistic meetings and incidentally organizing a church after the pattern of the New Testament. He was a man of power and his work was eminently successful. Many discordant elements and unruly spirits were brought together in the combination called the Church of Christ. Every denomination in the community contributed its quota and the world itself was represented by many of the lost sheep of the house of Israel. The evangelist was succeeded by a good sized row and by a pastor who was not characterized by a pacifying temperament. These were the days of warfare. Many good men were injured and some not so good were likewise injured. Untrained and doubtless unconverted men either assumed or were elected to leadership. In the early days of this performance a significant incident transpired which indicated the feeling that many in the community had for the church. One evening a man of a military temperament made the good confession. A few evenings afterward he was baptized. As he was coming up from the baptismal pool he said to one of the deacons: "Dave, if you need any more officers in the church at any time, I would be glad to serve. You remember I have served extra on the police force for a number of years." This man had undoubtedly read the signs of the times. His understanding was that this church was indeed a church militant. Of course this is an exaggerated case, but the lesson is significant. Fortunately time has eradicated the discordant elements; and to-day the church is a church of peace. But many sorrows had to be endured, much energy had to be lost, and much money wasted in overcoming the wrong tendencies of the beginning days. It sounded well to publish to the world that a church of 186 members had been organized. But it would have been better, if the first five years had been spent in a less conspicuous way while the young church worked out the problem of religious education.

It is better to start a Bible school and let it grow into a church than it is to organize a church and let it start a Bible school. Begin by preaching and teaching and you will have a normal church that will be the pillar and ground of the truth in its community.

A Summary.

In conclusion, it will be very easy to summarize the things that we have emphasized. The church is ideally a school; the Bible is the text-book of this school; the church through the agency of her Bible school must meet the demands placed upon her; to do this work she must have all the members of the church in the school; she must have a course of study that will include all from the cradle roll to the home department; her work must be in harmony with developing human nature; her teachers must be thoroughly trained; the spiritual life and worship of the church must be deepened as the result of this training; and the Bible school must have an enlarging place as an evangelizing force in the life of the church.

Recently I saw a picture which impressed me. It was a picture of Abraham Lincoln and the emancipation proclamation. The artist had done his work so accurately that from the manuscript lines of the immortal documents that gave liberty to 4,000,000 negroes might be seen the sympathetic face of "Honest Abe," the great emancipator. Lincoln was in the message. The Bible is heaven's emancipation proclamation to the sons of men. Its promises and prophecies, its types and shadows, its symbols and ceremonies, its facts and commandments, its hopes and blessings all blend together in forming a composite picture of the man of Galilee—the emancipation of the soul. He is the man in the Book. To study the Book even in the Bible school and not find Jesus is to fail.

Some time ago a welcome visitor was at my house. He has passed the eightieth milestone. He is a man of faith and full of the holy spirit. I love him as my own family. He is the father of my wife, the beloved grandpa of my little girls. One day at the dinner table in the midst of a conversation there came this holy sentiment. Addressing me across the table the good old man said, "Harry, I have been thinking that Jesus would come again soon. I believe he will come to one of our great conventions some of these days. I have been thinking that maybe he would come to Pittsburg, when the brethren from all parts of the world meet to celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of the starting of the movement to restore the church of the New Testament. I would like to be there for I believe he will come." My friends, Jesus will soon come to grandpa. The blurred vision will soon be clear. The firm faith will soon be met by the presence of the Master. But my closing reflection is this: Let us so live that we can go up to Pittsburg next year with the abiding faith that Jesus will be there, and we will find him waiting.

Who Shall Decide?

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

It is not a difficult thing for an editor from his editorial sanctum to issue liliputian bulls of excommunication to those who do not agree with him. The righteousness of his easy service is another thing altogether. It is not necessary to approve of everything done by either our churches or missionary societies in order to justify their existence and their receiving the hearty support of our brethren. Perhaps our editors who so easily exercise their special jurisdiction over these societies might not come out entirely free from blame if their own conduct were put to the severest test. We are all imperfect, and our methods are imperfect. It is not therefore our purpose to even try to vindicate perfection in the management of our missionary societies. But it is unquestionably true, in the main, that they are doing a great work, as the reports at the convention at New Orleans amply showed. In view of the financial distress which has been prevailing, the societies' reports were very encouraging, and there was certainly no indication that there is a "blight" on any of them. The unreasonableness of all this fault-finding is found in the fact that by magnifying a few mistakes that may have been made, the great good that the societies are doing is often overlooked by those who are apt to regard mole hills as mountains.

But this is not the worst of these somewhat dark insinuations. The question which arises in the minds of those who think, is: Are these societies, representing as they do some of the best and most thoughtful men in our brotherhood, more likely to be in error than an editor sitting in his sanctum, and seeing practically only the mole hill, which he has magnified into a mountain? It is all very well to talk about "the great Cause," but have not the brethren, who are managing our societies, "the great Cause" at heart just as much as the editor who criticizes them? It might still be further asked, Is there to be no end to this wholesale crimination by the one-man power? We are opposed to this ex cathedra style as unworthy of this great brotherhood. It is certainly contrary to that "charity which thinketh no evil." Do those who assume to themselves this authority ever think of the harm they may be doing by these unreasonable criticisms? We are a free people, and most of us refuse to accept the ipse dixit of any one dictator, whether he be an editor or any one else. Anyway, it is lamentable to have our great missionary work hindered by covert attacks such as have recently been made, and the time has come when the brethren will wish to know what all this means. As for myself, I frankly say that I prefer to have this fight out in the open, and if it must come, by the help of God, I will try to defend the right. It is not proposed to defend what may have been mistakes by any of our societies, but we decline to throw suspicion upon these societies simply because somewhere or at some time somebody connected with them may not have done exactly what we would prefer.

The New Orleans convention was practically a protest against all these unseemly insinuations. Never before in our history was there a more unanimous convention; never before in our history did the spirit of brotherly love prevail more decidedly; never before in our history did the convention adjourn with more courage and hope. It is the wrong time for the dismal wails to which we have referred. It is rather the time when we should all gird ourselves for the great work of this Centennial year; when we should stand together shoulder to shoulder, and when our missionary societies should receive our hearty support so as to make this the greatest year in our history. It is mainly for this reason that I enter my protest, now and here, against the "blighting" influences to which I have referred, for this, very much more than any of the mistakes which the societies have made, even if they have made any, will injure them in the work they are appointed to do. Let all these unworthy, we almost say contemptible, insinuations at once cease, and let us, hand in hand and heart to heart, march together for the great goal which we have set as our Centennial ideals. W. T. Moore.

What Is Our Basis of Unity?

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

I have read with interest the editorial in your issue of September 17, 1908, "An Impregnable Basis."

This basis on which the Christian world can and should unite is, "Jesus Christ is the foundation of his church, and other foundation than this no man can lay." From this you conclude that, "If Christ be the only foundation, then all attempts to build ecclesiastical organizations on doctrinal statements, called creeds, are unauthorized," etc. "Any attempt to put these intellectual conclusions into the foundation and make them essential conditions of fellowship are at variance with the statement that Christ is the only foundation, etc. "We do not ask men, when they confess their faith in Christ, to confess to any particular theory," etc.

I was raised in, and am a member of, the Christian church, and believe I am fairly well informed as to its teachings. However, to be entirely sure of correctness in a statement of what these teachings are, I will quote from the well-known work, "Our Orthodoxy in the Civil Courts," published by the Standard Publishing Co.

[Our correspondent then cites from the book mentioned statements from the witness being examined as to our teaching concerning "The Scriptures," "Essentials to Salvation," "The Trinity," "Baptism," "Free Will," "Original Sin," etc., which are not germane to the purpose of this article, and then comments as below.—Editor.]

The above is not intended as a complete statement of the teachings of the Christian church; but, as it is, does our church or does our church not teach substantially as per above statement? If not, and the church teaches doctrines at all, it is just to the world and the uninformed members of the church, that a correct statement be made of what the church does teach. If this is the teaching of the church, if it is not doctrinal and a creed, what is it? If it is a creed, then on what ground can we lay claim to the "Impregnable basis" as peculiar to us? The Salvation Army, I am informed, uses the basic truth you have formulated as their basis of unity and stops with that, leaving all doctrinal matters to the man and his God. They are, therefore, consistent. Are we consistent, as a church, in claiming this as an impregnable basis of unity, and at the same time teach so complete a creed as the above? We can not even claim that it is an "unwritten creed," because it has been written again and again in the literature of the church, and the statements have always met with the approval of the church.

If your position is correct, and you have stated the basis of unity of our church, the one vital question, "Do you believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the Living God?" is all that can be asked. But, on the other hand, if we really have a system of belief as to doctrinal matters additional to the basic truth you have formulated, then, to be consistent, must we not take that system of belief in full as our basis of unity? If the applicant for membership is expected to believe as we do—to believe our creed—would it not be better to have a full understanding with him concerning so important a matter?

Is our "plea" for unity on the basis as formulated by you, or is it on the doctrinal beliefs of the church?

Campbell, Stone, et al. taught Christian unity on the basis stated by you; but, as a matter of fact, did they engraft on this their own doctrinal beliefs, thus making still one more "sect" in addition to those they condemned?

Briefly, the people of our church believe that each of these positions is true in itself. Can we hold to both of them and be consistent? Very truly,

Mangum, Okla. Wm. Hurley Smith.

The Sky Road.

Some time since a lover of children told a touching story of meeting three little urchins in a city suburb who, ragged, hatless and shoeless, but quite unconscious of any deficiencies, were bubbling over with bits of knowledge picked up at the public shcools, from which fragmentary lore their busy brains had wrought quaint deductions. They had been hearing scraps of Grecian mythology, and were full of the wonderful story of Pegasus, the winged horse, who, as the legend runs, first touched the earth on the Acropolis in Corinth, and finally flew back to heaven. The smallest of the trio explained that Pegasus couldn't travel on the dirt road because he was made for the sky road. Looking up at the lady, he said with a sly little nod: "We are made for the sky road." Dear little, ragged fellow! One can not help wondering if he realized the marvelous, far-reaching truth of his own words.

Editorial Caution.

"Your account of the concert last night," said the musician, "omitted all mention of the very thing I wanted to see printed. The violin I played, as I was careful to tell your reporter, was a genuine Stradivarius, and one of the best ever made."

"That's all right," said the editor. "When Mr. Stradivarius gets his fiddles advertised in this paper it will cost him half a crown a line. Good morning, sir."—London Tit-Bits.

Businesses Prohibition Ruins.

The liquor organs declare that prohibition ruins business. This declaration is partly true. Prohibition helps all legitimate lines of business, but it ruins the following:

Saloon business.
Gambling business.
Assignation house business.
Burglary business.
Criminal making business.
Pauper making business.
Orphan making business.
Divorce business.
Debauching of boys and girls business.

LOVE AND LIGHT.

By the Bishop of Ripon.

"Your way is dark," the angel said,
"Because you downward gaze;
Look up! the sun is overhead;
Look up, and learn to praise!"
I looked. I learned: Who looks above
Will find in heaven both Light and Love.

"Why upward gaze?" the angel said;
"Have you not learned to know
The light of God shines overhead
That men may work below?"
I learned: Who only looks above
May miss below the work of Love.
And thus I learned the lessons twain:
The heart whose treasure is above
Will gladly turn to earth again
Because the heaven is Love.
Yea, Love that framed the starry height
Came down to earth and gave it Light.

To Discover God's Will.

Henry Drummond gives suggestions on how to find out God's will.

1. Pray.
2. Think.
3. Talk to wise people, but do not regard their decision as final.
4. Beware of the bias of your own will, but do not be too much afraid of it.
5. Meantime do the next thing; for doing God's will in small things best prepares for knowing it in larger things.
6. When decision and action are necessary go ahead.
7. Never reconsider the decision when it is finally acted upon.
8. You will probably not find out until afterward that you have been led at all.

Three Classes.

There are in the average church three classes of people, the Reliables, the Unreliables and the Liables. On those who make up the first class you can depend absolutely and always. May their tribe increase. On those of the second class you can never depend. They have attained a certain reliability in being always unreliable. They may be crossed entirely out of any book of expectation of service or use. It is, perhaps, those of the third class that most bring gray hairs and wrinkles of concern to the pastor and to those charged with the administration of affairs. You never know how to take them nor where to find them.—Zion's Advocate.

The Heathen's Hopeless Cry.

BY DR. E. I. OSGOOD.

There came to a Chinese home three girls in succession. They longed for boy. What heathen home does not? The fourth baby came and their cup of happiness was full, for it was a boy. The many-colored eggs, announcing the happy event and calling for congratulations of the neighbors, were sent to every home on the street. The baby grew for six months into a fat, chubby boy, then suddenly it died. There was a world of helpless despair in the voice of the father as he took the beloved little form into his arms and wailed out his woe: "Oh, my flesh, my bone, my life, my baby boy!"

In the darkness of the night he took the little body and buried it without a single funeral rite. He believed a demon had come to his home and cursed it. After that first cry of anguish he went on with his business and no word of the loss could be drawn from his lips. How could he do otherwise? He stood in abject fear lest the demon should return and bring other calamity upon his home. —"Breaking Down Chinese Walls."

Beware of That Ten Minutes.

An experienced and observant woman declares that the most important part of the day to a man's peace of mind is the ten minutes that follow his return from the work of the day. At that time, one word may change his whole state of feeling.

He comes home usually tired. Work or the vexations of business during the day have frequently brought him to a point of fatigue or nervousness of which a very little thing may decide what his mood may be for the rest of the evening. Of course, the particular disposition of every man is going to tell here, just as it does everywhere else, but the rule will hold good for the average man.

HOW THE STORY CAME TO AMERICA

By Susan Hubbard Martin

He was born when his mother was but ten years old, the son of a Brahmin priest. When he was four years of age his father died and his little Hindoo mother then began a life of servitude and degradation because she was a widow. Then one day an American lady gained permission to visit her and to her she told a story, the story of the love of Christ, and the little child widow, lifting her sad eyes, beheld the first rays of a new day. Some one loved her, some one had died for such as she. There was still something to live for. She accepted her Lord and with fearless courage set about changing her old life into one that should count for Him.

She went to her husband's brother with whom she lived.

"I go to serve the true God," she said with steadfast eyes.

"What! You renounce the gods of your ancestors!" he stormed.

"I do," she answered.

"But you shall not take with you your son. He shall remain here to take the place in the temple that was his father's. Go, if you will, but remember the child is mine."

The little child widow looked at her little son playing on the floor. Her heart was torn. "If she stayed—no, she could not—"

"So be it," was the answer, "but mark my words well. Some day he, too, will find the true God. My son a Brahmin priest. You little know on what you are reckoning. Prayers are mighty things. I can wait."

So, with her small possessions she left the house, a hated and scorned outcast. Some of the women followed her with streaming eyes.

"Weep not for me," she said with quiet dignity. "Weep for yourselves, daughters of my people. Would that you had my hope."

And waving them back, she passed out of sight.

Years passed. The son, true to his mother's words, found his Lord and, leaving the shadows of the temple, began a new life.

It was one day during the plague.

The son, standing by a building opposite a dwelling where the yellow cross had been placed, looked again. Above it was a yellow circle, indicating that there was a death in that house. He saw a native Bible woman drive up and enter the door. Realizing instantly her peril, he leaped across the street. "She has not seen the cross or the circle," he thought. "I must warn her." He reached the door. She was already at the end of the hall.

"Madam," he cried, "do you know what you are doing? There is death in this house."

The woman turned to him. A woman of India still in the prime of life. "Yes," she answered, "I knew it."

"But there are two child widows upstairs. I told them yesterday of Jesus. One believed, the other asked me to come back today. That is why I am here."

She looked again into the bronze face with strange, intent eyes. "Where were you born?" she demanded.

He told her.

"Your father —"

"Was a Brahmin priest, dying when I was four years old—my mother—" his voice faltered. He looked at her, she looked at him.

There was a silence.

The woman broke it.

"I am your mother," she said.

The man hesitated.

To touch her might mean certain death, for had she not been exposed to the dreadful plague, and then might not her story be false? He looked into her face. There were the same eyes, the features identical with his own. It was the truth. He knew it, felt it. The next moment he was in her arms. In a short while, they went upstairs together. There was the little child widow already turning to purple, the last stage of the terrible plague.

She looked up.

"You've come," she cried. "Oh, I wanted to tell you that this morning at nine, it all came right. I found Jesus. My friend, she died a little before rejoicing." She held up her hand, discolored and unnatural.

"It isn't beautiful now, but soon I shall stand before my king, washed white as snow in the blood that cleanseth me from all sin, and you," she turned her dying eyes toward the Bible woman. "You, you brought me the message. I shall tell Jesus about it and at the gates of pearl I shall wait—wait until you come."

A moment later, she was dead.

The mother and son left the room. There was nothing more to be done. Then giving themselves up to the authorities, for they had exposed themselves to the plague, they were placed in the observation ward of the hospital. In five days the mother showed unmistakable symptoms of having contracted it.

Her son sat beside her.

"Mother," he said, "I hope, I trust I can die with you. What is there in life for me?"

But the mother smiled an inscrutable smile. "No," she answered, "God will spare you for many years, and, my son, this is your mother's last wish—my prayers.

"I want you to go to America, tell the people over there, who send these missionaries. Tell them to send more. Oh, my poor people." And then she quoted softly, "Behold the voice of the cry of the daughter of my people, because of them that dwell in a far country. Is not the Lord in Zion? Is not her King in her? Why have they provoked me to anger with their graven images and with strange vanities? The harvest is passed, the summer is over and we are not saved."

Her voice sank. There was a silence. The mother broke it.

"Tell them, my son, of the little child wives, the shadow, the desolation of their religion. Tell them how the little girls of India are forced into their husband's arms. Tell them, too, of the sad eyes of our women. And tell them not to abhor them for the drowning of their children in the great river. To them it is the very exaltation of religious fervor. They love their children. They are not heartless. It is just as they are taught. Oh, my son, tell them to send their missionaries. Let them not delay the love of Christ. In that lies the only healing of my people." These were her last words.

This was the story that two women listened to in a crowded church in a city in New York. The older woman turned to the younger one. "What a wonderful man," she whispered, "a most remarkable one. I've never believed much in missions, but I'm ashamed of it. What a terrible state of affairs. May the Lord forgive me."

"And me," said the younger one, humbly.

They arose, for the address was over. People were beginning to throng the pulpit to get a last word with the speaker.

The two women moved forward. "If any one would have told me that I'd be converted to missions this evening, I would have laughed at the absurdity of it," observed the older woman, "but I am. I'm so stirred at the suffering of these poor souls, I'm going to help send some one over there."

The younger one smiled, a smile sweet and tender. She was a slender young woman of twenty-four or five, with a sensitive, intelligent face.

"Begin with me," she answered, putting an arm about the elder woman's shoulders, "for I—I am going—yes, going myself."

13,000,000 Dyspeptics

Live In the United States and Canada Suffering Terribly Every Meal.

A rough estimate gives the enormous total above as the number of people who suffer in America from Dyspepsia. Add to this those who suffer occasional stomach trouble and you have the field which lies open for Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

These wonderful little digesters are the most popular dyspepsia remedy sold in Canada and America.

Why? There must be merit to them or they would not or could not be distancing competitors.

Ask any druggist to tell you of their popularity.

They will assist nature in digesting a meal no matter what the condition of the stomach. They are prepared scientifically and are made powerful so that nature restores the lost ingredients with which she manufactures her digestive fluids.

They soothe the tired and irritated nerves of the stomach. They prevent and relieve constipation and bowel trouble.

If you want to eat a dangerous meal at late hours take a tablet with you and fear no evil consequences or make up your mind that Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will reduce the ill effects of over eating.

They are made up from fruit and vegetable essences and their tablet form of preparation preserves these qualities longer than fluid or powder modes of administering the same essences.

They have been tried for years and found to be not wanting. You don't buy a new thing in Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, you purchase a remedy for stomach trouble that has a record for cures by the thousand. To Grandmothers Growing old is an unwelcome process. I once sent an invitation to a friend on this wise: "Come over on the twenty-third and help me remember what I should like to forget—that I am sixty years old." And does not that sentiment find a response in many hearts? We enjoy the birthday cake, but sigh as we count the candles. We wave Father Time a greeting, but wish his milestones were farther apart. We feel, like the genial Robert Burdette, that "our years are our retainers, and the more years the larger following," but with most of us the gravestones follow the milestones too closely for that.

Every mother is a possible grandmother, and every grandmother is a possible inmate of some other body's house. How she will fit into that home is a vital question. Apply a little common sense to it. Who was the one who was most welcome in your own home, who never came too soon or stayed too long? Was she not the one who was cheery and helpful, who praised the tolerable pudding that appeared upon the table, and swept the cobwebs from the domestic sky with the bristling broom of humor? The good book says when a worthy example is set before us, "Go thou and do likewise."

There are "dos" and "don'ts" in all advice. You remember the little baby who said his name was "Johnny Jones Don't." Well, I have seen grandmothers that I felt like putting in the same category with Johnny.

I should like to say to grandma, "don't boss. You have stepped down from your position as director of affairs to be merely a member of the advisory committee.

"Don't be obtrusive. Try to slip easily into the family groove, obey its unwritten laws and respect its traditions.

"Don't be critical. Remember that people would really rather be uncomfortable than have their standards of comfort questioned. Don't unlock the closet where the family skeleton is kept; rather get another padlock for it.

"Don't sit down in the easiest seat in the warmest corner, and expect all the small, sweet attentions that affection alone will offer.

"Don't infer that John's wife will love you merely because she married into the family. The marriage vows took no cognizance whatever of your existence. Only the regard that you can win will be yours. And don't try to win that regard by talking about her faults. An old black woman I knew struck the keynote of domestic harmony when she replied to an inquiry about a disreputable grandson: "O, don't make me talk about my own folks!"

Fellow-grandmothers, as we love peace and hate discord, as we enjoy serenity and dread heartache, let us heed the loyal words of the unlettered black woman, "O, don't make me talk about my own folks!" You have a beautiful mantle of charity with which you cover your son John's defects. Try to stretch that mantle enough to cover those of his wife.

It is not pleasant to be a "has-been," but if you must be one, be as good a one as you can. Bring up the pleasant reminiscences for the delectation of your friends and keep the sorrowful ones for the privacy of your own thoughts. The tears shed in your own chamber will annoy no one, and may wash away the grime of selfishness and make you easier to live with.

As the years pass on, the ground around us seems to sink away, and we find ourselves standing on an island in the midst of the sea of humanity. We instinctively reach out for the vanished hand, and our lips droop unconsciously as we wait for the kiss that never comes. We are thrown back on our own resources, and blessed is she who has kept on good terms with herself.

One truth we have culled from the modern cults: That is, that thoughts can be manipulated. They can be reckoned with. They can be turned upward toward health or downward toward suffering. They can join forces with Morpheus to draw us gently to the land of dreams, or run riot with our nerves over the dreary wastes of wakefulness. Some of these so-called "sciences" merely dominate the thoughts. They hew out a channel and say to their adherents, "Force your thoughts into it, and great results will follow." And they do. "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he."

And remember, grandmothers of the future, thoughts harden into habits. The pretty frown that so slightly mars the smooth forehead of youth is ugly and repellent on the wrinkled face of age. The sharp criticism that sounds so cute coming from the ruby lips may drive a mother from her daughter's home when it becomes a habit of her life.

We may none of us live long enough on this mundane sphere to acquire a fondness for wrinkled brows and thin hair, round shoulders and halting steps and forgetful memories. But we can cultivate sufficient fortitude and cheerfulness to reduce these inconveniences to a minimum. Plant in your world a garden of beautiful thoughts in the springtime of life. Water it through the weary summer with the rivers of heavenly love, and its blossoms in the autumn will delight all beholders.

Try it, grandmothers of the future!

Grandmother Elliott.

Grasshopper.

"Take care there, Mr. Grasshopper. I'm afraid you don't see where you are going; you'll get caught in that spider web the next thing you know."

But he kept on jumping as carelessly as ever a grasshopper could, and never minded a word I said. Up he would go, without any thought as to how or where he would come down. There was a spider's web in the tall grass just before him.

"Take care," said I, "or you will get into trouble. Don't you see that spider's web?"

He winked at me saucily, and said: "You just attend to your books!" (for I was getting a lesson in geometry). "I guess I know how to keep out of a spider's web."

The words were hardly out of his mouth when up he went again as heedlessly as ever. A shiver in the web and a bending of the grass told the story. One of his hind feet had caught, and with an awkward curve he had come around to hang with his head downward and his back to the web.

"There!" said I; "didn't I tell you?"

But the grasshopper's pertness was not diminished.

"There's only one foot caught," said he; "there are five free yet. I'll show you. Just see here!" and he turned half-way over and gave a push with his free hind foot, but instead of pushing his other foot free, the one he pushed with was caught, and he was worse off than ever.

"There!" said I again.

But he interrupted me, and said, in the midst of another convulsive struggle, "Wait a minute; I have four free feet yet."

But the only effect of his efforts was to get all his limbs entangled in the deceptive snare.

And now was the spider's opportunity. Out he came from his hiding-place and ran backward and forward over the body of his victim, spinning each time a thread that made more fruitless the desperate struggles of the grasshopper. It was the work of but a moment, and every limb of the headstrong, silly grasshopper was bound fast, and a web had been spread so thick over his head that I could not see it at all.

This is a true story, children. I saw it with my own eyes. I am older now than I was then; that was a great many years ago. Since then I have seen children as reckless and foolish as this grasshopper, and have seen parents and teachers waste their advice, and to as little purpose as I did then.

—Well-Spring.

A lady who had recently moved to the suburbs was very fond of her first brood of chickens. Going out one afternoon she left the household in charge of her 8-year-old boy. Before her return a thunderstorm came up. The youngster forgot the chicks during the storm, and was dismayed, after it passed, to find that half of them had been drowned. Though fearing the wrath to come, he thought best to make a clean breast of the calamity, rather than leave it to be discovered. "Mamma," he said, contritely, when his mother had returned, "mamma, six of the chickens are dead." "Dead!" cried the mother. Six! How did they die?" The boy saw his chance. "I think—I think they died happy," he said.

THE OLD PEOPLE IN THE HOME

By Caroline French Benton

A beautiful letter from an unknown friend is so suggestive that permission has been asked to use part of it to print. Who can fail to see a picture of the old mother in her home?

"Won't you ask your readers to show all possible tact and consideration to the half-sick, and especially the old people in our homes; to honor them and pet them, and make their last years their very happiest? They so deserve all we can do for them! My dear, beautiful mother-in-law was perfectly sound in mind and body, but old and frail, and we never allowed her to come to the table during the very hot weather. We were a big, big family, and she had been the kind, thoughtful hostess so long; we just made her rest in the most comfortable chair on the wide veranda, and we, her children, took turns in bringing out her meals to her there. She was always so grateful and would often say: 'O it tastes so good out here! I don't believe I could have eaten a mouthful in the house!' The tray had always a spotless cloth, and usually a tiny vase of flowers. We set it on a little wicker table right at her side. It was a pleasure to give her this attention, and oh, how she appreciated it! It was all so beautiful to us."

One reads often nowadays of the folly of growing old, and the advantages of a fixed determination to stay young to the very end. But such a letter as this suggests the line of Browning:

"Grow old along with me; the best is yet to be—"

And brings the thought that old age has its charm as well as youth—a charm we forget to-day and too seldom see. The question "what has become of our grandmothers?" floated about among the newspapers not long since, bringing all sorts of ridiculous replies, but emphasizing the fact that the old-fashioned grandmother had disappeared. One funny editor said she was so busy ordering a new automobile and getting her shirtwaists made that she had not time to be a grandmother; she was just a modern, up-to-date woman, no older than her daughters and granddaughters.

Now there is a good deal of truth in this joking. The grandmothers who used to sit in the corner and knit soft white shawls, who had time to listen to everybody's complaints and soothe everybody's woes, is really a rarity to-day. If she has grown old she conceals the fact to the best of her ability, half-ashamed of her years. It is the fashion now to stay young, and though at times it seems too much trouble and we would gladly grow old with others whose birthdays we know, we dare not; we must stay young to the last. One hates to be left behind; one hates to be regarded with even the most good-natured contempt, and since no one is expected to sit down by the wayside and say, "I'm tired; I'm too old for all this striving and rushing," no one does; we press on with the crowd to the end. But how much we miss! Think of that lovely grandmother resting in her chair in the cool porch, with children and grandchildren taking turns in bringing out the meals on a dainty tray, and feeling it a privilege to do so! Was not that elderly woman wise in her generation, and was not that loving respect and care better worth having than some of the bustle she missed by sitting quietly in confessed old age?

The subject has the two sides, as most subjects have. It is good to stay young, and when there is much to be done we love to work side by side with others as long as we can. But sooner or later we want to stop to say: "The evening is here; I will leave work and sit down." And then we have the enjoyment of the beautiful twilight of life, with cares laid by and duty accomplished and honest rest won. Then the chair in the corner in winter and the porch in summer, with the knitting needles and the leisure to visit, is worth while—worth even the toll of all the bygone years.

The other side of the picture is that of the generations who are still pushing and striving. There is a test of character which comes when an old person is in the home. Will the younger ones remember to "take turns in bringing the tray?" Will they be thoughtful and tender and "make the last years the very happiest?" The rush is bound to go on since the world never goes slower when we have new duties and cares to deal with. Business and pleasure, society, church, housekeeping and school go on just the same, though the dear grandmother or grandfather have come with us to the end. Since things will not adjust themselves for us we must adjust ourselves to them and give up this or that for the time being, to take a place in which to be thoughtful and kind, and especially to give of ourselves to the old.

One of the pities about this loss of the grandmothers which we recognize to-day is the lack of training to the children that comes when they are absent. The loss to them of thoughtfulness and consideration is no light one. To remember to be gentle and tender to the elderly people, to pick up for them and lend an arm and listen with patience to their stories. What a boy or girl misses, of the softening of character as these things are done, when there is no one who needs them! Ah, it is too bad not to grow old; the world needs old people. Happy that home where they are, and happy those who "carry the tray!"—New York Observer.

The Dear Old Days.

Touched by his sad story, a Harrisburg woman recently furnished a meal to a melancholy-looking hobo who had applied therefor at the back door.

"Why do you stick out the middle finger of your left hand so straight while you are eating?" asked the compassionate woman. "Was it ever broken?"

"No, mum," answered the hobo, with a snuffle. "But during my halcyon days I wore a diamond ring on that finger, and old habits are hard to break, mum."—Harper's Weekly.

Caring for Those Dearest to Us.

One's influence is likely to be strongest at home. Away from home one is "on parade," the real character always more or less concealed, the influence of that character more or less diverted by the effort to make one's better self prominent. In the home we are our true, unaffected selves, and our real influence upon others has fullest play. And it is in the home that we are with those who are dearest to us, and upon whom we would like our influence always to be for the best. Yet how often do we let our unworthiest selves crop out there, because at home we are loved and "understood," and we know that our faults will be overlooked and forgiven! Which is true enough; but that fact does not undo the harm that the influence of these failures is sure to work. The place where we can least afford to let down from our serves our best. Our home life ought to be our highest life.—Sunday-school Times.

Let's go out to Park Springs—what do you say? It is at the edge of town, where you can get away from the people, and sit among the big autumn leaves—the brown reds of the oaks—and read the rest of Charlie's letter about his vacation. When he visited us here, he came out to this very park to throw rocks over the band-stand where the band no longer plays. The sun is shining, burning red golden hollows in the tree masses, and the sky is blue, the pale blue of Indian summer. After our orphan's visit to his sister, he returned to St. Louis, and that same afternoon left to finish his visit in Illinois. We will go on with his letter:

"I got a good seat on the train, and soon we were flying along the switch yards. It is marvelous how the men in these towers can throw any switch in the yard by simply pulling a lever. We went under the main part of the city through the tunnel, and emerged upon Eads bridge—I wish I could say free bridge! I spent a pleasant week with Mr. Harry Cooper—plenty of peaches, plums and grapes. I also stayed with Mr. and Mrs. Hilton a couple of days, and here I had watermelon. At Bunker Hill I spent a few days with Mr. and Mrs. Ed Smith. They have a fruit farm, and as no one enjoys fruit more than I, you know I enjoyed those few days! I brought a market basketful home with me. I am now ready for seven or eight months in school, by which time I hope to complete my courses."

The sun has slipped around that tree, and is shining on us with so much heat that we'll have to move. We'll go over and sit where we can lean our backs against that stump. Now, here is another letter from Orphan Charlie that came only yesterday. We'll read it:

"Mrs. Brown ((the matron) asked me to send you the bill for my clothes; I was needing these things very much, and Mrs. Harrison (who attends to the buying of the orphans' clothing) purchased the clothes at as low a figure as possible. Suit, $10; hat, $2. The reason we got $3 shoes is, that is the lowest price for straight shoes; I can wear both shoes on the same foot; had I gotten the crooked style, I couldn't have used but one shoe. Underwear, $1; crutches, $1.50; and I owe the matron $1.90, and Mrs. Hansbrough $1 for car fare, which I used going and coming from school. I am learning very nicely, have taken up shorthand (Pitman Howard system), and find it requires a lot of hard studying. I hope to complete bookkeeping in about two months. I am practicing on the universal keyboard of the typewriter. I have great expectations in store for the time when I complete school. Then I hope I can make the Advance Society feel proud of what it has done. I am going to try to do my part. I hope all (including Felix) are well."

Poor Felix! Won't he be lonesome if we stay too long out here in the park? Suppose you go to my house (not, you understand, to stay for dinner), and we will read some Av. S. letters from Kansas. On the way we will stop at the bank and buy Charlie a draft for $25—the money the Av. S. has contributed for his support. You will see that his necessary expenses are $20.40; the remainder of the money is to be used by him for car fare in going to school, so he won't have to borrow.

Mrs. F. H. Bentley, Havensville, sends me a list of names filling two pages of those contributing to Drusie's 10-cent shower. She reminds me at the beginning that Havensville is where the idea of Drusie's shower originated. She sends money from 32 persons, although we have already heard from a noble delegation of the Havensville folk. The total amount is $4.30. I would rather have $4.30 from 32 people, than to have that much from one person. Still, if you are no more than one, and have your $4.30, of course it will be joyfully accepted for the little missionary.

A Well-wisher, Mound Ridge: "There's a fine cloud in the west (Aug. 10), and as we're needing rain badly, hope we'll get a 'soaker' before morning. Can imagine how you are watching the scattering clouds for Drusie's shower of the 12th. As I haven't the correct change to send two drops, trust you'll not be offended if I add a half drop. P. S. Baby wanted to write, too." (It is due to that fact that I am indebted for several fine, swinging, circular lines across the main field of this letter. The boldness of the stroke presages that Baby will one day own an automobile of its own, in which case people had better keep out of the way. The reader will please observe the artfulness of my "it." Twenty-three cents in that letter.)

Anna Scrimsher, Silver Lake: "I am a reader of the Av. S. letters, and am interested. I inclose 10 cents for myself, the same for Daughter Elsie, for the ice cream shower." (It was a watermelon, but there's a good deal of cream that is little else, so it's all the same; I mean the cream you sell to your neighbors when you make your own butter.)

Gladys and Thelma Hobbs, Smith Center: "It has been raining lots in Kansas this year. We can spare a few drops to Drusie." (Twenty cents worth of stamps.)

Anna Smith, Howard: "If Drusie is needing a shower to get her winter clothes —it makes me cooler to write it—as much as we are needing a shower to make our corn crop (Aug. 12), I am sorry for her, and send $1 for her needs. As I hope that Charley will not object to a few spoonfuls of ice cream these warm days in the hot city of St. Louis, I send him $1 to obtain that coolness. Long may the Av. S. live, is my prayer.

Mrs. J. R. Gordon, Abilene: "I inclose a money order for Drusie's shower, and may God's blessing go with it. Twenty-five cents from Mr. J. N. Shane, $1 from myself. May the shower of blessing be a good old-fashioned downpour, such as we sometimes have in Kansas."

Lillie Fisher, Iola: "I am a little late with my shower, but better late than never. I was getting ready to come to Kansas, and forgot about the shower, but now I am at Iola, visiting my aunt and uncle. It is a fine place here; I like it very much. I wish all of the members could visit here, sometime. Of course, Dunlap, Mo., is still my home. I send 20 cents for Drusie's shower, and my pup sends 5 cents. I have a little collie pup; it is lots nicer than Felix; he can play. I will close this time with love and best wishes to all the Av. S. members and our author." (I was just about to say something about that collie, when I saw, "and our author," and then I forgot what it was. Anyway, a pup that sends money to our missionary orphan deserves encouragement, and Felix has nothing against him except that he is a dog. He can't get around that, I presume.)

Mrs. W. F. Bowman, Spivey: "October 1, I registered a package to Miss Malott. It was returned, saying that Pay Tay, Hsien, Honan, China, is not a 'parcel post office.' I await your advice." (Drusie's address is Pi Yang Hsien, Honan, China. To be sure, "Pa Tay" sounds about the same to us as "Pi Yang," but the Chinese seem to find a difference. Drusie says that for packages to reach her, they must be addressed in care of C. A. Funk, Hankow, China—Hankow being the 'parcels post' office nearest to Pi Yang Hsien. If you send a package to Mr. Funk, and write asking him to forward overland to Drusie, and enclose 12 cents for each pound—or additional fraction of a pound—of the package, he will do the work. All this sounds pretty complicated, but it is easy to guess that "Hankow" must mean one of the kind that is easily milked. I had so much trouble about sending Drusie that serge dressgoods, that I've concluded to send her the money, and let her buy what she finds there.

We will now hear from Missionary Drusie: "We are at the mountains, now, having a little vacation. We came on account of the three little ones, who have the whooping-cough. Esther (two years old) took it from a Chinese child, whose mother brought it to meeting. Toward the end of the month Ruth and baby Helen Grace both began to cough. As the days grew hotter, and we had no way to relieve the terrible cough, we at once made arrangements to go to the mountains. The children are now at the climax of their sickness. We are able to feed them milk here. The price was so high that we had not bought any goats at Pi Yang, and there are no cows there. We intend to take some goats back with us, for we have been compelled to use condensed milk, which is very expensive. We are on top of a big mountain called the Cock's Comb, because there is an immense rock at the top, shaped like a big rooster with a large comb. The mountain is literally covered with flowers. There are at least twenty varieties, among them the red lily, ferns and honeysuckle. The mountain has many little peaks, on which the houses are built. We should not be able to afford the rest here, had not a fellow missionary generously given Mr. Nowack a lot, on which he has built a tiny house. There are three rooms, and you will understand how small they are when I tell you that when Mr. and Mrs. Nowack and the children and the nurse have their cots set up, there is no room at all for my cot.

"However, a friend whom I knew in the homeland—in fact, the family with whom I spent my first week in Chicago when starting Chinaward—have kindly offered me resting place in their lovely house. Personal friends have so answered their prayers that they were enabled to build a lovely home, in which they have a boarding-school for missionary children. I had the privilege of helping by taking the children in the afternoons since coming here. I am charged nothing for rent, though rent at this summer resort is high. As yet, I have been able to provide only for my personal needs, such as household expenses, clothes, teacher and several Chinese textbooks. But I think that is wonderful—just to have the Lord keep me afloat, so I can work and help by doing, even if I can't have a share in the financial burden. Hallelujah! I'm glad I'm in China, in gospel work in Pi Yang."

From Drusie, later: "It has rained five or six days out of every eight since we came to the mountains, five weeks ago. Happily, I brought along the old pair of shoes and the rubbers that I wore when coming to China. I have no umbrella, since my Chinese oil-paper umbrella was taken; but with my pith hat and long calico Chinese outer garment I am able to take a walk each day—just a nice bit of mountain exercise. We are to open up a real church building Sunday. The Norwegian missionaries erected it so there would be a large meeting-place. Hitherto we have had services at the home of my friend, where I stay at night. We expect about one hundred missionaries to attend on Sunday. In the afternoon there will be services in Chinese for the missionaries and helpers and the natives who live on the mountain. Sunday evenings we have a song-service at the mission home—the English branch. It consists of about fifteen hymns and a closing prayer, and we have some solos, in addition to the hymns, in Norwegian, Swedish and English. Saturday evening we have a prayer-meeting at the Scandinavian branch of the mission. They are a precious people. On Thursday afternoons we have a general prayermeeting at the home of my friend. Thursday evening the Chinese have prayermeeting at the English house.

"My first call was made at the English house upon a lady from Italy, who attended Bible school in England, for several years. Since she left Italy, her parents have moved to America. As it was raining, she invited me to remain for dinner. My next call was at the Scandinavian house, to see a missionary who had been in China for seventeen years. I had forgotten their custom of afternoon tea, and came in time to be invited to 'tea'—which includes tea, coffee, toast scones and little cakes. My next call was to a Canadian Presbyterian mission family, which had been in China for twenty-five years. My fourth call was upon a Christian Missionary Alliance family. We had supper on a big rock, a little down the mountain, in real picnic fashion—sardines, biscuits, cocoa, bread and butter, fruit and cake. But I shall save the rest of my account for the next letter."

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST

A WEEKLY RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER.

ST. LOUIS, NOVEMBER 5, 1908.

FOR A HUNDRED and twenty years the wits laughed and the "common-sense" people wondered, and the patient saint went on hammering and pitching at his ark. But one morning it began to rain; and by degrees, somehow, Noah did not seem quite such a fool. The jests would look rather different when the water was up to the knees of the jesters; and their sarcasms would stick in their throats as they drowned. So it is always. So it will be at the last great day. The men who lived for the future, by faith in Christ, will be found out to have been the wise men when the future has become the present, and the present has become the past, and is gone forever; while they who had no aims beyond the things of time, which are now sunk beneath the dreary horizon, will awake too late to the conviction that they are outside the ark of safety, and that their truest epitaph is "Thou fool!"—From the "Book of Genesis," by Alexander McLaren.

To Our Subscribers,

Dear Friends:--

Often it has occurred to me to remind those who constantly read The Christian-Evangelist, that our Company is engaged in lines other than the weekly publication of this valuable paper, which has a circulation throughout our entire brotherhood.

The Christian Publishing Company has, for more than a quarter of a century, published the leading Bible-school literature in our brotherhood, and, beginning with the new year, we are making some very important changes that appear to meet with the approval of those who use our supplies. If you are interested in Bible-school literature, send to us at once for our new descriptive catalogue of Bible-school supplies.

We also publish and carry in stock, a large number of books, especially those that are standard works among us. Those who are interested in books, will do well to correspond with us on the subject.

We are also headquarters for Church Hymnals, and Song Books, for use in Bible-schools, Endeavor Societies, and evangelistic meetings. We also carry in stock, Communion Services, both of the old style, and the new Individual Services now being introduced in so many of our churches.

Space forbids mentioning other lines of merchandise we carry in stock; but it will suffice to say, in conclusion, that we are in position to supply everything needed, in connection with the Church, and its auxiliaries.

Sincerely,
W. Daviess Pittman

On the Eve of Election.

The election will be over by the time these lines are published. On its eve both the large old-time parties are claiming the victory. But this is the way of politicians, as of prize-fighters. Each combatant has "the punch" that means downfall for the opponent. We may pass all such claims by and say that seldom in an election is there so much real uncertainty as this year. We may predict by guess, but there are likely to be some surprises. The vote to be polled aggregates several millions, and four years ago the plurality in one state was fifty-one and in two other states less than five thousand. With a number of issues prominent in the election that have not been so much to the front heretofore, a change of a few votes in each precinct may make much difference in the ultimate result. More and more does the independent voter sway the result, and this year two issues will be important factors—temperance and labor. The general issues between the two chief parties have not been so clearly defined as in previous years, and in the main the result will be determined by whether the majority of the people believe Mr. Taft or Mr. Bryan the man best fitted for the work that is to be done. They are both men of ability and high character. The campaign, too, has been largely a personal one. Perhaps never before has there been proportionately so few spokesmen. The candidates themselves have been the spellbinders, and with the exception of Mr. Roosevelt, who several times contributed press contributions, no one else has been much in the public eye. Just how labor will vote is a matter of some doubt. Democrats are counting on large gains here. On the other hand, it may be that the Socialist candidate—who will poll a much heavier vote, probably, than has ever been cast before for this ticket—will draw more largely from regular Democratic than from regular Republican votes. The temperance question is an issue in several states. Mr. Bryan has been claiming Ohio, where Governor Harris, candidate for re-election on the Republican ticket, stands for the present local option law, while Judge Harmon, his opponent, is supported by the Personal Liberty League. Mr. Watson, candidate for governor of Indiana, stands for advanced temperance sentiment, his Democratic opponent being supported by the brewing interests. In Illinois neither candidate has come out on the question, though Governor Deneen signed the present local option bill. Much interest centers in the contest between Speaker Cannon, who is declared to have shelved temperance measures, and H. C. Bell, mayor of Marshall, Ill., who has pledged himself to vote for all temperance measures in Congress. Other personal contests of national interest are those of Governor Hughes for re-election and Governor Folk for the Senate. The issue raised by these men has been chiefly a moral one.

Mr. Roosevelt's Future.

Now that another President has been chosen, the future of Mr. Roosevelt will, for a time, be of special interest. There have been rumors in the past that he aspires ultimately to a college presidency. Some color is lent to this by the announcement of "The London Times" that Mr. Roosevelt is to be the Romanes lecturer at Oxford University in 1910. This would not interfere with his purpose to make a hunting trip in Africa, or in the announcement that he is to be Associate Editor of a well-known weekly. This position might easily lead to a college headship when one is vacant. We may be sure that in laying down the Presidency Mr. Roosevelt will continue to be the active Roosevelt. And he will have to maintain a certain reputation. Take, for instance, as illustration of this the story told of the presentation of an American diplomat to a remote Oriental potentate: "I have the honor," began the envoy, "to represent the great and powerful United States of America." The Oriental was grave, silent, and apparently uninterested. "Of which," went on the envoy, "his excellency, Theodore Roosevelt, is the chief magistrate." "Oh, yes," broke in the ruler, "I have heard of Roosevelt, but where is this America you speak of?" The President will have to beware, for no ruins are so irreparable as those of reputation.

The Comic Supplement.

The comic supplement has not been all bad. There have been glints of sunshine, sparks of humor, and hints at foibles, that under proper conditions might have been welcome at many a fireside. But a competition here leads to degeneracy, and there have been exploited at least five things not yet to be reckoned among the antiquities, although known to the ancients: Anger, bounce, folly, flattery and treachery. It is a real joy to know that at last one important newspaper has decided that the "funny side" Sunday supplement, which is supposed to delight the children, has outlived its day. "The Boston Herald," in announcing the abolition of this part of its usual edition says:

"The Herald abandons the comic supplement. That accompaniment of Sunday newspaperdom has had its day. We discard it as we would throw aside any mechanism that had reached the end of its usefulness, or any 'feature' that had ceased to fulfill the purpose of attraction. Comic supplements have ceased to be comic. They have become as vulgar in design as they are tawdry in color. There is no longer any semblance of art in them and if there are any ideals, they are low and descending lower."

Requiescat in pace, and may the rest of your tribe follow.

Convinced by the Facts.

It appears that President Eliot, of Harvard University, has had a change of view. He has just explained to the Massachusetts No-License League why he favors the no-license plan. We quote his words:

"I was not in favor of no-license in Cambridge when it was first proposed," he said. "I have been all my life what is sometimes called a moderate drinker. That is to say, I have used beer and wine on occasions, not habitually, and I have never experienced any ill effects whatever in my own person from either beer or wine, and I recognize the truth of the Bible saying about wine, that it 'maketh glad the heart of man.'

"That is true. Whether it be expedient or not that the heart of man should be made glad in that way, should be doubted. But there is no doubt about the fact that wine or spirits will momentarily make glad the heart of man.

"It seems to me that the recent researches in physiology and medicine tend very strongly to show that the moderate drinking of alcohol is inexpedient."

There are doubtless thousands of people who use the same argument for their drinking of wine that President Eliot has felt justified his own use of it. That was the argument which, for many years, permitted the employment of alcoholic drinks in many of the large hospitals. But the scientific study of the effects of alcohol has shown thinkers that it is not only inexpedient, but actually harmful, even where the doses are comparatively small. The trouble is not so much to convince men of the injury as it is to keep from them the desire to "make glad the heart."

The Seattle Fair is to ban liquor. The directors have so agreed. But the law also forbids the sale of intoxicants within two miles of the campus of the State University where the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition will be held.

Our Three Great Keywords.

It is a good time, in this Centennial year, to remember the three great words which have been the keynotes of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST throughout its history. These are Loyalty, Liberty and Love. They embody all that is essential to our spiritual growth and development, as individual Christians, and to our unity and efficiency as a religious movement, carrying forward a great Reformation.

Loyalty naturally comes first. Our liberty in Christ grows out of, and is based upon, our loyalty to Christ as our Savior and our King. To exalt Him above all the religious teachers of the world, and his Word above all human authority as expressed in creeds or otherwise, has been a capital feature of our movement from the beginning. His Word is an end of all controversy. What he teaches is to be implicitly believed; what he commands is to be implicitly obeyed; what he condemns is to be conscientiously avoided. His authority is supreme in all matters of faith, doctrine and duty. The church which he established, on the foundation which he himself specifically declared, with the constitution which he gave it, and the mission with which he clothed it, is to be accepted and honored as a divine institution, and its ordinances preserved and perpetuated in the form and for the purpose which he ordained. Not only so, but loyalty to Christ requires us to manifest the same spirit of self-sacrifice in carrying on his cause which he manifested in establishing it. It requires that we manifest the spirit of Christ, as well as obey his commandments.

Then we come to the great keyword of Liberty, which has been sounded in every religious reformation which the church has ever known, and which is the very vital breath of Christianity. "If the Son shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed." This liberty is not license. We do not say that liberty is limited by loyalty, because loyalty is no limitation of liberty; it is rather an expression of it. We would say, however, that liberty must be in harmony with loyalty to Jesus Christ. It is not simply our privilege to exercise this spiritual freedom which Christ has given us; it is our duty to do so. "Stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made you free, and be not entangled again in the yoke of bondage." The "yoke of bondage" referred to here by Paul was Jewish legalism, to which the church had become inclined by the influence of Judaistic teachers, who had visited them in Paul's absence. Christians are subject to-day to the same sort of bondage to their legalistic conceptions of the gospel and its ordinances. There is a tyranny of opinionism which is as blighting in its effects, and as much to be dreaded, as the tyranny of the pope. From the day when Thomas Campbell uttered the declaration, "Where the Scriptures speak, we speak; where the Scriptures are silent, we are silent," the advocates of this Reformation have felt that this was a declaration of independence from religious tyranny and the bondage of human authority. Liberty to think, and to express one's thoughts, and to act in harmony with one's deepest religious convictions—this is a birthright which we dare not surrender, no, not even for the sake of peace and mere temporary unity.

But the greatest of these keywords of the Reformation is Love. Where there is liberty of opinion, there must be the cementing power of love to hold in unity those who possess differing opinions. Love is not based upon uniformity of opinions, or methods of working, but it responds to the image of the Master wherever it sees it. "Love as brethren; be pitiful; be courteous." It was said of the first disciples, "Behold, how they love one another!" Paul and Peter loved each other, though they did not always see alike, and Paul had occasion once to reprove Peter for a fault which he discerned in him. But they served a common Master, whom they both loved, and so they loved each other, in spite of their differences. This note of love needs to be sounded clear and strong to-day. Love is the greatest force for "keeping the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace," and for bringing about that unity which has been broken by strife, and which is yet to be restored before the world is converted.

These are our watchwords, brethren, and they need to be echoed and re-echoed, in press and pulpit, throughout all the land: Loyalty, Liberty, Love, these three; "but the greatest of these is love."

Killing the Egyptians.

It was a remark of Luther that every man had a little pope within him, and all that was necessary in order that he might exercise great authority and become an ecclesiastical despot was to install him at the Vatican and invest him with papal functions. Mr. Sidney Lanier has changed this figure somewhat by suggesting that this pope is outside of him in the person of an Egyptian, and that this Egyptian must be slain before the man can really be himself and do his proper work in the world. In his recently published fragments, this is what Mr. Lanier says: "A man does not reach any stature of manhood until, like Moses, he kills an Egyptian (that is, murders some oppressive prejudice of the all-crushing tyrant Society, or Custom, or Orthodoxy) and flies into the desert of his own soul, where, among the rocks and sands, over which at any rate the sun rises clear each day, he slowly and with great agony settles his relation with men and manners and powers outside, and begins to look with his own eyes, and first knows the unspeakable joy of the outcast's kiss upon the hand of sweet, naked Truth. But let not the young man go to killing his Egyptian too soon; wait till you know all the Egyptians can teach you; wait till you are master of the technics of the time; then, grave, and resolute, and aware of the consequences, shape your course."

This statement is very suggestive, in both the fact which it relates and the warning which is given. It often happens that one can not rid himself of his prejudices until he, in some way, releases himself from the environment in which these prejudices were formed. We are sometimes uncharitable with respect to persons whom we regard as extremely narrow, and even bigoted, simply because we do not take into account the prejudices they have imbibed from childhood. We think it can be safely stated that most men are largely what they are by inheritance. The average man is very generally a democrat or a republican according as his environment has been. Many belong to a particular denomination for the same reason. This being the case, it is well some times to take the advice of Mr. Lanier and go into the desert of the soul where we are entirely free from our environment, and where we can form our conclusions with none to see but God, and where the fear of man is not before our eyes. Perhaps this was the very reason why the Apostle Paul, immediately after his conversion, went into the desert and remained there until he was thoroughly prepared for his ministry to the Gentiles. He was brought up after the straightest sect of the Pharisees, and consequently he had to get rid of his Jewish prejudices before he could do the work among the Gentiles to which he had been called. He needed this isolated training. Travel sometimes does for a man very much in helping him to unload his prejudices, or to kill the Egyptians that are around him. Even Moses, after he had slain his Egyptian, fled to the land of Midian, where he became a farmer, separated from the great cities, living practically an isolated life, where, by meditation and contact with nature, he became fitted for the great mission of delivering the people of Israel. Few men understand the molding power of environment. What we think is principle is often little more than prejudice. The two words begin with the same letter, and might be spelled all the way through with exactly the same letters, for very often they mean precisely the same thing.

In the light of this fact, it is worth while for all of us to spend some time in the desert. While we are in the great, busy world, where the clashings of commerce, politics and religious systems are so prominent, it is very difficult for the divinest souls to rid themselves of the prejudice which they name conscientiousness or principle. Nevertheless, no man can be his best until his Egyptian is slain, and he has vouchsafed to him the liberty to see truth as it is, not as it is colored by prejudice. Furthermore, it is worth while to follow Mr. Lanier's advice, and not attempt to kill the Egyptian too soon in life. We need the education that this Egyptian can give us, just as Moses received great benefit from the education which he received in the house of Pharaoh. In early life every boy walks by faith and not by sight in almost everything. He believes what his parents tell him, and what his schoolmaster tells him, and he acts accordingly. But when he reaches a more mature age, he begins to put away childish things, and to demand the reason for everything he is required to do. This is the age when he should kill his Egyptian, but not until he has arrived at a well-developed manhood. He can then reconsider the ground over which he has come, look carefully at the facts which have influenced his young manhood, and now he can fly away to the desert in order to reform his deliberate convictions with respect to principles and habits. The trouble is, very few men ever do this. They never get out of their childhood period. With them there are no Egyptians to kill, no prejudices to conquer, no further outlook to take in their horizon. They have really nothing more to learn with respect to the fundamentals which they have adopted. To express it in the language of a gentleman we heard speak the other day, these men, while young, have injected into their system a certain microbe, and this microbe determines the kind of character which is developed. The man referred to said it seemed to be impossible for him to destroy the influence of the microbe which had determined his religious association. This puts the matter exactly as it is in many cases. Undoubtedly we ought to have some fundamental principles settled, especially as regards our religious life; but, before this is finally accomplished, it may be necessary for us to slay the Egyptian of prejudice, and then spend some time away from our environment before we can settle down to a true religious manhood with an outlook extensive enough to include the charity enjoined in the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians.

"Another thing will be discovered. The temper of masculine humanity in the market place is demanding that the gospel shall make demands on them that shall be worth while. I believe that one reason why men stay away from churches to-day is because the pulpit is bringing a soft and effeminate message to them rather than the virile, heroic message of the gospel. It has always been true of the world that men will answer to the heroic. A gas-lighted, flower-scented Christianity does not meet the requirements of masculine humanity, and the pulpit might as well understand now, if it desires to reach men, that it must once again lift up the cross and say unto men: 'Here is your opportunity for heroic endeavor and self-sacrificing service in the interest of humanity.'"—Parker Stockdale.

This is what we have been saying in our own way, both from the pulpit and through these columns for some time, and the conviction grows on us that when the church gets down to the real work which Christ expects us to do in the world there will be in its sacrifices and in its deeds of daring that which will appeal to the heroic in men and draw them in larger numbers to the church.

Notes and Comments

We are glad to present to our readers the address delivered by Dr. C. D. Case at the New Orleans National Convention. It is admirable in its spirit, as well as sane and sensible in its sentiments. Especally do we commend what he says concerning the things we should do, "before we begin" to unite, namely: (1) "Let us pray;" (2) "Let us cultivate the spirit of sacrifice;" (3) Let us cultivate the spirit of patience." On the method of beginning, his advice differs with some things we have heard of late, but what he says is worth thinking about. He doubts the wisdom of the union, at present, of local church organizations. He thinks it would be better for all to move together. The plan of having a local church affiliated in its missionary work with two religious bodies he thinks will not work smoothly. There is something to be said in behalf of this view, and the lecturer says it very well. He recognizes the fact that we believe in congregational autonomy, but thinks in this matter of union the two bodies ought to act as a whole. Otherwise we may produce disintegration rather than union. On the other hand, it may be said that to wait for the two bodies to act unitedly would mean indefinite postponement, and that the way to unite is just to unite where the parties are ready for it. As long as there is a tendency toward unity on the part of the two bodies in their conventional action, it would be well, we think, to wait patiently on such action, unless in exceptional instances where the local necessity for union is so urgent and the desire for it so overwhelming as to make any postponement impossible. The thing chiefly lacking, at present, is the spirit of unity, and to cultivate that, together with a better understanding of each other, is, no doubt, the speediest way to a satisfactory union.

It is delightful when brethren of different creeds can meet together and talk over their differences in the spirit of this address, and of the remarks of Dr. Moore, who presided, and of evangelist Herbert Yeuell, who made an eloquent response. Much has already been gained when this can be done, and what remains in the way of obstacles will be removed in due time.

One of the strongest discourses we have read recently on the unity of Christians is the one delivered by Walter E. Tynes, D. D., pastor of the Calvary Baptist Church, Houston, Texas, from the text, "That they may all be one," and printed in a Houston daily newspaper. "It is not at all true," he says, "that because all men can not see and think alike, therefore God has ordained different denominations or churches in order to accommodate the varied demands of a varied humanity. That is not according to the Word of God. Unity of Christians, required by the letter and spirit of the New Testament, is an essential uniformity that would obliterate all denominational lines and resolve all churches, sects or parties of genuine Christians into identical and harmonious parts of one and the same great army." This unity he describes as a "unity in the Spirit;" "unity in government," which centers in Christ Jesus; "unity of faith;" "unity in baptism;" "unity as to the church;" "unity in gospel order;" "unity in the mission of the church." It is a happy omen that Baptist ministers are sounding the same great note of Christian unity now which has been echoing from our pulpits for nearly a century.

In his report of the New Orleans convention a member of the editorial staff of the Christian Standard, who was present, closes an article with the following statement:

"And, last of all, but not least, as we think, the brethren from the rank and file, as well as from pulpit, are asking that henceforth we strive, as best we mortals may, to preserve the spirit of unity in the bonds of peace."

In that statement is expressed, beyond doubt, the prevailing sentiment of our entire brotherhood. This being true, it is an imperative duty of our religious journals, which not only reflect but mold public sentiment, to lend their influence to preserve "the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." We invite not only the "Christian Standard," but all our other journals, to join with us in seeking to restore greater harmony of feeling and sentiment among the brethren, and greater co-operation in carrying out our great Centennial aims.

One of the essential conditions of restoring and keeping this unity and harmony, which are so essential to our success, is to clear the atmosphere of suspicion. We must believe in each other's sincerity and devotion to the Cause, however much we may differ with them in opinion. We must not suppose for a moment that if a brother or a religious paper takes a different view of some current issue from that which we take, that they are, therefore, disloyal to Christ and on the road to apostasy. There is a possibility that we ourselves may be as far out of the way in one direction as our brother is in another. If we only knew each other's hearts we would recognize each other's honesty of conviction, and the exercise of the charity that "thinketh no evil" would go far toward bringing about that fraternity and fellowship among us which we all so much desire.

A good illustration of the kind of spirit and of statements to be avoided if we are to maintain unity among ourselves is the following:

"As an elder in the church at this place, I wish to protest against their appearance on the program in our national conventions. I took the matter up with the official board of this church yesterday, and informed them that I would present a resolution providing that this church take no more offerings for either home or foreign boards until we are given to understand that Willett and Rice are not to be on the program of our national convention next year. Not one member of the official board dissented."—Walter L. Ross, Pres. Northwestern State Normal School, Alva, Okla., in Christian Standard.

We can not believe for a moment that our Cincinnati contemporary would give its approval to the monstrous idea that our missionary societies should be boycotted if the Centennial committee puts certain brethren on the Centennial program. Better dispense with our Centennial than to allow such a spirit of proscription to prevail.

Editor's Easy Chair.

While we have been reading of snowstorms in the Northwest and cloudbursts and floods in the Southwest, St. Louis has been enjoying a bit of Indian summer, which has thrown its mystic spell over all the landscape. A daily paper quotes from a speech of Henry Ward Beecher, made in this city many years ago, at this season of the year, in which he said: "Did you ever see the fond, loving mother about to leave her babe in the nursery, caressing, and again caressing it, then going towards the door to leave, return again to caress the sweet child before finally leaving? So we have now Summer —Indian Summer—returning to kiss dear nature just once more, before leaving it for the chill of Winter." It is these sweet kisses of Summer, taking a last farewell of nature before yielding her sway to Winter, that we are now enjoying. This great man, whose words we have quoted above, was a true lover of nature. It is reported of him, by another, that he was discovered in the wilds of the mountains, in the Adirondacks alone, his arms full of autumn leaves, while with bared head, his face turned to the heavens, he thanked God for all the beautiful things in nature. To such a soul as his nature was but the older revelation of the divine beauty and goodness and truth. How much of enjoyment one misses whose heart has not been opened to read the loving messages which God has written on the face of nature, and to feel the loving inspiration which he is breathing out through these beautiful autumnal days!

An appreciative friend and reader of The Christian-Evangelist, whose heart is burdened with the evils of the times, inquires why the "Easy Chair" does not devote more space to these modern reforms. Our defense was, and is, that in this department of the paper we prefer constitutional, rather than symptomatic treatment of the evils which afflict our country. That is to say, if the moral and spiritual life of the Church can be quickened and toned up, it is certain to direct its energies to righting the wrongs of society. No doubt these evils should be treated specifically, and did our space permit we should be glad, in other departments of the paper, to give more attention to all these modern reforms, which look to the protection of the young and the weak, a fairer distribution of the products of labor, honesty and efficiency in the public service, the evils of the liquor traffic, and a score of other questions which have to do with human welfare. These wrongs, however, can never be righted except through the coming of the kingdom of God in a wider and deeper sense than it has yet come, and whatever helps to the bringing in of that kingdom is a contribution to the overthrow of all these evils. When men come to recognize their human relationship as brothers and their common relationship to God, and come to see the meaning of these relationships, they will treat each other right, and not until then. If the "Easy Chair" has given emphasis to the abiding principles of faith and hope and love, and has laid stress on righteousness, fraternity and justice, it has done something, however humble it may be, toward bringing in the brighter age which is yet to be.

It is a striking fact which has arrested the attention of many, that neither Jesus Christ, nor his chosen apostles after his ascension, attacked directly the political and social wrongs of the age in which they lived. What they did do, however, was to plant the seeds of a great moral and political revolution in the hearts of humanity, which, in the fulness of time, would come to harvest. Jesus saw that a mere condemnation of existing wrongs would not remedy the situation. What the world needed was life, and he came that it might have life, and that more abundantly. It needed a new heart, a new sense of its obligations, Godward and manward, new ideals of life, and the power to realize these ideals. Jesus Christ came to furnish these necessary things, and the Church is fulfilling its mission just as it is carrying forward Christ's work in the world. Not the noisy reformer that ignores God in his denunciation of human wrongs, is the man who is doing most to lift the world to a higher level, but he who seeks to renew the hearts and lives of men through the power of the gospel. The Church that is doing most to convert the world to Jesus Christ and to bring men under the influence of his spirit and teaching, is doing most to cure all our social and political ills, and to bring in the "new heaven and the new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness."

Of course, it may be said that many church members are guilty, equally with men of the world, in perpetuating these wrongs. Alas! this is too true. But it is one thing to be a church member, and quite a different thing to be a Christian, imbued with Christ's spirit and aims. Thousands of church members are but nominal Christians, deceiving themselves more than others. The need of the hour is to quicken the consciences of these professors of religion who hoard their wealth against the world's needs, and whose lives are wholly worldly, and who seek first, not "the kingdom of God and its righteousness," but worldly gain and its profits and honors. They must be made to see that Christ Jesus condemns all such pretensions, and lays down the universal law that if any man will be his disciple he must deny himself and take up his cross and follow him. When the Church becomes wholly converted to Christ it will become wholly united in Christ, and then will come the day of victory for the triumphant hosts of God against all the powers of wickedness. What is needed, then, in all churches, is deep foundation work, that has to do with men's personal relations to God and with each other. We must return to the New Testament type of Christianity, if we are to make it a victorious power in the world. May the Spirit of God quicken all our consciences, enlighten all our understandings, and lead us to a real consecration of our lives to the service of God and of humanity, to the end that His will may be "done on earth as it is in heaven."

In the very interesting and suggestive address by President Long at the New Orleans convention, which we published last week, and which we hope all our business men, especially, have read, or will read, he stated, among other noteworthy things, this fact: "With an educated, industrious, pious ministry, we will have access to the understandings of our fellowmen, and when this result has been accomplished, we may soon hope to reach their hearts, and when their hearts have been deeply touched, their whole possession, time, talents and money, will be at the command of those engineering the work for the Master." Not until the hearts of our business men have been deeply touched will their possessions be placed at the disposal of the kingdom of God. Speaking of selfishness, which is the bane of many professed Christians, he suggests the importance of teaching the business men to "think less of selfish interests, showing them that selfishness disqualifies us for happiness, is one of the greatest sins of the age, prevents us seeing and comprehending the broader views of life, those visions that lift us into a higher plane of living." This, indeed, is the supreme need of the times, and such men as Brother Long can do more in this direction than any average preacher, by his earnest words, backed by his generous deeds. How true is the statement in his closing sentence, that while it is right for business men to use their talents in the accumulation of worldly possessions, "yet the greater reward, happiness, comes in the distribution"—a fact which many business men have yet to learn. Greater the need then for the prayer he suggests, "that our business men everywhere may give God their lives, their influence, their accumulations, to the end that His gospel may be proclaimed, and take hold of the lives of all the people, in all the nations of the world."

Many of us, aside from business men, have yet to learn the blessedness of unselfishness. One does not have to be rich in order to be selfish. Nor does one have to be rich in order to be covetous. All of us must beware of these evils that eat like a canker at the soul. Jesus, however, spoke of the "deceitfulness of riches." Many a rich man deceives himself with the idea that he is liberal with his means, who is only doling out a niggardly part of his income for the Lord's work. He is self-deceived. Many a preacher imagines that if he preaches against selfishness he is thereby unselfish, whereas his life may tell a different story. What we all have to learn is the real joy and happiness which comes from unselfish service for the good of humanity and the glory of God. There is no greater enemy to the peace and happiness of the home, the church, society and the nation, than a sordid selfishness which ignores the rights of others. May it be that this Centennial year among us shall mark a new era of liberality and of spiritual growth, in which good will and good works shall abound to the glory of Him who hath "called us with a holy calling!" So shall we worthily celebrate our first centenary, and fit ourselves for a still brighter and more triumphant future.

The Union of the Disciples and the Baptists

An address given by the pastor of the Delaware Avenue Baptist Church, of Buffalo, N. Y., at the New Orleans Convention

By C. D. Case, Ph. D.

I represent to-night no one but myself. I have been appointed by no association, convention or missionary society. Though an officer of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, I am not their delegate and bear no official instructions from them. Still I claim to be somewhat fitted for the honor that has come to me of appearing before you. For four years I was in the divinity school of the University of Chicago, in daily class contact with your own men who were studying in your divinity school affiliated with the university. For six years I was pastor in Indiana, where you outnumber the Baptists more than two to one. Once I was pastor of Alexander Campbell's granddaughter, though she never discussed with me her grandfather's beliefs. I have read much of the literature of your history and teachings. In addition, recently I wrote a personal letter to many of our Baptist leaders—north, south, east and west—putting to them five questions, as follows:

1. What kind of a union would you suggest?
2. What are the advantages and disadvantages of such a union?
3. What are the difficulties in the way of consummating it?
4. How would you begin?
5. What is the general attitude of Baptists in your section of the country toward the Disciples of Christ, and would they favor such a union?

I have received eighty answers from twenty-nine states, eleven of these southern states. Fourteen answers were from seminary professors, representing six Baptist seminaries, ten from college presidents, eight from missionary society officials and four from editors. These answers were confidential, and the only way that I can use them is to aid me in forming my judgment as to the need and method of union.

In spite of all this, I am hampered. I am a northerner, and there are some differences of views in general between the northern and southern Baptists. Also, I am in a state where there are fewer Disciple churches. In fact, one correspondent frankly said: "It might be well for our brethren of Boston, New York and Philadelphia to wait a bit until those nearer the seat of activities have moved in the matter." In addition, I shall omit from my address special mention of those features of the question which have recently obtained wide circulation in the published literature of the movement. I refer especially to the proceedings of the congress of the Disciples held at Indianapolis in 1906, with the addresses of President Mullins, of the Louisville Seminary, and Rev. J. H. Garrison, the editor of The Christian-Evangelist; the proceedings of the Baptist congress at Baltimore in 1907, which I attended, with the addresses of Rev. Frederick D. Power, D. D., Prof. Errett Gates, Ph. D., and others; and the proceedings of the congress of the Disciples at Bloomington, Ill., in 1908, with the addresses of Rev. Frederic W. Burnham and Rev. Charles Hastings Dodd, D. D.

Brethren, at this Centennial celebration of your history, some definite movement should be made to reunite those of whom God has said, What God hath joined together, let no man put asunder. You were with us once, and you owe much to us. It was Robert Marshall who first became convinced of the correctness of the Baptist teachings on the subject of baptism, and he in turn convinced Barton Stone so that Stone gave up the baptism of infants and began to immerse believers. Now, it is true that the Baptist ministers would not baptize the members of the congregation unless they united with the Baptist churches, but Stone and his associates concluded that if they were authorized to preach, they were authorized to baptize, which certainly was the logical outcome of the Baptist position even if it was not the Baptist practice.

Then, you will gladly recall that after the Declaration and Address of Thomas Campbell, his son, Alexander Campbell, called his father's attention to the fact that the principles therein enunciated required the abandonment of infant baptism as without the warrant of precept or example in the Scripture. A renewed study of the Bible followed, with the result that on June 12, 1812, Thomas Campbell and wife, Alexander Campbell and wife, and three others were baptized by Elder Mathias Luce, of the Baptists. In 1813 the Brush Run church joined the Redstone Association, though with the express stipulation that it should be allowed to teach and preach whatever was learned from the Holy Scriptures, regardless of any creed or formula of Christendom. But so much criticism ensued that at last the Brush Run church withdrew to another association, which itself finally adjourned sine die, the majority believing that there was no warrant in Scripture for such organization of churches. To this Alexander Campbell was opposed, and the most of us believe that his judgment was right. But it can be said that neither Thomas Campbell nor Alexander Campbell was ever expelled from any Baptist church or association, and therefore you, their followers, belong to us yet! We never disassociated you, and we do not propose to do it now. Of course, you have grown to manhood, and we can not say, as many do say, "The Disciples left us; if they want union, let them return to us." A hundred years of independent history can not be overlooked, history of rapid achievement on your part, of heroic struggles, of missionary effort, of evangelistic zeal. Let us, therefore, consider the subject of union together.

Not only do the general interests of God's kingdom demand this union, but our own interests demand it. I will not say in this presence in what way you need us. But we need you. It was George Dana Boardman that said: "Romanism gives play to the sense side of religion; Episcopacy to the æsthetic side; Presbyterianism to the theological side; Methodism to the active side; Quakerism to the passive side; and the Baptists to the exact side." And he might have added, "and the Disciples to the practical side." In fact, you are aiming to be as exact as we, and we want to be as practical as you. Can not we join forces?

We agree on fundamental principles. It has been said that practically the only thing we have in common is a baptistery; and I agree with you that if a mere form of baptism is all that we have in common, we need not strive for union. The Baptists do not name as their fundamental principle the mere form of baptism, nor do you.

What, then, are some of these common principles?

First, the sufficiency of God's Word for faith and practice. We both believe that whosoever shall break one of these least commandments and shall teach men so, shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven.

Second, we believe in Christ as the Messiah, the Son of God, the world's only sufficient Redeemer.

Third, we believe in the Holy Spirit as the one who, through the believer, convinces the world of sin, righteousness, and judgment, and who, in the Christian, is the Guide, Sanctifier and Comforter. Here, the Baptists, in general, believe in a more direct work of the Spirit upon the hearts of the unconverted.

Fourth, we believe in an absolute freedom of conscience, and the accountability of every man to God alone.

Fifth, we believe in the local church of Jesus Christ, composed of baptized, regenerated believers, with local church authority, with the two ordinances of baptism and the Lord's Supper.

Sixth, we believe in baptism as a command of Christ, and agree on its form and its prerequisites of faith and repentance, and deny equally baptismal regeneration.

More of these principles need not be named. One can not help liking the way J. H. Garrison states what he regards to be fundamental principles: No creed, Bible names for Bible things, primitive order of worship, primitive organization and primitive discipline. For myself, I have loved to express the Baptist position as absolute allegiance to Christ as prophet, priest and king—as prophet, and so his revelation as contained in his Word, a sufficient standard of belief and practice; as priest, and so no human expiation or priestly intervention necessary; as king, and so his commands, and only his commands, and his commands in his way, to be obeyed. Do you agree? Is Christ our prophet, priest and king?

Then are we brothers, saved by grace, redeemed on Calvary, made one by his Spirit.

Let us get together, since we have the present advantage of an emphasis on our common principles as differing from the other denominations. Let us get together, believing that we have so far fulfilled the function of our separate existence that we can do better service now if we are united. Once you had to combat an excess of emotionalism and to make simple the call to Christ. H. G. Wells says that the ghost of a horse trots before every express train. How much better railway tracks, ten feet wide, would be; but the width of a horse cart still limits our railroads. Let us get together, as the beginning of a larger movement. If we don't get together, who will? Jesus established a kingdom, not a denomination. Our separate gatherings are held out of loyalty to the kingdom. But the so-called denominations are but means to the end. Let us exalt the end.

How Shall We Begin.

Brethren, before we begin, let us pray. We want no mechanical union. Not until we can say, "It seemeth good to the Holy Spirit and to us," should we attempt co-operation. Begin in prayer, that we may preach truth in love. Better separation than one people without unity of spirit.

Then, before we begin, let us cultivate the spirit of sacrifice. "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily and follow me." Your early history revealed this spirit. The last will and testament of the Springfield presbytery, in 1804, suggested death. The adjournment of the Mahoning Association meant death. Said Gustavus Adolphus, dying on the battlefield of Lutzen: "I seal with my blood the liberty and religion of the German race." Something of advantage, of denominational glory, of immediate denominational sufficiency, of personal advancement, may have to be given up; but in thus dying we shall live for the liberty and religion of America and the world.

Then, before we begin, let us cultivate the spirit of patience. In fact, many have said, Do not begin at all, but let the movement begin of itself. Do not force sentiment. I agree, though let us not be like Gamaliel waiting to see whether the movement is of God by the success of the outcome. "Be a hero in the strife." Movements among human beings do not begin of themselves. Human hearts feel, human minds think, and human wills choose. Yet, it should be repeated again and again, move slowly! Let us all go together. Let us check the hasty, encourage the faltering, and say with one of my hopeful correspondents: "What is ten years in a process of this sort?" And, brethren, bear with us. Remember, all things considered, that the southern and northern Baptists, if possible, should move in concert, even though this closer affiliation should postpone the cause of larger union to a more distant future.

Then how begin?

First, let us talk. Talk may be cheap, but it relieves many a burdened heart and clears many a cloudy mind. I know there are some who believe that we dissipate our energies by talking. There is nobody to speak authoritatively for either party. Nevertheless, let us get together in different organizations and societies and declare that we would like to be united. Half the proposal is made when there is a wish expressed on the part of the suitor that he would like to be married to the object of his devotions. Love will find a way to consummate the desire. By this interchange of ideas many misconceptions can be eradicated and a mutual understanding cultivated. The New York pastors once passed a motion expressing a desire for union. In Chicago, last spring, H. L. Willett and Shailer Mathews gave addresses on the subject of union. As long ago as 1902, in California, the Disciples and Baptists had committees of consultation with fraternal meetings. Prof. H. Van Kirk, of the Berkeley Bible School was on your committee. In Ontario, committees were formed for mutual conference. Though, as far as I know, nothing permanent has resulted either in California or Ontario, the mutual acquaintance has been helpful. Still further, joint meetings and societies can be fostered. In New York, Philadelphia, Buffalo and Syracuse, for example, joint ministerial conferences are held; and in Chicago, next month, a joint congress is to meet, which includes also the Free Baptists. These meetings should be duplicated and every opportunity made for mutual acquaintance. But talk must crystallize into action. What shall this action be?

And here I must stop to express my personal doubt of the only present method of union which seemingly has received encouragement. I refer to the union of the local church organizations, affiliating with missionary societies of both denominations. Many have suggested that the only way we can unite is by the local church, and, therefore, let them unite if they will, and stay apart if they choose. It is true that the only New Testament union is upon the basis of the autonomy of the individual church, but to allow slow disintegration to occur in both denominations works chaos. It works chaos for the missionary activities. I concur in the attitude of the Free Baptists in considering union with the Baptists, in that they deprecated the absorption of the individual church but gladly expressed their desire to come in as a whole, and this mainly for the sake of their educational and missionary interests. Tell me, in the years to transfer what would become of our missionary work? Dr. Frederick D. Power, at the Baltimore congress, favored this policy: "Why," he asks, "when in a community the Disciples and Baptists may agree on one pastor, why should not the union be advised by their respective mission boards?" It is not from selfishness that such a movement would not always be encouraged by the mission boards. In the long run, no church can do effective service by affiliating with two denominations and sending delegates to two sets of missionary societies.

Doubtful Successes.

It would work chaos also for the local church if the union began with the individual churches, unless the resultant church should at once choose between the denominational organizations. As far as I can see, the Rockford union, which failed at the last moment, was practically an absorption of the Christian church by the Baptists. The strict adherence to the Biblical name and the weekly observance of the Lord's supper were to be given up, and the articles of faith of the First Baptist Church were to remain. Usually such local movement has not prospered. At Grand Rapids, Wis., in less than six months the united body was as weak as either church was before the union. This organic union was not, however, so I understand, consummated. I have been in Waupun and talked with the first pastor of the union church. I am creditably informed that in Wisconsin it is yet to be shown that any form of union is a success. I have also been informed by an Ontario pastor, who is very close to the movement, I need not state here how, that the local movement in Canada has not worked out well. I refer to Kenora, Ontario, and Portage La Prairie, Manitoba. The really successful union is instanced by the Memorial Baptist and the First Christian churches, of Chicago. The plan of union, it seems to me, is to be commended in every way, but it is still a compromise on both sides.

How, then, shall we take the necessary step?

I believe there is only one way, and that is through our national gatherings. These national gatherings can not establish organic union, but they can agree in making certain recommendations, and these recommendations will possess far more authority for the local church than any legislation. The very first move must be the appointment of a strong committee by this gathering of Disciples to seek conference with similar committees from the Southern Baptist convention and Northern Baptist convention, which committees should consider at length every phase of the topic and make definite recommendations to their respective bodies.

What May Be Recommended.

Now, here I should cease, for how dare I forestall any movement of such committees? But I am going to be brave and ask you to remember that I am expressing but my own personal views, and I shall proceed to indicate what it seems to me these committees may recommend. The union now being considered between the Northern Baptists and the Free Baptists will give us our starting point. Our Baptist committee, representing our missionary organizations and authorized by them, announced that when three-fourths of the Baptist state societies where there were Free Baptist state meetings, voted for the union of Baptists and Free Baptists in missionary work at home and abroad, then all the national societies shall then change their constitutions so as to admit on equal terms the Free Baptists, leaving all matters of membership, ritual and fellowship to the local church. That is, the union is entered, not by the door of doctrine, but of missions. As a Southern Baptist missionary official wrote to me: "The way to bring about union is in being dead in earnest in winning lost souls even to the uttermost part of the world."

The important point for us now in such an agreement is that it leaves the local church with its New Testament authority. However, it assumes other conclusions: that henceforth there shall not be rivalry but union in the same town, and that there shall be an interchange of pastors and church letters. This, however, as far as Baptists are concerned, rests with the local church as it expresses itself in the associational gathering.

Now, perhaps, this committee will find it necessary to indicate the essential of local church union and affiliation. Whether it does or not, is immaterial; but somewhere this will and must be done. And that essential is that the Bible is the standard of faith and the rule of practice. But in saying this, we must go no further. I take it there are great differences of opinion among you Disciples as to what the Bible means. I think it was one of the Campbells who said that the Bible "is not a series of rules and detail regulations." Jesus came to free us from Judaism. "The absence of a precedent should never be taken as a prohibition of a practice which in other ways is in harmony with the Christian spirit." James declared to Paul, that "many thousands were all zealous of the law;" that is, circumcised their children, kept the seventh day, and offered the Levitical sacrifices. Would Baptists and Disciples join with them. Oh! but the times have changed! But the Bible has not. Paul gladly accepted the first great compromise, that he and his Gentile converts should abstain from meats offered to idols, and from blood, and from things strangled, and from fornication, the last only being a permanent ethical precept. But inside of ten years Paul was arguing the essential rightness of eating all kinds of meat. A prominent Baptist seminary professor has recently argued that the New Testament contains no authoritative local church polity. In 1904, the Baptist congress discussed the question, "How far may one differ from accepted standards and remain a Baptist?" There may be, then, honest difference of opinion on what the Bible means. Says one who responded to my letter: "If my watch says ten and yours ten-twenty, you could turn yours back ten minutes, and let me turn mine forward ten minutes, and we would be together, but we may both be wrong. The only way is for both of us to set our watches by the regulator." True, but we may both look at the same regulator and think we are right, and in the meantime, I would say, "Brother, when my watch says ten and yours ten-twenty, meet me at the house of God to pray and to take up a collection for missions." That is, let us do what the Association of the United Baptist Churches of New Brunswick did with reference to the Lord's supper. The section on this subject simply said: "The Lord's supper is an ordinance of Christ, to be observed by the church in the manner indicated by him in Matthew 26:26-30." God's idea of unity is not the chaste Doric columns of a Parthenon or the delicate Corinthian capitals of an Ephesian temple, but the irregular free growth of a primeval forest, among whose rustling leaves God's voice is heard, and upon whose tops shine the same beneficent sun.

More Than Profession.

Now, apply this principle to the question of baptism. Let it be recognized, brethren, that your position is widely different from ours in regard to the design of baptism. You differ among yourselves, but some statements from both extremes of your leaders have led me to believe that there is in general no essential change in your views from the time of the Campbells; but this opinion I state for the sake of fairness, and not because all of my brethren agree with me. If this is not true, I shall welcome the correction. Not always does the widely-distributed literature of a denomination represent the progressive leaders. Witness the fact that practically all that Northern Baptists have on the subject of the Lord's supper advocates strenuously close communion, while I am sure that many leading pastors and churches of the North preach and practice open communion.

But, be your position what it may on the subject of baptism, I am sure you have been misconceived by some of us. To go back, Alexander Campbell declared: "He is a Christian who believes in his heart that Jesus of Nazareth is the Messiah, the Son of God; repents of his sins and obeys him in all things according to his measure of knowledge of his will." And he also held that the test of the moral life should be made more strictly as you desire to keep your membership clean. This means that the Disciples do require more than the mere profession of faith to retain membership among them. How much, then, are we Baptists willing to do to form a common statement with you in regard to conversion and baptism?

Let me say that a leading northern seminary professor wrote me that he would make as a condition of membership, not doctrine, but regeneration and a living at peace with the church. A leading Southern minister, strong in his fidelity to the Southern Baptist convention, writes this: "A personal confession of faith in Jesus as Lord and Savior is a sufficient confession for baptism and church membership; that being assured, the churches may well trust the Lord, through his Spirit, to effect all else in due time, and hence allow for the widest difference of theological opinion consonant with personal loyalty and allegiance to Christ."

A Precedent.

I need say no more on this topic, but simply quote with approval the statement as issued by the Portage La Prairie church, which, it seems to me, is a sufficient precedent for the future:

"We accept the Scripture teaching as to the place of faith, repentance, and baptism in the divine plan of redemption, and as set forth in such Scriptures as the following (here follow the passages). That we understand from these and other Scriptures that spiritual life begins in the soul, not in baptism, but before baptism, in saving faith or trust in the Lord Jesus Christ; that saving faith becomes an active principle of obedience, which obedience rightly begins in baptism and continues throughout the Christian life."

I am willing to say that Baptists have become derelict in placing baptism in time with joining the church and not with the act of conversion. They have thus minimized its importance and taken it from its position as the very first act of Christian obedience. In our view, baptism is not essential to salvation. But I am frank to say that if the rich young man turned away from Christ unsaved because he refused to obey Christ in such a simple act as giving away his property, any professing Christian can be lost if he directly makes an issue with Christ and refuses to be baptized. The fact is, such a person does not believe, that is, he has not committed himself unreservedly to Christ.

There will be another matter to be decided, and that is the union name. That need not trouble us. I thank God I am a Christian first, and a Baptist second, but I do not use the name Christian in a denominational sense. The name Baptist is not to be cast ruthlessly aside. It is a symbol of sacrifice and service, of tears and prayers, of principles and achievements divine. It should be made the name emeritus of our united body and be given honor, but not responsibility. But we will gladly, I think, welcome the term "Churches of God" as the usual designation, and attach to it for the time being, as a descriptive term, the words "Baptists and Disciples."

And now, brethren, let us remember that Christ is our great leader. Here, on southern soil, within two blocks of Robert E. Lee's monument, I am compelled to recall an incident that I heard General J. B. Gordon once give. At Spottsylvania, Hancock's fierce charge had cut in sunder the Confederate forces. Nothing could save the Confederate army but a countermovement, quick, impetuous, decisive. Robert E. Lee resolved to save it, and if need be, at the sacrifice of his own life. With perfect self-poise, with his head uncovered, he rode to the head of the troops, resolved to lead in person the desperate charge. Gordon knew what this meant. Instantly spurring on, he grasped the bridle of General Lee's horse, and called out so that the soldiers could hear: "General Lee, you shall not lead my men in a charge. . . . These men behind you are Georgians, Virginians, and Carolinians. They have never failed you on any field. They will not fail you here. Will you, boys?" Back came the cry from a thousand throats, "General Lee to the rear! General Lee to the rear!" And the charge was made by men aroused to a fever heat of martial enthusiasm and devoted love. They would not fail; they could not fail. Was not their commander, though not seen, depending upon them? Brethren, we do not see our Captain, but he is directing the battle. We will do our best; we will not fail. And when the command is given to charge, for the sake of him we love, let us be united.

But Jesus does not have to be taken to the rear. They slew him once; they can not slay him again. At the Pittsburg convention of the Young People's Missionary Movement, Bishop Frank W. Warne, of India, said that a lady missionary told him that she had been questioning a humble, simple village woman to see what she knew, and said to her, "Tell me a Bible story." And there, as they sat on the floor, side by side, the village woman began to tell the story of the crucifixion. And as she told it, it began to have a pathos and power in it that the missionary had never seen in it before, and when the simple woman came to where they began to drive the nails into Christ's hands, she began to weep, and throwing her arms around the missionary's neck, she sobbed, "I can not go any further; it will break my heart." And thus the two together, one from the east and one from the west, sat weeping together. Brethren, that same cross can break the middle-wall of partition down between us. Let us sing, "In the cross of Christ I glory," and "Just as I am without one plea," and then we will sing, "Blest be the tie that binds;" and sing, as a glorious finale, "All hail the power of Jesus' name!"

For the weariest day
May Christ be thy stay!
For the darkest night
May Christ be thy light!
For the weakest hour
May Christ be thy power!
For each moment's fall
May Christ be thy all.

NICK-NAMED

But Doesn't Object in the Least.

A young lady from Troy was nick-named "Grape-Nuts," but she had been so greatly benefited by this world-famed food that she did not object to the sobriquet given her by her friends. She writes:

"From overwork my health failed me last summer and I feared for the future. Nearly every one I knew had something to recommend, and I tried them all without benefit.

"A cousin, however, was persistent in recommending Grape-Nuts, because of the really wonderful good the food had been to her. Finally she sent me a package and to please her I commenced to eat it.

"Almost from the very start my strength began to improve, and soon I began to gain in weight. After about five months eating Grape-Nuts for breakfast and supper daily, I became well again.

"My appearance improved so much my friends wondered and asked the reason. I told them it was Grape-Nuts and nothing else. I have talked so much about the benefits to be derived from this food that they have nicknamed me "Grape-Nuts," but I don't object in the least. This food has certainly proved a great blessing to me." "There's a Reason."

The Church of Christ and Men

The Second Part of an Address delivered at New Orleans at the Foreign Christian Missionary Convention.

By C. M. Chilton

Man is the central figure of the world's life. Its old geological periods were but the advancing stages in the preparation for his coming. His foreshadowings were everywhere and the outlines of his figure growing clearer at every stage. The world is designed to furnish a field and opportunity for his life, and refers to him for its purpose and meaning. It awakens all deep chords of his nature, and has a response for its every cry. In man is the end of the world, and all but man shall finally fall into ruins.

Where are these old civilizations that once filled the world with their glory? It is instructive to stand amid their solemn ruins; the crowds that once surged to and fro like angry seas, and shouted and fought in the streets, are gone; the walks of the academy are deserted. No ship is anchored at the wharf and none is coming or going upon the sea; only piles of ruins and a few broken columns remain to mark the place. They tell us that our precious world shall finally grow old and die. Slowly yet surely shall all of the works of man fall into decay, and in his splendid mausoleum only dust and scattered fragments shall remain of all that has been. If one yet living on might walk amid its vast solitudes, now lingering at a broken statue, now leaning against a worn column or stooping to mark the inscription upon a rusted coin, what material for reflection upon the vanity of vanities! Pleasure, wealth, ambition, thrones, civilizations, what are they! Here, amid these ruins, the question of immortality becomes supreme, for if personality does not abide we are left to eternal wreck and despair, and ordered thought concerning the world, or man, or God becomes impossible. A resurrection is a necessity of thought, to save our reason as well as our lives. Faith must anchor itself in personality or die. Here it becomes clear that man, after all, is the only task there is in the world, for he alone survives the ravages of time. To bring man to his own, then, is the world's work, and lives and institutions are to be measured by what they do for him. In death he leaves the world, with even his body behind, as if all had been but a temporary scaffolding from which to build him.

Man a Composite.

But man is a composite being. He is a thinking animal with a carnal nature, and need to be fed and clothed and educated. But he is infinitely more. He is a spiritual being made in the image of God and endowed with all the potentialities of eternal life. Between these lower and higher natures is a ceaseless struggle and man becomes a sinner. It is as a spiritual being that he comes to his own, and it is only in happy relations with God and his Kingdom that we can think of him with satisfaction. In this character alone he rises to true dignity and worth. We can only think of the end of the world as being realized in the character values which God is gathering into his garner as increasing harvests from its advancing generations in their growing moral life. In the harmony of the divine plan the world is so constituted that the basic foundations of all true social life and progress lie in the moral nature of man. As he grows morally, civilizations rise; but as he declines their lights grow dim. So to make provision for man as a spiritual being, and to bring him to his eternal own, is the final crowning work of the world. In the last analysis lives, institutions and civilizations will be measured by what they do for man in his character, his religious, his eternal relations. Without this, however brilliant his career and however great the civilization that produced him, he is still a sinner, and—whatever the future world may do for him—is disinherited. Investments, do you say? Here is the only true investment, whatever does not directly or indirectly serve man in the eternal interests of his life is lost. And no man is a true business man who has not learned this great truth.

The Church God's Method.

Now, the church is God's own method in Christ for the accomplishment of this saving work. It is his enterprise for the salvation of man in that true sense of "deliverance from evil, communion with God and eternal life." If we did not have the church, men would in the exercise of their higher aspiration and faculties, feel themselves under the necessity of creating an institution like it to do the work for which it stands, and this they have actually everywhere done. It is its noble work that lifts the church far above every other institution, and gives infinite significance to all of its enterprises. It was for this that Jesus came to establish it and send it forth in love to become the widening base of operation for the supernatural working within the natural, both natural, both supernatural for the regeneration of men; and for nineteen hundred years the gospel has proved itself "the power of God unto salvation." Wherever it has been preached in the spirit of Christ, a new divine life begins to appear. Jesus would send us forth with this evangel and the life it brings to the ends of the earth. He seeks to awaken in us such an appreciation of its value that there shall be no rest for us so long as a single soul remains in ignorance of it. He holds before us, as an uplifted ensign, the vision of a redeemed humanity.

We have come, then, to the one truly masculine task of our world, a task that staggers faith and challenges all of the heroic in us; one so huge that races and civilizations are but items of it, and all of the ages are required for its accomplishment. The Kingdom of the Spirit is indeed the world's task. Too great for any age, it will itself determine the boundaries of the ages and the limits of time. Before it all other enterprises, as of government, commerce, education, sink into insignificance. Their highest vocation would seem to be to make way for it and prepare men for its accomplishment.

Christ is waiting for men to come. He is waiting for all Christian men to become what some are now. His church is weak for that which men alone can give it. This is an age of gigantic enterprises, and it is producing a race of Titans. If they might be brought to throw themselves into the enterprise of Christ, with the same intelligence and power they are giving to the building of cities and railways and navies, they would bring in the golden age.

Will the church be able to win these multitudes of men, the makers of our modern world? Think of the men of wealth, cold, calculating, absorbed in the game of business; think of the men of intellect, the men of gaiety and fashion; think of the multitude of young men and their temptations in this brilliant age; think of the millions of toilers, the sweat and grime of the shops upon them, weary of step and heavy-hearted, plodding on in a hopeless struggle against poverty and disease. I am wondering if the church shall be able to win these men. The strength of a thousand hurricanes is in them. Theirs is the power to sweep the world with fire and sword, or to fill it with the glory of the great King. Through all the centuries the Spirit of God has been struggling for a more and more perfect mastery and realization in the lives and institutions of men. It has been given to the men of America to live at the heart of this upward drift of humanity's life. They are the favored heirs of the past. Surely we may hope for their conversion in increasing numbers as the generations come and go for their own sakes and humanity's.

But it is a difficult undertaking. The men of our times are masterful men; they are the children of this world; they are engrossed with its tasks and their temper is rationalistic. We may be sure that no mere evangelism sent out by a church at ease will accomplish their conversion. They will not be caught in the meshes of a crafty method, for they themselves are the children of craft. Mere evangelism will be less and less interesting to them. Only by a hand to hand struggle, into which the church itself goes out, will this conflict be won, and the children of light must depend not upon "the wisdom of words, but the demonstration of the spirit." Only spiritual weapons, the gospel, prayer and the holy life will be effective, and the real battlefield is not in the church, but down in the seething vat of the world's life itself. The world will never be won by words of wisdom; there must be the spirit of love, it must be made to feel and see in the glowing terms of life itself that there is a life that is unspeakably beautiful and blessed and the soul of all that is worth while. No reasoned apologetic, however logical, will win the victory. Only Christianity itself, in its divine potency, is powerful enough.

The Need To-day.

The church, then, must become a true church, that shall put the world to shame by its purity and its large humanitarianism. It must have been a grand conception of Christianity which men caught who lived in the presence of Jesus and St. Paul. In the Pentecostal period, in its first outburst of love, they even "sold their possessions and goods and parted them to all according as any man had need." They utterly abandoned themselves to that great gospel enterprise, for which their Lord had died and which he had committed to them as a sacred trust. Under the spell of a mighty enthusiasm for humanity they overran Jerusalem and Samaria, and swept around the borders of the Mediterranean like a conflagration. Contending against insurmountable obstacles, they conquered Rome and laid the foundations of the universal empire of Jesus. In that day the gospel rang out like a bugle call in the souls of men.

What the church of to-day needs is a baptism of fire from heaven. It is well to restore words and institutions, but the world is waiting for a restoration of the Christ's spirit and life, that pure and unspeakably beautiful life that loves and toils and groans and sacrifices and suffers and dies for lost humanity; that rejoices in its dark Gethsemanes and Calvaries; a life that counts it its privilege and joy to labor and sacrifice that all men and every man may come to the fullest possible measure of life and happiness.

But there must first be peace. A divided church will not win the men of this age, first, because it will not be able to attain unto the Kingdom which is "righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Spirit." But more, the very spirit of the age is against it. Its centralizing drift, with its constant play of unifying forces, is more and more disinclining men to become sectaries. Feeling instinctively the broad fraternity that lies at the base of human life, they will not receive a church that comes to them in strife and division. Furthermore, they are not interested in the questions in which division grounds itself. Religion only appeals to them in its spiritual values, and these are lost in sectarian strife. Denominationalism is costing the evangelization of the men of America. A divided church can not overcome the tremendous forces of evil in our modern world.

Responsibility of Disciples.

Our responsibility as a people in this crisis is very great. We have come to champion the cause of Christian unity. I wonder if we understand what it means to espouse a great cause like this in such an age and world. What with our frequent narrowness and intolerance and delight in unnecessary sharp words that sting and rankle, I wonder if we understand that in our war upon sectarianism we ourselves are in danger of becoming the narrowest of sects, eaten up with the canker of self-righteousness. What a task is this that we have set for ourselves, to bring into one all the factions of the kingdom, with its extremes of narrow dogmatism and ultra latitudinarianism. There must be in the united Church—and uniting church as well—tolerance for a great diversity of thought and life if it is to claim all that belongs to Christ. May we hope to grow into that deep grasp of essentials, that breadth of charity, yea, that fullness of the Christian spirit and power which must be ours if we are to become a truly great unifying force in Christendom? In the first hundred years of our history we have made rapid progress, but we have far to travel yet before the world will receive us seriously in the character we have assumed. How shall we appeal to others to abandon their cherished traditions to unite with us in the life that is in Christ if we ourselves be not ready to live that life? It is well to create a great Centennial enthusiasm, but our greater need is to "be clothed with power from on high." If I had but one prayer to make for our cause it would not be for numbers or funds; it would be for a larger measure of the spirit of Christ—that a great all-consuming love, love for God and man, love for every lost soul, love even for our enemies, a self-denying, Christ-like love might fill our hearts, a love in whose sacred flame every sinful thought burns to white ashes, a love that will not be satisfied until it has found its Calvary and offered itself there for God and humanity. Oh that we might forsake all our trivialities and conceits and utterly abandon ourselves to the great and precious work of our Christ, lifting up the ensign of a truly apostolic church in the midst of the world! Ah, my brethren, it is not a time for counting victories; it is a time for penitence and prayer.

Meanwhile a thousand providences are urging us on. A hundred years ago the ideal of a united church was met with scorn and ridicule; but its cause has grown until it has overflowed all banks. We are to-day in the midst of a great world-drift in the direction of Christian unity. Brethren, our problem would seem to begin to be not, Shall unity be accomplished? but What part shall we have in its accomplishment? The Church is already well entered upon the first stages of its realization. How long shall be required for its consummation no prophet has foretold, but as sure as God reigns, this movement shall not be stayed till the prayer of our Lord be fulfilled.

When peace is come, then shall the Church be ready to enter upon those conquests for which the ages have been making ready and for which her growing life and the growing consciousness of her mission have been preparing her. A hundred years ago men began to dream of a redeemed humanity, and missionaries began to go out to the heathen nations. God's blessing has attended their work and to-day a line of missionary outposts belts the world. The Bible has been translated into all of the greater languages and an increasing army of volunteers is preparing in university centers to go out to the field. Events seem to be converging these days. Destructive and constructive forces are at work. We are witnessing the decay of the old with its accompanying weakness and depression. Long centuries may be required for this birth period. Centuries of darkness and dread they may be (history teaches us patience) but constructive forces are working and a new life is forming within the Church already big with promise. The depths are moving; unexpected harvests are coming in. Religion is coming to have a rich, even a mystical meaning to men, that kindles their hearts and sends its warm wave into the depths of their souls, thrilling them with a sense of God in their lives and in his world. They are finding in Christ that for which their souls have hungered amid the barren wastes of business and society.

In that era of conquest that is coming on, O, so slowly, we shall look for a new race of men, a nobler race; for if it is true that men make eras it is equally true that eras make men. Cæsar of the Julian house was a scheming politician and played the game of ambition at Rome. He was deeply in debt and counted a man of little honor. But he finally secured command of the armies in Gaul and in that great region of the west, where the empires of Europe were forming, in an atmosphere of national policies and

TO PITTSBURG, 1909.

We are coming, we are coming
On to Pittsburg in the East;
When the autumn leaves are falling,
For the great Centennial feast!

We are coming, we are coming,
From the prairies in the West;
From the mountains in their grandeur,
And the valleys in their rest;

Where the lakes and sun-kissed wavelets,
Lap the Union's northern shore;
Where the torrents swift and mighty
Mingle with the ocean's roar;

From the "Father of the Waters,"
And the states on both his sides;
From the lowlands in their slumber,
Where the broad Ohio glides;

From Kentucky's "blue grass" region,
And from California blest,
Comes a host whose name is legion,
Bringing sunshine from the West.

From the mines of gold and silver,
From the depths of iron ore,
From the timbered realms of lumber,
And Niagara's mighty roar;

From the cotton fields of Texas
And the dugout on the plain.
From beside the waving pampas,
And the forests "up in Maine."

From the cities of New England
With their Puritanic pride.
From Hawaii's lonely island,
Gem of ocean broad and wide.

From the heroes south of "Dixie,"
From the warriors of the North,
From the towns and homes of statehood,
Will the hosts be marching forth.

There'll be "Lizards," and "Gold-Hunters,"
"Suckers," "Hoosiers," and "Hawk-eyes,"
"Gophers," "Pelicans," "Down Easters,"
"Buzzards," "Badgers," and "Buck-eyes;"
"Tuckoes," "Gunflints," "Knickerbockers,"
"Blue Hen Chickens," and "Musk-rats,"
"Sage Hens," "Weasles," and "Craw Thumpers,"
"Pukes," "Jayhawkers," and "Mud-cats."
"Granite boys," and "Wooden Nutmegs,"
"Bears," "Toothpickers," and "Beef Heads."
"Washington," and his "Sand Diggers,"
"Clam Catchers," and "Leather-heads."
"Wolverines," and old "Bay Staters."
"Corn Crackers," "Fly-up-the-Creek,"
"Green Mountain Boys," and brave
"Bug Eaters,"
"Hard Cases" with their "Web Feet."

Some from Thibet, some from India,
Some from teaching the Chinese.
Some from preaching Christ, our Saviour,
To the anxious Congolese.

From the Island of Jamaica,
From the Empire of Japan,
From the fields of earnest labor,
With the heathen Turkoman.

Some from Dane, and rugged Norseman;
Some from England proud and free,
Some from Canada's Dominion,
And the Caribbean Sea.

We are coming! coming! coming!
On to Pittsburg in the east;
When the autumn leaves are falling,
For the great Centennial feast!

PUZZLE SOLVED

Coffee at Bottom of Trouble.

It takes some people a long time to find out that coffee is hurting them.

But when once the fact is clear, most people try to keep away from the thing which is followed by ever increasing detriment to the heart, stomach and nerves.

"Until two years ago I was a heavy coffee drinker," writes an Ill. stockman, "and had been all my life. I am now 56 years old.

"About three years ago I began to have nervous spells and could not sleep nights, was bothered by indigestion, bloating, and gas on stomach affected my heart.

"I spent lots of money doctoring—one doctor told me I had chronic catarrh of the stomach; another that I had heart disease and was liable to die at any time. They all dieted me until I was nearly starved, but I seemed to get worse instead of better.

"Having heard of the good Postum had done for nervous people, I discarded coffee altogether and began to use Postum regularly. I soon got better and now, after nearly two years, I can truthfully say I am sound and well.

"I sleep well at night, do not have the nervous spells and am not bothered with indigestion or palpitation. I weigh 32 pounds more than when I began Postum, and am better every way than I ever was while drinking coffee. I can't say too much in praise of Postum, as I am sure it saved my life." "There's a Reason."

REPORTS FROM THE CONVENTION

The Board of Church Extension and Its Work.

By Fletcher Cowherd, President

In a fifteen-minutes' address Mr. Cowherd, of Kansas City, Mo., president of the Board of Church Extension, gave a most interesting history of the organization, character and scope of this work, which began in 1883 in the hands of a committee of the American Christian Missionary Society in Cincinnati, O. The meager sum of $4,711 was gathered the first four years. When the board at Kansas City received the work as a separate organization in 1888, there was just $10,662 in the fund, and twelve churches had been built. Since that time Mr. Cowherd showed that the fund had grown to the splendid proportions of $679,730.80.

Mr. Cowherd then made personal mention of the qualifications of the different members of the board, including the work of the two corresponding secretaries, Mr. F. M. Rains and Mr. G. W. Muckley. The first board elected in 1888 was a type of all succeeding boards, the policy being that the board should be comprised largely of business men, with sufficient representation from our ministers so as to be at all times fully in touch with the spiritual forces of our work. Three of the original members of the board that were elected in 1888 still remain members of the board, T. P. Haley, T. R. Bryan, the treasurer, and Langston Bacon, the attorney, whose work has practically been an entire donation as attorney.

A good point was made by Mr. Cowherd when he showed that the 1,196 loans widely scattered the business of the board over all the states of the Union, and that the loans made were to mission churches which were considered by insurance companies and loan agencies as experimental loans, and, therefore, unsafe as to security. Yet, he showed that the board had transacted about one million and a half dollars of business among these mission churches with but the slight loss of $563. The astonishing thing is that under conditions generally regarded as hazardous, the loss has been only one twenty-sixth of 1 per cent of the total amount of business done. Mr. Cowherd showed, however, that these loans possessed certain elements of strength not usually considered by the casual observer, such, for instance, as that these loans are made to Christian men who are honest, candid and truthful, who are acting unselfishly in building a church for the good of a community.

Mr. Cowherd then proceeded to say that the board does not rely entirely upon general conditions, but that it seeks information from people who live within the region of where the loans are made, and that all loans are made only after the most careful investigation has been made, and by the most approved business methods.

In concluding Mr. Cowherd showed that there is virtue in the very presence of a church building in a community, and that there goes out from it a power for good. He referred to the thought most beautifully expressed by John Ruskin in speaking of the significance of St. Mark's Cathedral in Venice: "Daily as the white cupolas rose like wreaths of seafoam in the dawn, while the shadowy campanile and frowning palaces were still withdrawn into the night, they rose with the Easter voices of triumph, 'Christ is Risen,' and daily as they looked down upon the tumult of the people, deepening and eddying in the wide square that opened from their feet to the sea, they uttered above them the sentence of warning, 'Christ shall come.' Men met there in its plaza from all countries of the earth for traffic, or for pleasure, but above the crowd swaying forever to and fro in the restlessness of avarice or thirst of delight, was seen perpetually the glory of the temple, attesting to them whether they would hear, or whether they forbear, that there was one treasure which the merchant-men might buy without price and one delight better than all others, in the word and the statutes of God."

The Twentieth Annual Report of the Board of Church Extension

By G. W. Muckley, Corresponding Secretary

The twentieth annual report of the Board of Church Extension of the Christian Church was made by the corresponding secretary, G. W. Muckley, of Kansas City, Mo. Kansas City is the headquarters of this board, which does its work throughout the United States and Canada. Mr. Muckley's report showed that 87 homeless congregations had been housed during the year in loans aggregating $170,325. This is nearly $50,000 more than has been loaned in any previous year. These loans were scattered over 28 states and territories, including Saskatchewan and Ontario.

The receipts for the year, including new money, interest and returns on loans, amounted to $151,601.88. The total in the church extension fund now amounts to $689,730.80, and 1,196 congregations have been assisted to build during the twenty years' work of this board, which began its labors in October, 1888, with the small fund of $10,662, which has grown to the splendid proportions of nearly $700,000. Loans have been made in all but six states of the Union, ten loans having been made in Louisiana, aggregating $17,275, in Canada and in Hawaii.

One of the pleasing features of Church Extension is that the fund is permanent and the money is loaned to be returned in five equal annual installments. The missions borrowing this money pay 4 per cent interest, which covers the expense of administration and the procuring of new money. As an exhibition of the loyalty of the mission churches to the above plan, Mr. Muckley reported that since the beginning 634 churches have paid their loans in full, and $794,728.44 has been returned on loans. Last year 59 churches paid their loans in full.

This Board takes Annuity money. There have been 234 gifts to the Annuity Fund, and the fund now amounts to nearly $225,000. Nearly 150 churches have been built by the annuity fund, which is loaned at 6 per cent to help churches build, and the Annuitant receives the interest during his lifetime. This Annuity feature is very popular, for people can administer upon their own estate, and see their money work while they live.

The Christian Endeavor Societies and the Sunday-schools have created Named Loan Funds which are growing in power. The board now has 27 special named funds, which have been created by churches and individuals. The Centennial aim is to reach 50. A named fund consists of $5,000 to be paid in during a period of ten years, and is kept in the name of the donor.

A Great Statement in Finance.

In conclusion Mr. Muckley showed that the church extension plan had worked admirably; that there had been paid back on loans nearly $800,000 which had been reloaned to help build churches. Added to this the permanent fund of nearly $700,000 which was loaned originally. These two sums amount to nearly a million and a half of dollars, which is the amount the board has handled in loans to nearly 1,200 churches in 43 states and territories, Canada and Hawaii, with the slight loss of but $563, where congregations voluntarily deeded their property to the board for debts against them after they had decided they could not carry on their work. A great financier of a trust company in the East said that this is the greatest record in the history of finance. This record was made by the loyalty of the mission churches in returning the money to the board to go out again. Mr. Muckley then appealed to the churches to help reach the Centennial aim of a million dollars for church extension by the time of the Centennial celebration to be held in Pittsburg, Pa., in October, 1909, which will require the raising of $310,269.20 on the part of the brotherhood to complete the million dollar fund.

National Benevolent Association

By J. H. Mohorter, Cor. Sec.

If fruit-bearing is a proof of character and a recommendation to fellowship, then the National Benevolent Association is entitled to a generous place in the heart of everyone who loves Christ and humanity. In the year that has just come to a close it has borne an abundant harvest of the richest fruit in one of the most Christlike ministries of the Church. It has not been a year of unalloyed joy. The business depression that prevailed in the country greatly increased the demands upon the Association for aid. It was hard to deny love and protection to the orphan child and the helpless, aged disciple of our Lord, as, with plaintive wail and bitter sob, they appealed in the name of the merciful Christ for shelter for their defenseless heads. This necessity often brought pain in the midst of the joys of a great ministry. It is impossible to tabulate the results of such a ministry. All classes and conditions felt the touch of the spirit of Christ through the Association's work in the last year. Sixty-five members of that family of which Christ is head, who had come to years and poverty, were tenderly nurtured and comforted as our brethren in the holiest relationship. One hundred and thirty sisters, borne down under the unequal burden of sorrow and responsiblility of widowhood, found temporary aid in the name of "pure and undefiled religion." Two hundred and seventy-five of the world's poor, sick and dying, give all honor to the Great Physician for the sweet ministry of nursing and healing. Six hundred and forty-one of our own little brothers and sisters, left without the love of home and parents, many of them as friendless as the stray kitten on the street, found the fullest expression possible of parental love, in the name of him who is the Father of the fatherless. In all, over one thousand worthy, sadly needy souls found the sweet relief of the Gospel of the Helping Hand. In all this work Christ and his Church have been magnified.

This great work has been carried on with the greatest economy. Those in charge of it have been mindful of their stewardship. They have sought to accomplish the largest results with that which was entrusted to them. The Masonic Home of Missouri, located in St. Louis, spent, on an average, $192.32 for the care of each of its wards last year. The National Benevolent Association cared for those committed to it for an average of $71.30 for each person, and yet was able to provide generously for all of the needs of its great family. This fine showing is possible, because many of those who are engaged in this good work serve for the love of Christ. And many of the choicest women in the Church are giving the best they have, body, mind, and heart, to this work of mercy.

Then this year has witnessed the accomplishment of at least two of the Association's Centennial aims. It has long been the earnest desire of the leaders of the Church in the great northwest to complete the restoration of apostolic Christianity in their midst by some practical expression of the ministry of apostolic philanthropy. The Association has enjoyed this dream. In January this desire was gratified and the dream realized in the opening, at Eugene, Oregon, of an asylum of rest for the weary pilgrim on his way to the Promised Land. The Christian Orphan's Home of St. Louis has long needed a new and larger building. The Association set out to secure this by the time of the Centennial in 1909. This coveted goal has been reached a year ahead of time. This building, costing $80,000, is nearing completion. It was made possible by the gift of $50,000 by Robert Stockton. This year has been one of encouragement, because of a growing interest in this blessed ministry of mercy as evidenced by an increasing liberality in its support. The year just closed brought the largest offering made in a single year to this work. The total amount given was $122,301.64, an increase of $25,322.14 over the best previous record. The most encouraging thing this year in the financial phase is the marked increase in the number of regular contributors. Many individuals, churches, and Bible schools have formed the habit of entering into fellowship every year with their unfortunate brothers. Another sign of encouragement is the fact that a larger number of Christian homes have welcomed the homeless little ones. The Association prides itself especially upon its work of placing orphan children in Christian families. It has thus placed nearly 2,500 since the beginning of its work. It looks carefully into the character of the homes into which its children go. It makes sure that they are Christian. The magnificent work which the Churches of Christ are doing through their Benevolent Association promises soon to silence the criticism that the church does not care for the poor, to take the credit of first place from the Roman Catholics, and to lead Christian men to seek the fullest and truest exemplification of the brotherhood of man through the Church of Christ.

As Seen From the Dome By F. D. Power

Maryland has just closed its thirty-first annual missionary convention. The first records of organized missionary work among our churches in this territory date back to the spring of 1851, two years after the organization in Cincinnati of the A. C. M. S. "A number of Christian brethren" convened in "the Christian meeting house in the city of Baltimore" on Saturday, May 10, 1851, "for the purpose of consulting on the present condition of the cause of Jesus Christ, and for maturing some more efficient method of advancing the interests of the Redeemer's kingdom in these regions." George Austen was appointed president of the meeting and James G. Henshall secretary. R. L. Coleman, of Virginia, offered prayer. Among those present were C. McDougal, "one of the evangelists of the Pennsylvania Home Mission Society;" J. R. Frame, C. L. Loos and David Mingus, and among "the messengers" of the churches were William McClenahan, F. D. Dungan, John Flaugher, Benjamin Witmer, Daniel Albaugh, David and Jacob Keady, Eli Wolfe, John R. Miller, John Whistler, B. Stockdale, G. E. Tingle and R. G. Campbell, representing nine organized churches with 454 members. They use the good old term "messenger," which is the "angel" of the New Testament. Baltimore reports 170 members; Beaver Creek, 55, and Washington 30. R. L. Coleman and J. R. Frame explained the working of the co-operative systems of Ohio and Tennessee. C. L. Loos, of Somerset, Pa., spoke of the spread of the gospel in his state and of "the determination of the churches not to countenance or support any preacher who did not pursue a mild and conciliatory course towards other religious denominations." A "plan of co-operation" was drawn by Dungan, Frame, Loos and Henshall, was adopted, and the churches asked to make pledges for the work and report at a meeting August 8, at the "Jerusalem meeting house, Harvard county." There was preaching, "able discourses," by Coleman, Loos, McDougal and Frame. "Eleven were induced to obey the Lord," "the brethren were stirred up, and we trust will be induced to prosecute the Christian journey with renewed zeal and delight." The churches met in August. George W. Morling was made president. Pledges to the amount of $563.50 were made. A constitution was adopted for the "Maryland State Christian Co-operation," with usual provisions giving the privilege of membership to any "Christian organization, contributing funds," and "one vote to each congregation." E. E. Orvis, J. R. Frame and A. E. Myers did the preaching at this meeting and eleven obeyed the gospel. The meetings in that day were both missionary and evangelistic.

This is ancient history. Between 1851 and 1878 there is a great gulf fixed. That these churches continued to co-operate and to hold conventions at intervals there can be no doubt. In the Beaver Creek Church book I found a minute about such a meeting at Hyattstown, January 14, 1859, and again in 1860, 1863 and 1865, at Baltimore, but the invaluable record of this period in some old desk or garret is hid away, or has been long ago swept into the flames like Cicero's treatise on Glory, or the original Ms. of that great book which everybody praises and nobody reads—Carlyle's French Revolution, and the man who discovers it will be akin to him who saved Justinian's Code, or who rescued Magna Charta from the tailor's scissors, or snatched the Codex Sinaiticus from the basket of kindling. Still we have the fruit of all this unrecorded service.

Our present organization, the Christian Missionary Society of Maryland, Delaware and District of Columbia, had its origin in Rockville, Md., November, 1878. Finding no organization among the churches there I came to the Capital, in 1875. As soon as seemed convenient I called such a meeting at Rockville and eighteen persons, representing six churches, responded, and $150 was pledged for some general work. The churches reported a membership of 1,635; added during the year, 247; money raised for all purposes, $6,245; for all missions, $180; Sunday-school scholars enrolled, 1,228. We have had thirty years of continued and faithful service, and at our last meeting, just closed, with the Whitney Avenue Memorial Church in this city, we had our best reports and most enthusiastic services. In contrast with our first meeting the figures are: 36 churches enrolled, 5,664 members, 5,303 in Bible schools, 28 preachers, a church property of $356,850, over $6,000 contributed to missions, and $9,000 for ministerial support, and for all purposes $80,000.

The churches sustained in whole or in part ten evangelists the past year, and plans were adopted to continue these workers, to employ a corresponding secretary all his time who shall act as state evangelist, to create a permanent fund for state evangelization, to establish Centennial churches in two different cities this year, to hold state missionary rallies, to make the Centennial aims our own, to group Rockville and Redland, with Geo. E. Dew as pastor, to have all churches, Bible schools and Christian Endeavor societies make state missions a specialty, and to secure the churches against unworthy preachers.

We had a great program. We began with a study of our field—"The Cities," by C. C. Waite, and the rural districts by G. W. Remagen, discussed by Thomas Wood. "The Life of Prayer," Peter Ainslie; "Place of the Ministry in the Church," George A. Miller; "State Missions to the Front," J. E. Stuart, W. G. Oram, J. A. Scott; "The Pulpit—How to Keep it Above Reproach," N. H. Trimble, George E. Dew and Mark Collis; "Forsythe's Yale Lectures on Preaching," L. B. Haskins; "The Future Life in the Preaching of the Apostles," George B. Townsend; "Personality and Message of the Minister," Dr. W. P. Thirkield, president of Howard University; H. A. Denton, A. C. M. S.; George W. Brown, one of our Maryland boys, F. C. M. S.; Mrs. Ida Harrison, C. W. B. M.; H. F. Lutz, N. B. A., and W. R. Warren, Centennial. One of the most helpful of our visitors was Marion Stevenson, whose Bible studies and Sunday-school addresses were received with universal approval. Others sharing in the work of the convention were Walter A. Smith, whose church cared for the comfort of the guests; A. E. Ziegler, Claude C. Jones, J. E. Powell, W. S. Hoye, B. A. Abbott, J. B. Thomas and W. H. Schell. The last two were members of the first organization in November, 1878.

Among the best things was the woman's session. Mrs. M. C. Shinn presided, and Mrs. Ferguson, Mrs. Fiddis, Mrs. Oram, Mrs. Harmon, Mrs. Pirtle, Mrs. Harrison and others of the elect ladies made it all that could be desired. A splendid feature was the singing of Mrs. Powell. Another fine session was that of the Bible school. J. A. Townsend, E. A. Gongwer and others gave great satisfaction. A. G. Bishop presided. Our closing session was given to Christian Endeavor, and to the Centennial address by W. R. Warren. The Christian Endeavorers made an excellent showing. J. M. Pickens was president and Roy E. Dew, A. W. Starrall and others contributed to its interest. Warren got some tithers. Ocean View got the Sunday-school banner. Beaver Creek got the next convention. Our committee on education reported seven young men being trained for the ministry under their auspices, two of their boys appearing on the program, G. B. Townsend and George William Brown. Townsend was appointed our delegate to the Antisaloon League and Miller and Abbott fraternal representatives to the Baptist Association of Maryland. Miller got the big plum, the presidency, for the next year. A new constitution was adopted. Our brethren who have during the year rested from their labors were affectionately remembered. Mrs. Emma Lattimore was added to the state board. The attendance of delegates was every way encouraging. It was a good meeting. These lines are written as the saints gather in New Orleans. The Lord be with them.

Our Budget

—Chicago, November 10-12.

—This is the next place and date on the calendar.

—It will be a meeting of Baptists, Free Baptists and Disciples of Christ.

—Christian union, as especially affecting these bodies, will be considered.

—The place will be the Memorial Church of Christ. Particulars are given in another column.

—We are advised that the program will be carried out as advertised, except A. W. Fortune will take Dr. Willett's place on the first topic. Brother Willett requested to be left off, as his church is the host of the congress.

—We print this week an address on the same general theme, which was delivered by the Baptist fraternal delegate, Dr. Case, at the New Orleans convention.

—We understand that the reason why Dr. W. E. Norton, who was to speak for the Canadian Baptists at New Orleans, did not appear is, that the four Baptist missionary conventions of Canada have decided to consolidate. This decision was very recently reached, and unexpectedly the time for their first convention was set for a date which made it impossible for the secretaries to get ready for their approaching convention and go to New Orleans.

—We regret to announce a disastrous fire at the Southern Christian Institute, whose work we pictured in our columns some weeks ago. We call attention to Brother Smith's statement on another page.

—We hope to publish in our next issue some account of our work in Colorado, where the best convention ever held in the state has just concluded.

—Anson McDonald has been evangelizing in Kentucky for two years, but will take regular work the first of the year, though we are not informed where.

—Cooksey and Miller are in a meeting at Sedgwick, Kan., where E. J. Manley is pastor. They are open for correspondence for meetings in January and February.

—B. F. Cato attributes the fine success in the Sunday-school work at New Albany, Ind., largely to the lectures by Marion Stevenson more than two years ago.

—The Junior Endeavorers of the East Church, Toledo, Ohio, have just rendered an excellent program on "Missions in India." F. M. Pitman is the minister.

—James Cage reports that C. F. Trimble and wife, of Ardmore, Okla., are in the field again as evangelists. Brother Cage speaks very highly of their abilities for this work.

—S. W. Jackson says of C. E. Daugherty, who has just been located with the church at Castle Rock, Wash., that he is an excellent pastor and an able minister of the Word.

—The Hancock Street Church of Christ at Everett, Mass., is making preparations for a meeting in November under the leadership of R. W. Stevenson, of Toronto, Canada.

—Evangelist H. Gordon Bennett, who recently held two good meetings at Sciota and St. Augustine, Ill., is to lead the church at La Harpe, Ill., in a great meeting in November.

—E. J. Willis has removed from Carlyle, Ky., and has entered upon his regular ministry at Kirksville, Mo. He was greeted with splendid audiences and ten additions to the church.

—We have received from Charles C. Smith, clerk of the board of the church at Marva, Ill., commendations of W. H. Applegate and his wife, who are capable and faithful workers.

—Victor L. Goodrich has been in a meeting near Grand Junction, Colo., with a country band of Disciples. They had to build a tabernacle. The prospects were bright for a good meeting.

—A note from E. C. Mannan tells us that C. W. Cauble, the new minister of the Sixth Church, Indianapolis, Ind., has demonstrated his ability in leading the people, and is well liked by all. This is just what we expected.

—F. W. Emerson, pastor of the Christian church at Freeport, Ill., is to close his work there November 8, to take charge of our church at Redlands, Cal., on November 22. Brother Emerson has accomplished much good at Freeport.

—All departments of the work seem to be progressing satisfactorily at Warrensburg, Mo., where George B. Stewart is the minister. A meeting is to be held late in November, led by Geo. L. Snively and C. H. Altheide.

—It was a thoughtful act on the part of members of the church at Winslow, Ind., to visit the home of P. C. Abbott that the Lord's supper might be partaken of by Sister Abbott, whose serious illness prevented her getting out.

—The Christian Endeavorers of the Memorial Church at Rock Island, Ill., had a "Taft and Bryan Social," which seems to have been a great success. A part of the program was a debate by six speakers, with a vote by all present.

—Ellis Purlee and his church at Coffeyville, Kan., are making great preparations for a meeting to begin Nov. 8, under the leadership of W. E. Harlow, who will be assisted in the music by A. O. Kuhn, and Miss Helen Hite.

—The church at Colfax, Ill., where Norman H. Robertson ministers, will hold a revival beginning about the middle of this month. The church observed the first anniversary of the dedication of its new building last Lord's day. All departments prosper.

—J. H. Smart and wife, of Decatur, Ill., visited St. Louis on Saturday last, and were the guests of the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist during their short stay. Brother Smart lives in Decatur, but preaches on every Lord's day for churches within easy reach of that city.

—J. H. Jones, of Bolivar, Mo., is to spend half of his time in the field as State and District Evangelist. Brother Jones has done a good work at Bolivar, and we anticipate much good results from his broader effort. He has just been in a meeting at Halfway.

—The men's club of the Christian church at Warren, Ohio, is taking a leading part in the local option campaign now being waged in that county. Three hundred and fifty men were in attendance at the opening meeting of the campaign, held in the Central church, of which J. E. Lynn is pastor.

—The churches at Milestone, Sask., Canada, united in a farewell service for Brother and Sister A. R. Adams. Resolutions commending them as efficient and untiring workers, and expressing the wish that they may again be permitted to labor in Western Canada were unanimously adopted.

—Mrs. A. P. Frost received a great surprise on her seventieth birthday, which was celebrated at her home at Lakeside, Winona, Minn. She was remembered by many old and new friends. Mr. and Mrs. Paul Watkins, her nephew and niece, gave her a beautiful reception at their home on the evening of Oct. 13.

—B. F. Cato, the pastor at New Albany, Ind., writes us that the revival which was to have been held in the Central Church this month has beeen postponed by the mutual agreement of the congregation and the evangelist, S. M. Martin, on account of the political campaign and the preparations for holidays.

—We are glad to welcome R. M. Messick back again to Missouri. He is at Chillicothe, where he first began to preach the gospel thirty-six years ago. It is his purpose to visit all the churches in the state among which he labored in years gone by. He expects to be in Missouri about a year, and his address will be at Chillicothe.

—The little band of brethren at Starke, Fla., are appealing for some help to enable them to erect a building. Any one interested may send to W. H. Taylor, or the Bank of Bradford County, Starke, Fla. The church, it appears, was organized as early as 1874, and has had many vicissitudes. In 1907 R. A. White reorganized, and there are now about 35 members. Brother Taylor writes that he has a Bible school of 70 enrolled, and that a preacher has been employed for part time.

—There are two training classes doing good work at Flora, Ind., where F. L. Davis is the minister. It is hoped to have an attendance of 100 in one of these classes. At the recent rally day in the school, the adult class was the largest, a rare thing in most schools. While the goal in attendance was not reached, that in collections was almost half above the aim.

—The Main Street Christian Church, of Mason City, Ia., has just observed its seventeenth anniversary. Most gratifying reports were presented. G. E. Roberts has been the minister for one year, and during this period more than $6,000 was raised for all purposes, a thousand of this going to missions. There were 159 additions, 105 of which were by confession and baptism. The future prospects of the congregation are exceedingly bright. The city, with a population of about 13,000, is a growing one. The church has a task before it that ought to demand its best efforts, and we are sure it will meet the demand.

—Crayton Brooks informs us that William L. Fisher, a graduate of Bethany and Yale, is home from Oxford, England, and is visiting his mother at Frankford, Mo. He was the predecessor of Brother Brooks at New Castle, Pa., and he considers him the finest pastor he has ever known. Such a man ought to be employed at once by one of our strong churches.

—The re-opening and dedication services of the Christian Church at Mt. Healthy, O., occurred October 25. F. M. Rains was the morning speaker, Justin N. Green spoke in the afternoon, and A. McLean at the evening service. Earle P. Kempher is the minister. The enlargement and remodeling cost $6,500, and this gives the congregation an equipment suitable to modern church and Sunday-school work.

—The dedication of the new South Street Church of Christ, Columbus, Ohio, was more than merely a success. It was eminently successful. H. Newton Miller, state secretary, gave two fine talks, and during the day took subscriptions amounting to about $2,940, which is more than enough to cover the indebtedness resting on the building. The congregation now looks forward to much good, aggressive work.

—The financial year of the church at Atlanta, Ill., closed Oct. 15. There have been 51 additions to the church, 47 of them by confession and baptism. All bills were paid and there is a comfortable balance in hand. The missionary offerings were: Foreign, $75; Church Extension, $33; Illinois Missions, $60; Education, $25; Anti-Saloon League, $98. The present membership is 268. Ralph V. Callaway is the minister.

—J. M. Van Horn, of Toronto, Canada, an old-time friend and co-laborer of the Editor of the Christian-Evangelist, in "merry old England," writes that in spite of the criticisms against the Christian-Evangelist he is still a reader of it, and that "the habit has become so fixed" that he hardly thinks it will be broken. "I have been much pleased," he says, "with the spirit and tone of the paper." It is the approval of such men as Brother Van Horn that gives us encouragement in the midst of opposition.

—The brotherhood everywhere will rejoice in knowing that the date has been fixed for the dedication of our church in East Orange, N. J. Z. T. Sweeney is to be master of ceremonies, while M. L. Bates, of Hiram College, and a former pastor of the church, will also speak. It is to be hoped that R. P. Shepherd, of California, the only other pastor besides L. N. D. Wells, who is the present minister, responsible for the building enterprise, will be present. The church, we understand, will seat comfortably about 1,200 people.

—The church at Gibson City, Ill., is one of the most flourishing congregations in Central Illinois. Following a great revival meeting in the summer of 1907, the membership has had a large increase, and there has also been a great uplift in consecration and enthusiasm. The membership now numbers over 400. The church boasts the largest men's Bible class in Illinois, the enrollment being about 150. The society owns a good church building and parsonage and has no indebtedness. We understand that the church at Gibson is looking for a pastor, and we know of no more promising field for the right man.

—Ray G. Manley, son of C. E. Manley, pastor of the First Christian Church at Scranton, Pa., has just been ordained for the ministry. He is to go to Napes for the purpose of studying the language, habits and customs of the foreign element, as it is amongst this class he expects to devote his life ministry. Among those taking part in the ordination were C. A. Frick, George Youll, Richard Bagby, E. E. Cowperthwaite, George Ziegler and the young man's father. It was an occasion of benediction to all present. Young Brother Manley is, we hear, a man of marked ability and it is expected that he will accomplish much good.

—October 13 was the twenty-ninth anniversary of the church at Galena, Kan., where the congregation was never more harmonious and hopeful than now. The church was organized by W. H. South, and for several years he was its efficient pastor, and is still a member of the organization. R. H. Love, the present minister, calls him one of God's noblemen. Three years ago the church began observing its anniversary by roll call and a rally. It was a real feast of good things this year. Brother Love was kind enough to speak in highly complimentary terms of the Kansas number of The Christian-Evangelist.

—Edward E. Cowperthwaite, with November, closes his work as missionary pastor, under the auspices of the A. C. M. S., with the congregation at Wilkesbarre, Pa. He has seen this work grow from one to its present membership of 120. With a great loss by removals it has been a work in which there have been many heartaches, but, also, much joy. A new man will be ready to take up the building enterprise. Brother Cowperthwaite believes that the plea is rooted, and in a few years more we will have a fine church home, and a large influential congregation. His reason for withdrawing is that he must have rest and a change.

—The thirty-second annual convention of the Young Men's Christian Association of Missouri will convene at St. Joseph, November 19-22, 1908. A number of prominent speakers have been engaged, and the program prepared is inviting. There are now fifty-nine of these Associations in Missouri, employing seventy-two paid officers and owning property valued at over a million dollars. The membership is nearly 12,000. The annual aggregate expense of all these Associations is over $140,000. Their work is vastly important, and the men and boys of Missouri should receive the encouragement and co-operation of the Christian people of the State.

—The annex of the new building of the Cecil Street Church, Toronto, Canada, has been dedicated. The addition which was built during the summer is of brick, and provides a suite of beautiful parlors, which will be greatly appreciated, as they are much needed. They can all be thrown into one room so as to be serviceable for lectures and entertainments, while they add much to the facilities for Sunday-school work. One hundred dollars in excess of the amount needed was raised for the expenses. The work here under J. M. Van Horn goes on well, though the field is a very difficult one for making converts, owing to the indifference of the people.

—F. P. Arthur, corresponding secretary of Michigan, writes that a day of blessing marked his visit to the church at St. Louis, Mich. It was rally day in reality, he says, and all departments of the church made a healthy showing. Bills were paid and the business situation vastly improved. The joy of the day was especially centered in the baptism of nine candidates in the river in the afternoon. Isaac Bussing, the pastor, and his wife, and earnest helpers deserve much credit, says Brother Arthur, for this good showing, which points to the value of plan and business execution. The outlook for the future seems to be very bright. Since the rally day there have been twelve added to the fellowship.

—Many of our readers will be pleased to learn that Miss Jennie Shannon, of Warrensburg, Mo., daughter of R. D. Shannon, and granddaughter of Moses E. Lard, on the one side, and Pres. James Shannon on the other, was married to Mr. J. D. Dunlop, of Columbia, Mo., at the residence of her sister, Mrs. Fontaine Meriwether, in Sedalia, Mo., on the evening of October 28, A. W. Kokendoffer, pastor of the Sedalia church, officiating. The Editor of this paper, having personal acquaintance with Miss Shannon and her family, takes pleasure in extending his congratulations to the happy pair and to all concerned, and to express our best wishes for their future happiness and usefulness.

—A series of sermons is being delivered in the church at Fitzgerald, Ga., by Pastor E. Everett Hollingworth on great questions from the Bible, as follows: "The Fugitive—Where Art Thou?" "The Man Who Was Rich and Didn't Know It —What is That in Thy Hand?" "The Traveler—Whither Goest Thou?" "The Problem of To-day—What Is A Man Profited If He Gain The Whole World And Lose His Life?" "The Seeker—Whom Seekest Thou?" "The Inquisitive Man —What Is That To Thee?" "The Startled Multitude—What Shall We Do?" "The Universal Question—If a Man Die, Shall He Live Again?" "The Freedmen —Who Are They, And Whence Came They?" "The series began Oct. 4 and will close Nov. 29.

—Work in some Southern fields is very discouraging. H. S. Davenport, of Fairfield, N. C., in response to our inquiry, writes as follows: "Hyde county has been swept by floods for the last three years, and everything is entirely at a standstill. I am preaching for four weak churches and five mission points. I get no salary, because the brethren are not able to pay. The whole field will not be able to pay $100 this year. The storm so interfered with the meetings that very little has been done, but I am able to report fourteen accessions in my field for the year. We have been able to raise nothing for missions. Some of the brethren are preparing to leave for other places, where they can get work to enable them to support their families. Our roads are impassable."

—A. E. Dubber, who has been doing good work in the evangelistic field, left this the middle of September upon the urgent call of the church at Greeley, Colo. He has found what seems to be a needy field, and one full of promise. There is a membership of 250, with a determination to do a great work for God. They own a fine lot and expect to build a good house. Brother Dubber seems delighted with the people. His understanding with them is that he will be able to hold some meetings during the year, and he will be glad to hear from churches who may wish his services. He is to lead a meeting for the Greeley church in November, and will be assisted by Professor Theodore Fitz, who sang for him in Texas last summer, and is in charge of the music at the State Normal at Greeley, and choir director for the church. His work in both capacities is giving great satisfaction.

OUR FIRST ANNUITANT.

The first Annuity bond issued by the Foreign Christian Missionary Society was in favor of Lazarus Ehman, dated Nov. 27th, 1897, and the amount he donated was $2,000. That has been eleven years ago. How the years do fly!

Altogether, he has made nine gifts aggregating $6,734.36, as follows:

Nov. 27, 1897	$2,000.00
June 2, 1899	500.00
July 28, 1899	600.00
Sept. 9, 1899	1,000.00
Mar. 20, 1902	549.00
Mar. 26, 1902	697.00
July 6, 1903	275.00
Nov. 24, 1902	911.12
Dec. 4, 1905	202.24
Total	$6,734.36

Brother Ehman shows his faith and cordial approval of the Annuity Plan by making nine different gifts, covering the period of Nov. 27th, 1897, to Dec. 4th, 1905. During the eleven years, or since his first gift was made, he has received a check every six months, promptly on time.

During the eleven years he has had no risk, no suspense, no expense, no doubt, no trouble, no taxes, no repairs. The money is yielding interest every day and will continue to do so until the Lord calls him home.

He rejoices to see his money do the Lord's work, while he yet enjoys an income from it.

To those who are fifty years of age, or older, the Annuity Plan is an ideal investment as a mere investment, to say nothing of the good the money does. Its advantages may be tabulated as follows:

1. A perfect security for your savings.
2. It is favored by the most conservative investors.
3. It is universally popular with those who have tried it. To this there is not a single exception.
4. It is free from speculation.
5. It is unaffected by hard times and market conditions.
6. Its advantages are available for those of large or small amounts.
7. There is never any cause for uncertainty or worry.

We will be pleased to have you consider a Centennial Annuity gift for Foreign Missions.

Watch this space next week!

—Work at Syracuse, N. Y., moves along with promise.

—The church at Walla Walla, Wash., began a meeting with John L. Brandt and his assistants, November 1.

—R. M. Messick, of Salem, Ore., preached at Salt Lake City recently for Dr. Buxton, en route for a visit to his old pastorates in Missouri.

—We hope to publish in our next issue a special account of some of the work in Colorado, where the Silver Jubilee convention has just been held.

—There was a great Bible school rally at the Church of Christ, Pompey, N. Y., last Lord's day. This church is in a contest with the school at Tully, N. Y.

—J. L. Brandt spent the last week of October at Drake University, where he held six lectures and preached two sermons to large and interesting congregations.

—J. E. Sturgis, of Butler, Ind., who is singing for James T. Lawson, pastor at Madison, Ind., in a splendid meeting, has December open owing to that date being cancelled.

—The new church at Flatbush, N. Y., had five additions recently, and a payment of $500 was made on the debt. As indicating growth, the church extension apportionment was doubled.

—Churches in the neighborhood of St. Louis might book a concert date with the Netz Sisters while they are in this section. They may be addressed at Benton, Ill., whither they went for a meeting following the national convention.

—Following the convention at New Orleans, T. Ellmore Lucey, who was a visitor to The Christian-Evangelist office on his way to the convention, filled a number of lyceum dates in the South. Brother Lucey is a musician and chalk talker.

—W. W. Burks, of Nevada, Mo., was a pleasant visitor to The Christian-Evangelist office recently while in St. Louis. Brother Burks is one of our live young preachers, with an ambition to make himself more useful.

—J. V. Coombs and T. Ellmore Lucey began a meeting with the church at Danville, Ind., last Lord's day. E. E. Moorman is the energetic young minister at this place. At the conclusion of the meeting he is to enter upon new work with the Englewood church at Indianapolis.

—F. W. Norton has been spending several weeks in Illinois in the interest of the Wharton Memorial Home, and reports splendid missionary interest. We hope to publish a statement concerning this most worthy work, and a needed institution. Small or large gifts are desired to make it a success.

—F. E. Trucksess, song evangelist, of Brownsburg, Ind., is to assist L. E. Murray in a meeting at Middletown, Ind., beginning November 8. Two weeks later he will be with I. N. Grisso in a three or four weeks' meeting at Waveland, Ind. Brother Trucksess has fine recommendations as to his ability in his chosen field of work.

—The church to which G. B. VanArsdall ministers at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, shoulders its responsibilities in such a way that its broadness of vision is manifested. Its board of officers recently decided that this church ought to assist in establishing the Wharton Memorial Home for the children of missionaries, and to do so by sending three annual offerings.

—The Christian Church in Salem, Ohio, forges to the front. Elaborate plans are being prepared for the fiftieth anniversary next March. Extensive improvements on the church property are already under way, and M. J. Grable, the former successful pastor of the congregation, is to help Brother Reynolds, the present minister, in a month's revival effort during November.

—We regret to learn that R. A. McCorkle has found it necessary, because of continued illness, to return to America for a few months of medical treatment. It is with great regret he leaves the work at Osaka, Japan, but comes with the expectation of being able to resume his work within a year at the most. He sailed on the Empress of China October 5, and can be addressed, we believe, at 734 Bowery street, Akron, Ohio. In asking us to change the address of The Christian-Evangelist, he says: "I can't get along without it."

—T. M. Westrup makes a strong plea in "La Via de Paz," a little paper put out by our Mexican mission, for a new version of the Bible in Spanish. The best Spanish version, he says, is Valer's, which, although revised and corrected several times in the four hundred years of its existence, still needs a thorough overhauling. Spanish religious literature, it appears, is very limited, and Brother Westrup thinks that if we make the effort now to render into the language of the Hispanola-American our Biblical treasures, the time is not far away when the demand for them will be large indeed. It may be that some lover of Mexican missions will make it possible for many valuable works to be put in book form for boys and girls and men and women of the awakening republic on the south of us.

—The work at New Albany, Ind., proceeds in fine style under B. F. Cato. At the recent Bible school rally there were 745 present, although the high mark of 700 had been set. This is 30 per cent over the enrollment, and 336 per cent more than the attendance last year. There were 108 men in the pastor's class and 164 women in the "Serve class." This puts the Central Christian Church school easily ahead of all others in the town. Brother Cato will have served this congregation, on January 1, five years, and all this time the old Central has never failed in anything she has undertaken.

—We regret we had not space at command at the time we received Bro. M. M. Goode's appeal on behalf of Missouri day. As he points out, in number of members and churches, Missouri leads all the states, and ought to lead in the annual offering for state missions. Only one in every five of the population of the state is a member of any church, and only one in every 205 is identified with the Disciples of Christ. These facts alone ought to stir up our churches to a greater interest in evangelizing within the borders of imperial Missouri. Calls for assistance were never more numerous.

—J. Fred Jones, state secretary of the Illinois Christian Missionary Society, spent two days in Eureka last week. On Wednesday evening he spoke on "Illinois Missions" in the Christian church, with a view of enlisting the Eureka church in becoming a living link in the state society. Thursday afternoon, in the college chapel, to the delight of the entire student body and many friends, he told the story of his recent trip to New Orleans. Brother Jones was at his best in both addresses. He is popular in Eureka, especially with the students of Eureka College, who are always delighted with his wit and wisdom. Brother Jones has been secretary of the Illinois Christian Missionary Society for thirteen years, and is doing, we hear, the best work of his entire service.

—We are glad to find such a ready response on the part of our friends in sending us subscribers on our special three months plan as advertised in our columns. The rate of 25 cents, of course, does not begin to pay the cost of sending the paper for that period. Our purpose is to try to get a large number of people who are not reading religious papers interested in the work that our great brotherhood is doing outside of any particular local church, and, at the same time, seek to create a liking for religious literature. Ministers everywhere testify that those who are the most faithful workers in their churches are the people who read regularly a good religious paper. Never in all our history can so much good be accomplished in the Master's work by our religious journals as the year we are now entering upon leading to the Centennial. The more readers the Christian-Evangelist can have during this year, the wider service can it accomplish for the cause, and the better, in every way, will be the return to every missionary organization and every local church. We, therefore, beg our friends to continue to send in lists of subscribers on the basis of this offer. We hope that the merits of the paper will be such that these temporary readers will continue with us, and participate in our campaign that has in view the advancement of every Centennial aim.

—The following paragraph, in a letter from Joseph Todd who goes from New York to Bloomington, Ind., as previously announced, contains some news that will be interesting to our readers:

"We left New York September 29. Newell L. Simms, formerly of Missouri, is there taking advantage of Union Seminary, Columbia and New York. Brother Harp becomes pastor at 119th Street, to succeed Dr. J. P. Lichtenberger, who is related to Columbia University as a lecturer and also with the New York School of Philanthropy. Brother Willis, of 169th Street, writes me that he is improving and hopes to preach again in the near future. Dr. Herbert Martin has returned from Europe and resumes his work with the Sterling Place Church, Brooklyn. He will have associated with him this year Brother Jolly, from California. Rounds, at the Flatbush Church, is pushing things in his energetic way, and the work gives promise of its largest results. Wells, at East Orange, is heroically pushing the completion of their new church building. They dedicate soon. It will be our first permanent church home in New Jersey. Keevil, at Greenpoint, Brooklyn, is bravely attempting to meet the religious needs of the unchurched thousands about him. Would that he could be furnished with the money necessary to enter this field in a more comprehensive manner. The First Church, on 56th street, expects to get a pastor soon.

"I have never known a church to love a pastor as this church at Bloomington, Ind., loved T. J. Clark. He has done a great work here and left the church united and consecrated. It is a blessing to follow such a man. The work opens with enthusiasm. This is a great church. Amzi Atwater, A. B. Philputt, Brother Ross, Brother Van Cleave and T. J. Clark are responsible for its training and growth. They have a roll membership of over 1,300, and possibly an actual membership of 1,000. Indiana State University is three blocks up the street and enrolls over 2,000 students in all departments during the year. Of this number over 300 come from Christian church homes. There is no better place in our whole nation for a Bible chair than here. Fifty thousand dollars invested here would yield a tremendous return. We believe some one will sometime enter this door of opportunity."

The Congress of Baptists, Free Baptists and Disciples.

The secretary of the forthcoming joint congress of Baptists, Free Baptists and Disciples sends us this final word in regard to the sessions of the congress. The first session will be held in the Memorial Church of Christ, Oakwood boulevard and Cottage Grove avenue, Chicago, Tuesday, November 10, at 2:30 p. m. Take a Cottage Grove avenue car to Oakwood boulevard and walk one block west to Oakwood, where the church is located. There will be afternoon and evening sessions Tuesday and Wednesday, and a morning and afternoon session Thursday, with probably a social function Thursday evening. The secretary has received numerous letters regarding the congress, and all are commendatory of the plans for the congress, and express the uniform conviction that such a fraternal discussion of our common problems can not but produce closer relations of the three bodies.

Two Million Dollars for Missions, Benevolence and Education.

Here is a goal worthy of a great people! And here is a great people equal to the goal! For the year ending September 30, 1908, the amount was over $1,500,000. There are almost that many members of our churches. Even if all over the million are opposed to societies, and half of the million are incurably indifferent, the true and loyal will have to increase their gifts by an average of only one dollar each for all general interests and the whole Centennial year to realize the aim! Of course it will be done!

But what will be your share in the victory? Some are quietly and earnestly deciding to give hundreds and thousands. They will thus greatly advance the average. There ought to be a generous pride in every heart to be one of those who are raising the average, and not one of those who are dragging it down.

The first appeal of the new missionary year is before us. The offerings for state missions are being made. Men are seizing the chance to worthily blend state pride and gospel zeal. Make the first Centennial offering a worthy pacemaker for the year!

W. R. Warren, Centennial Sec.

Children's Day for Home Missions.

Supplies, programs and missionary blanks have been sent out to nearly every school in the brotherhood, and active preparation for the celebration of this great day has been going forward with encouraging signs. If we are to judge by the messages that reach us from state superintendents and Sunday-school workers all over the country, and from orders which have come in voluntarily, this is to be the greatest celebration that the Sunday-school has ever held.

During the last few weeks the following schools have received United States flags in appreciation of their sending the largest offering in their state:

Anniston, Ala.; Hot Springs, Ark.; Berkeley, N. Cal.; Rocky Ford, Colo.; Jacksonville (First), Fla.; Valdosta (First), Ga.; Payette, Idaho; Des Moines (University Place), Ia.; Wichita (Central), Kan.; New Orleans (Soniat Ave.), La.; Lubec, Me.; Baltimore (Second), Md.; Worcester (Highland), Mass.; Owosso, Mich.; Minneapolis (Grand Avenue), Minn.; Deer Lodge, Mont.; Platte Valley, Neb.; Winston-Salem, N. C.; Kingfisher, Okla.; Eugene (First), Ore.; Charleston (Calhoun Street), S. C.; South Elrod, S. D.; Memphis (Linden), Tenn.; San Antonio (Central), Tex.; Richmond (Third), Va.; Medical Lake, E. Wash.; Spokane (Dean Avenue), W. Wash.; Monroe (Union), Wis.

The following list of schools have received, in addition to the United States flag, a handsome Christian Conquest flag, their offerings exceeding $100:

San Diego, S. Cal.; Washington (Ninth Street), D. C.; Chicago (Englewood), Ill.; Indianapolis (Central), Ind.; Lexington (Broadway), Ky.; Kansas City (First), Mo.; Buffalo (Jefferson Avenue), N. Y.; Bellaire, Ohio; Philadelphia (Third), E. Pa.; New Castle, W. Pa.; Wheeling (First), W. Va.

The same offer is made this year by the Home Society. The leading Sunday-school in each state will receive a United States flag, and if the offering is over $100 they will receive a Christian Conquest flag as well as the Federal flag.

The buttons of the American Legion of the Cross will be awarded again this year as last, a beautiful gold and enameled button being given to every contributor of $5, and the same button in dull metal to every contributor of $1.

We are hoping that every school in the brotherhood will line up for home missions this year. If it is impossible to observe the day formally, a few home missionary songs should be sung and prayer offered for the home missionary work, and the offering of that day devoted to the cause if possible.

Information and supplies may be had by addressing George B. Ranshaw, Sunday-School Superintendent American Christian Missionary Society, Y. M. C. A. Bldg., Cincinnati, Ohio.

Florida State Convention.

The Florida state convention will be held at Tampa, November 12-15. The last day of the convention will be sermon day. The business will be done on Thursday, November 12. State C. W. B. M. day, November 13, general societies' day; and Saturday, Florida state missionary day. It is hoped that a number of ministers will remain over Lord's day and occupy offered pulpits. Come at the beginning and remain till the close. We expect one of our best conventions. Write R. A. White, 1603 Florida avenue, that you are coming.

T. A. Cox, Corresponding Secretary.

KANSAS JUBILEE CONVENTION

This convention, which marks the close of fifty years of organized mission work in Kansas, and to which the brotherhood has been looking for some years, has come and gone, and the goodbys have been spoken. Great has this convention been in its fellowship, in its reports, in its enthusiasm, in its attainments and in its plan and outlook toward the future. Yet it seemed that Æolus conspired with old Neptune in a most angry mood to defeat the good will of the people, for a more inclement spell of weather a convention never encountered, it seems to me. For two days previous to the opening day of the convention a general downpour of rain had prevailed over a large portion of the state, and on the opening evening a blinding snowstorm set in continuing for two days without intermission, followed by more rain. This storm doubtless kept hundreds away from Topeka. Still nearly 500 out-of-town delegates were present, while the local attendance swelled some of the audiences to over two thousand.

W. E. M. Hackleman, of Indianapolis, led the music, assisted by other song leaders at various times. The music was of the highest order.

The Christian Woman's Board of Missions opened the convention October 22. This organization sustained its former high standard of utility and efficiency by reporting the best year in its history in the state. A net gain of 500 in membership has been made. Mrs. S. L. Wilson is the state president and continues another year. She is a rare spirit among our sisters in Kansas where the quality of all is of the highest type. C. C. Smith, the inimitable, who has been thought by the uninitiated, on account of his proximity to the negro work, to be one of them, delivered an address on the first evening and added greatly to the usefulness of the meetings during the following day. Mrs. Ida W. Harrison, of Lexington, Ky., gave two inspiring and instructive addresses during this period. The report of the Secretary, Miss A. Rosalea Pendleton, showed an unprecedented gain in receipts and in general interests and revealed a large amount of work accomplished. Mrs. Laura J. Ela, as Centennial Secretary, and Miss Bertha Moody, as state organizer, did most commendable work in their respective fields. Perhaps the highest point in this excellent period of the convention was reached when W. G. Menzies, of Rath, India, whom the Auxiliary at Hutchinson is supporting, made his address on India. It was a masterly presentation of the pitiful condition of that section of that dark land, and appeal to the brethren of America to come to the rescue. Brother Menzies had a map of a section of India, showing the district in which he and Sister Menzies labored; being a scope of country about 34 miles square, containing one city, Rath, of 14,000, with a total population of 300,000, and only two missionaries. Sister Menzies spoke twice on conditions in India, and showed the need of work among the women and children of that country. Sister Menzies is, and has been for some years, the living link of the Juniors of Kansas. An address delivered by Mrs. I. A. Wilson, of Valley Falls, Kansas, during the Junior period is worthy of special mention for its clearness and force. Also the excellent work of Miss Louise M. Bagley, of Topeka, State Superintendent of the Junior work, is to be highly commended.

In the Bible School session, with I. W. Gill, who continues another year State President, a program of unusual merit was rendered. The platform of the Auditorium was filled with teacher training graduates from various parts of the state. J. H. Engle, State Secretary of the Kansas Sunday-School Association, delivered a forcible and practical address in which he said that there were more teacher training classes in the Christian Church in Kansas than in all other churches combined, and there were more graduates in the Christian Church at the present time than were ever enrolled in the State S. S. Association at one time before. He paid a high compliment to Myron C. Settle, whom he referred to as "our" brother Settle. Following this address Herbert H. Moninger, of teacher training fame, spoke on "What of the future?" At the close pledges were taken for advanced classes in teacher training and about 3,000 pupils were promised. Space forbids more than mention of the excellent addresses of Geo. O. Foster, R. C. Harding, Clifton E. Rash, and the speech of an invited guest, W. A. Elliott, President of the State S. S. Association, on "The To-morrow of Childhood."

During one evening O. L. Smith, of El Reno, Okla., presented the claims of the new university of that growing state, President W. P. Aylesworth showed us Cotner's claims upon Kansas, and President E. V. Zollars reinforced Brother Smith's speech by presenting a plan by which Kansas might have a share in Oklahoma University by electing a part of the Board of Trustees, changing the charter and name to conform with this inter-state arrangement, and by lending her influence in building up this institution. A similar proposition had been made by President Aylesworth and later in the convention Chancellor Strong, of the State University, presented a plea in behalf of a Bible Chair Annex to the University in harmony with the report of a committee appointed at the last session of the Ministerial institute concerning this question. So Kansas had more educational institutions than she knew what to do with as suitors for her fair hand, yet like a modest maiden who believes the future has much in store for her, she smilingly rejected all offers. The whole matter was referred to a committee of seven brethren with full power to act, which reported that while we favored our own colleges, and desired that our people should patronize them in preference to any other, yet it was deemed unwise to enter into official relations with any, or with the proposition to establish a Bible Annex at the State University.

Many of the pulpits in the various churches in the city were filled by our brethren on Sunday morning, while the highest plane of spirituality was reached at the union communion service in the Auditorium at three o'clock in the afternoon, when over two thousand persons tenderly and reverently remembered their Redeemer and Lord. It reminded me of our great communions during our national gatherings; indeed, it was declared that the number present on this occasion exceeded the attendance at the service in New Orleans. J. B. Briney, so well known and highly esteemed among us, preached an able sermon on the significance of the Resurrection. At night J. H. O. Smith, of Oklahoma, thrilled all hearts on the great theme, "Our Plea."

The church "Pioneer Period" was perhaps the greatest session of this historic convention. The program was appropriately arranged. The speeches were retrospective as well as prospective. They dealt with early times and peoples. Nearly all the speakers were pioneers in Kansas. The platform was filled with Fathers and Mothers in Israel. They sang one of the old-time songs, in the old-time way, without the organ. John Bain spoke on "The Day of Small Things," John Bull on "Difficulties Overcome," Mrs. Z. T. Hastings, daughter of Pardee Butler, spoke on "My Father," Miss Inez Butler, granddaughter of Pardee Butler, gave recitations on "Kansas," C. W. Yard spoke on "The Pastors Who Succeed," O. M. Bobbitt on "Why We Succeed." O. L. Adams, one of the present living link State Evangelists, told about the last revival in the first church in the state, this meeting being held in August of this year. W. S. Lowe delivered the "Jubilee Address," which the convention voted to have published and which will soon appear in our church papers. O. L. Cook gave an impressive address on "The Church a Missionary Society."

During the business period many splendid speeches were made and much important business transacted. The president's address, by F. E. Mallory, who has been connected with the State Board longer than any other man now in the state, was an emphatic setting forth of the claims of the gospel. From the report of the State Board we glean these important items of general interest: Thirteen workers were employed a total of 2,478 days, organizing and reorganizing five churches and twenty-six departments, delivering 1,290 sermons, adding to the churches by confession and baptism 290, otherwise, 187; total, 477. Twenty-one missionary meetings were held under the auspices of the Board, bringing the total number of additions up to 1,243. Amount of money raised for Kansas Missions, $9,685.51. Raised by evangelists for self-support, in addition to the above, $1,035.55. On church debts, pastors' salaries, improvements, etc., $7,125.20, making a total raised for state and local work of $17,946.26. Raised for out-of-the state missions through the machinery of the state office and its workers, $6,363.91, making a grand total of $24,309.36.

Kansas missions had the right of way during the convention, yet all lines of the work were brought forward. The "general interests'' had a rally the last half day of the convention. It was a noble, witty and humorous address that Geo. E. Lyon, the Superintendent, made for Kansas, and at its close, without appeal, but simply at the opportunity, personal pledges were made for state work to the amount of over $1,000, the gifts ranging from $300 (this amount being given by Brother Kennedy, a preacher) down to $5. Two new living links were created by gifts from Brother Kennedy and I. W. Gill and wife. It was a glorious moment, and all rejoiced. This makes eight living links in Kansas, some being for the foreign and some for state work. C. A. Finch, who thinks in poetry and talks in flowers, delivered an eloquent address during one of the evening sessions, on ''The Potentiality of a Conquering Church,'' and was followed by C. M. Chilton, of St. Joseph, Mo., on ''Our Centennial,'' which was one of the strongest addresses of the entire convention. But I regret that I can not claim space to even name the many speeches of this epoch-making gathering. It was a passing from mountain peak to mountain peak. In the Christian Endeavor Period, of which Oliver N. Roth is the presiding officer, important and far-reaching themes were discussed. Especially should be mentioned the most excellent paper by Judge J. N. Haymaker, of Wichita, on ''The Call to the Young Man.'' It was one all young men should have heard to give them the true conception of life, delivered by a busy man, who finds time to serve on our State Board, and spend much time and thought at the conventions, and in committee meetings besides giving largely of his means.

As indicated above, the larger missionary interests were well represented, Ministerial Relief by D. Y. Donaldson, of Kansas City, Benevolent Association by J. H. Mohorter, Church Extension by G. H. Combs, American Missions by Geo. B. Ranshaw, and Foreign Missions by Hermon P. Williams, of the Philippine Islands.

Some Important Items:

—The next convention goes to Hutchinson.

—W. D. Cunningham, of Japan, made a short speech.

—The constitution was revised, making two sets of officers, one for the State Society, or Board, and one for the convention. F. E. Mallory was re-elected as President of the Board, and W. L. Harris president of the convention. Geo. E. Lyon continues as superintendent and corresponding secretary.

—It was a beautiful and appropriate act on the part of the convention to present Miss A. Rosalea Pendleton with a beautiful gold watch, as she retires after ten years of service as corresponding secretary of the C. W. B. M., and Secretary of the State Board, and is succeeded by Mrs. J. E. McDaniel, of Newton, Kansas. C. W. Cooper made this presentation speech.

—The ''Moses Memorial,'' conducted by Mrs. W. C. Payne, was a tender and touching service, in which the promoted leader was remembered in thought and prayer, and by pledging over $500 to that memorial.

—Despite the ''awful'' weather everybody kept in good humor and appeared happy.

—W. Daviess Pittman represented the Christian Publishing Co., and H. H. Moninger the Standard Publishing Co.

Fire at the Southern Christian Institute.

A great calamity has come to our training school for negroes at Edwards, Miss. Monday evening, October 26, Allison Hall was burned. This hall contained girls' dormitory, dining room, kitchen and store rooms. The fire was probably caused by a lamp explosion, and was discovered while they were at supper. Nothing in the upper story of the building could be saved; furniture, bedding, clothing of girls and teachers was a total loss. All the stores in the cellar, including canned fruit, the work of a summer, were burned.

Everything there is chaotic. They are moving the printing press out of the shop to make a dining room, and are at work building a temporary kitchen. J. B. Lehman writes: ''We must forage for our meals, and the boys are at work roasting potatoes in the fires of our misfortune.''

The hall was insured for enough to purchase material to erect a more permanent building, but temporary buildings must be erected, cooking range, baker, clothing, bedding, furniture must be replaced at once to prevent suffering. The loss (outside of the insurance) will be not less than $2,000. I want to ask churches and individuals, friends of this work, to come to its aid in this time of calamity. Will not ministers read this letter to their congregations, and will not all come to the aid of this work in this hour of need by making a money offering?

Every room in Allison Hall was full. It will take hard, brave work to hold the school together. We must come to their aid at once. All hearts will go out in sympathy to Brother and Sister Lehman, and also to the teachers who must control these people under such conditions.

Texans at New Orleans Convention.

Something near two hundred Christians from the Lone Star State attended the New Orleans convention, and many expressions of joy and appreciation of the entertainment, proceedings, etc., were heard from them. One of them, a business man who had never attended a national convention of the churches, said it was the greatest pleasure of his life. When he had been there only one day he said he had already been repaid for the expense of himself and wife in making the trip. There were representatives from nearly all the vocations of our pushing, progressive Texas citizenship, and all, without exception so far as we know, were delighted. The preachers and the women were delighted, as they always are. Many of the preachers were sent by their churches with a purse to cover all necessary expenses. Of the preachers whose names and addresses I can now recall. I mention the following: J. A. Arnold, Clarendon; Ernest Bradley, Lampasas; G. F. Bradford, Van Alstyne; A. J. Bush, Wichita Falls; G. L. Bush, Gainesville; J. A. Challener, Bryan; J. B. Cleaver, San Antonio; E. Lynwood Crystal, Waco; J. W. Gates, Weimar; Baxter Golightly, Odessa; Colby D. Hall, Waco; A. M. Harrall. San Marcos; Vernon Harrington, McGregor; Cephas Shelburne, Dallas; S. B. Waggener, Athens; W. J. Haywood, Howe; W. T. Hilton, Greenville; J. R. Hodges, Huntsville; E. H. Holmes, Plano; J. W. Holsapple, Hillsboro; W. P. Jennings, Taylor; Clinton Lockhart, North Waco; J. W. Lowber, Austin; J. H. McWhirter, Henrietta; J. C. Mason, Dallas; C. E. Moore, Garland; W. A. Merrill, Lancaster; J. J. Morgan, Fort Worth; A. L. Oder, Center; J. T. Ogle, Paris; D. Pennington, Taylor; A. F. Sanderson, Houston; C. C. Scittern, Proctor; J. W. Smith, Browawood; W. O. Stephens, Austin; John A. Stevens, Sulphur Springs; J. M. Streator, Center Point; J. N. Thomas, Haskell; E. M. Waits, Fort Worth; M. L. Dickey, Cisco. Very little of their time was spent in sight seeing. Most of them were in attendance at all the sessions of the convention. During the Christian Endeavor meeting Sunday evening they were more in evidence than representatives from any other one state. Colby D. Hall led the meeting and was the right man in the right place. We also noticed that in the symposium on foreign missions there were more Texas men on than there were from any other state. As your reporter was not included in this list he can afford to say that F. M. Rains knew he would make no mistake in calling on Texans for big speeches in short time. We who sat in the pews were justly proud of our representatives on all occasions. While we were partial toward our own folks we were by no means unappreciative of the other numerous good and great things of the convention. We all returned brimfull of enthusiasm and strong determinations to go to Pittsburg in large numbers next year.—J. W. Holsapple, Hillsboro, Texas.

In the Beginning the English Bible was written in the simple language of the time that the people, even the children, could understand, but since that Bible was revised in 1611, 300 years ago, many changes have taken place in the English language so that many words, which were plain and clear in meaning then, are obscure and difficult to understand now. The is the result of thirty years' research and constant effort to give to you and your children in your own plain and direct language, the true meaning. How much wider, clearer interest in the teachings of the Scriptures is such a Bible certain to create?

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS.

Kentucky Work and Workers.

J. W. Masters was in Harlan county twenty days, holding a meeting at Baxters, in addition to being at the dedication of the house of worship at Harlan Court House. He has accomplished a splendid work in building the house at that county seat. He baptized eight people during the month.——W. J. Cocke had a fine month as to results in several ways. Thirty added—24 by confession and baptism. The latter part of the month is not included.——J. W. Edwards added three in Hardin county in a needy field. He is working in some destitute fields.——Two added in the work of A. Sanders in Big Sandy Valley. He announces that Carey E. Morgan has agreed to rededicate the house of worship.——Robert Kirby added eight in Cumberland and Adair counties.——Louis A. Kohler was two Sundays at Bromley. Work about as usual. ——The work at Jackson moves on about as it has for some months. C. M. Summers, the preacher, says that the financial part of it is hard to keep up.——There was one addition in J. B. Flinchum's Breathitt county work.——Forty-two additions constitute a part of the splendid results of the work of Z. Ball during the past month.——There were 13 added at Latonia during August and September at regular services. Audiences fine and work excellent in every way. ——D. G. Combs had 13 additions during the month. He is now in the evangelistic field and is in great demand in Eastern Kentucky.——Two additions at Jellico, and Raymond G. Sherrer reports matters as moving on very well.——H. H. Thompson reports six added—five of them by baptism. He has held meeting at Mouth of Marrowbone, not far from Hellier, and will be in the latter place in October for a meeting. Elkhorn City will also have his help in a meeting very soon.——It is noticeable that a considerable number of the workers have not indicated the results of the month's work. Only about half of the men have told what they are doing. We insist that every man shall report.——We are now hard at work on another year. Already letters have been sent out relative to the November offering. Matter is in the hands of the printer to be used for stimulating interest in our state work. A leaflet entitled, "Greater Kentucky Missions," will be ready in a few days for broadcast distribution. Letters to be used by the preacher or officers and coin pockets can be had for the asking. We hope that the brethren will order this material freely and use it diligently.——Too much emphasis can not be laid on the necessity of taking the offering at the time appointed. Let the whole church in Kentucky move forward in November. H. W. Elliott, Sec.

Sulphur, Ky.

Nebraska.

Roy J. Lucas has offered his resignation at Murray, to take effect at once. He will be available for other Nebraska work.——Thomas Maxwell began his ministry at Fairbury on October 4. The church is to be congratulated on securing him.——A. L. Ogden has been called for half time at Verdon, beginning work at once. T. J. Oliver, of Falls City, has been supplying for some time.——T. B. McDonald has accepted a call to the pastorate at Geneva, and moved there at once. He has been supplying for some weeks while camping at Bethany Park. We hope that this will be a long pastorate. ——W. R. Burbridge, who preaches at State Line in Nebraska, and a point in Kansas, says he is the only living grandson of the American Revolution. While he lives he is seeking to build up the cause of Christ.—— The church at State Line, organized last spring by W. R. Burbridge, has collected money and started to build a house of worship. They will be ready for dedication early this winter.——John G. Alber has resigned at Palmer and taken full time work at Central City. He supplied at Ord on October 4.——Wilkinson brothers began a meeting at Palmer on October 4. This team, comprising B. A. Wilkinson and H. G. Wilkinson, are in the field for evangelistic work in earnest. They are both men of power and they will give value received and more wherever called. Address at Bethany permanently.——Guy G. Emery will take the Palmer work half time.—— L. N. Early has accepted a call to the work at Havelock and has entered upon his work. Brother Wilkinson closed there with September. I believe that Brother Early is the man for the place.——H. Maxwell Hall, our Bible school evangelist, preached his closing sermon at Cook on October 4. He will enter at once upon his work as evangelist, and schools desiring his services can address him at Bethany, or the state secretary, W. A. Baldwin, Bethany. His work will be to visit the schools and hold a short institute in each, and present the Bible school work from its latest aspects. Send for him.—— The pledges made at the state convention on Lord's day afternoon for grounds, improvements, etc., are now all due. They were to be paid in thirty days. Most of them have been sent in, and this public notice, if observed, will save the office postage and time. Please send it to W. A. Baldwin, Bethany.——The literature for the November offering is ready. It is suggested that the ministers distribute this just before the offering is taken, say one week, so that it will not be wholly forgotten. Envelopes can be had from this office. The apportionment letters are sent to preachers where we know them; in some cases to church clerks or other officers. In order that these shall have prompt consideration, we earnestly request all who receive them to have them presented to the church or church board at once, so that united action can be had. In some cases it will not be possible to take the offering on November 1. Plan for a later Lord's day, but if at all possible do not let it go by the month. In the case of dedications or meetings, arrange to have it taken in December, so that the half year, January 1, may find us in possession of full reports from all the churches.

W. A. Baldwin.

Notes from the Arkansas Traveler.

Our work is beginning to take on new life, now that the hot season is about ended. Meetings are being held in different parts of the state with great success and the churches are preparing for a great fall and winter campaign.

Percy G. Cross has held a splendid meeting at Okolona, which resulted in 40 accessions. In his meeting at Prescott nearly 100 have been added, and there are more in sight. This is a splendid victory for Prescott. They will build a new church there and R. A. Highsmith, the minister, will find plenty to keep him busy, feeding the flock this winter. Brother Cross is a fine evangelist. We wish right here to serve notice on the other states to keep "hands off." He belongs to Arkansas and we do not propose to give him up to any other state.—E. C. Browning, my predecessor in this work, has organized a church at Wright Avenue, Little Rock, with some forty members, and a good lot has been bought and a building is in process of construction. Brother Browning will be the pastor of the new church.—Francis E. Patton, who came to Arkansas from Kansas, recently, has been in a meeting at the Leavitt Street Church, Fayetteville. The last account there was a great interest and some confessions.—The church at Harrison was visited by the Secretary a short time ago. We have there a good church building which cost about $10,000, and a fine people. R. A. Staley is leading these brethren to victory. The largest offering for state work ever made was received upon that visit. Brother Staley is a missionary preacher. He preaches missions and keeps his people informed. That accounts for the large offering.—W. H. Anderson, the minister at Paris, is succeeding well there. His church is not strong in numbers or wealth, but it is strong in the faith. He gives half-time to this congregation and evangelizes the remainder of the time. The Paris church gave $177 to state work, this year. What church in this state, having preaching but half the time, can beat that record? Bro. Anderson has had frequent additions since taking up the work a year ago, and has organized two churches. He is called for another year.—At our state convention in May it was recommended that all the churches in the state employing a minister for full time send their preachers out to hold a meeting in some needy place, recommended by the board, and that the church sending him pay him his salary and expenses while he is in the meeting, and that he collect what he can on the ground at the close of the meeting and send it in to the state board. By this means many weak and deserving places could be helped to a good meeting, many souls won, and the money raised would pay for other meetings in strategic points. The Hope Church is the first to respond to this call. It sent its minister, C. K. Marshall, to Gurdon, where he held a splendid meeting and sent in a nice collection to the board. Brethren, will you not follow this example? Write the undersigned and he will tell you where you can do a good work. We must raise that $4,000 this year. J. J. Taylor.

Georgia.

I spent a couple of weeks in Anniston, Ala., preaching for the genial pastor, Belt White. The audiences were large, attentive and enthusiastic. A reporter of "The Anniston Hot Blast" attended every service and gave liberal space in his paper to every sermon, and this greatly helped us. At the beginning of the second week everything was in shape for a splendid ingathering, but I contracted a severe cold and then lagrippe, and Brother White had to take charge of the meeting and close, to the regret of all. There were 18 additions, mostly by confession and baptism. The Anniston church is as busy as a beehive in springtime. The preacher understands his congregation and the congregation understands the preacher, and they love each other and work for the Lord, and this tells the why of their great prosperity.

Those special numbers of The Christian-Evangelist in the interests of our work in the South were timely, and I am sure will do good. The churches in the Southland should appreciate this effort and show it in subscriptions to The Christian-Evangelist. All over this Southland we need this paper. We need the sweet, gentle spirit it manifests. We need it to-day, and will need it to-morrow and on to the end.

The Northeast District convention was held at Watkinsville, October 19-22.——David Arnold, of Hampton, has become pastor of the Woodlawn church in Birmingham, Ala. Georgia has lost, for a time at least, one of her best young preachers.

Acworth. E. L. Shelnutt.

Central Georgia.

The convention of the Central Georgia district, held at Wrightsville October 5-7, was said to be the best in the history of the district. Fifteen of the nineteen churches were represented and sent encouraging reports. Some splendid meetings have been held during the year, and offerings for missions and benevolences have increased. Two splendid buildings (Dublin and Sandersville) have been erected, and in many ways the churches are reaching out for larger things. L. M. Omer, V. W. Wallace, T. G. Linkous, J. A. Jensen, J. A. Perdue, Ernest Bragg, W. B. Shaw, Dr. T. L. Harris and Howard J. Brazelton were the preachers present, and the most of these made addresses during the convention. The subjects dealt with the various phases of church work and as presented by the various speakers were edifying and inspiring.

The sessions of the Woman's Society for Georgia Missions, and the C. W. B. M., composed a delightful period of the convention. The addresses by Mrs. L. M. Omer and Miss Mabel Langford were helpful for their deep spiritual tone and the survey of the work represented by each. The officers for the coming year are: President, L. M. Omer, Sandersville; vice-president, V. W. Wallace, Dublin; secretary, M. L. Jackson, Oconee; treasurer, Dr. R. L. Miller, Tennille; executive committee, Howard J. Brazelton and W. H. Roper, Macon; J. A. Perdue, Eastman.

An important action was the decision to hold semi-annual conventions, and the next one goes to Dublin in April. The district expects to center its energies upon some new point during the year. The church at Wrightsville, with its spiritually-minded pastor, J. A. Jensen, delightfully entertained the convention.

Here at Macon we are entering the fall and winter campaign with vigor and a good outlook. Our annual Bible School rally brought the largest attendance in the history of the school, and has left its effect in an increased regular attendance. A public exhibition on Sunday evening by our training class showed the vast amount of good accomplished by such work, and greatly interested the audience. We are planning for a great meeting next spring. All are happy in our work and hoping for splendid results. Howard J. Brazelton.

A Great Meeting in St. Louis.

Wednesday evening, October 28, closed one of the greatest meetings ever held in the Fourth Church in this city. It was of sixteen days duration, and resulted in 73 being added—67 baptisms and 6 by letter and statement. We had as our evangelists H. E. Wilhite and Prof. P. O. Gates. Brother Wilhite is too well known to need any commendation from me, but I want to add my testimony to the worth of the man. He is a power for good, and preaches the truth in its simplicity and purity. His Bible Drill for children is great. The audiences were large at every service, and an intense interest prevailed throughout the meeting. We could have had a much larger ingathering if we had secured a larger building.

Evangelist H. E. Wilhite.

Prof. P. O. Gates.

The Gospel was given to the people in song as well as from the pulpit. Brother Gates led a large chorus and orchestra. He is a splendid song leader and musical director. The people were deeply moved by his sweet and inspiring solos. This is the first meeting which Brethren Wilhite and Gates have held together, and we predict for them a great future. All departments of the church seem to be taking on new life. The expenses of the meeting were easily met and all are happy over the victory.

Breeden and Saxton at the Missouri Athens.

Brothers Breeden and Saxton have just closed a very successful meeting with the Columbia Christian church. In nineteen days 128 have been added to the membership of the congregation—50 of those by confession and baptism. It is generally conceded to be one of the very best meetings ever held in Columbia. In theory and practice Brother Breeden is an exponent of the highest type of evangelism. The congregation has been strengthened numerically and spiritually. Every department in the church has received new life. We feel that the aftermath of the meeting will be good, for the effort has been to do solid, permanent work. This result, we believe, has been accomplished. Professor Saxton is a very efficient soloist and chorus leader. His singing contributed largely to the success of the meeting. Churches receiving the help and inspiration of these men will be greatly blessed.

Madison A. Hart, Minister.

Oklahoma Items.

A temporary organization of the Eighth Missionary district of Oklahoma, which embraces the old Chickasaw nation, was effected at Maysville, and a convention will be held some time in December to permanently organize.——C. F. Trimble, of Ardmore, has been holding some good meetings in the district. He is now at Wynnewood. ——W. H. Kindred held a fine meeting at Blanchard and organized a church there. Pauls Valley, Lindsay, Blanchard and Lexington all need preachers.——Our work at Purcell moves slowly. Brother Kindred held a short meeting here with eight or ten additions.——Cheap lands, a fine climate and facilities for business make this a land of great possibilities.

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism," or "by letter."

Arkansas.

Big Flat, Oct. 24.—Andy T. Ritchie, of Ash Flat, Ark., has just closed a ten-days' meeting at this place with ten added by confession and baptism. Brother Ritchie's lecture on his travels to Palestine and the Holy Lands was listened to by a large concourse of people, who seemed to be almost spellbound by his graphic descriptions. The congregation here numbers about 90. We have no preacher in charge at present, but meet together regularly on the first day of the week for prayer service and the Lord's Supper.—A. S. Kelley.

California.

Rialto, Oct. 24.—I was assisted in a short meeting by Prof. B. F. Stout, of Philadelphia, a singing evangelist of national note. I did the preaching. There were 10 additions—all by primary obedience but two. Brother Stout is also a personal worker, and held afternoon meetings which were very helpful.—Dan Trundle.

Ukiah, Oct. 19.—Six were baptized yesterday—21 the past three weeks. Last night was "Faith Circle" night in our evening service, at which time 11 members of that class were received into the church. This is an excellent body of young women. Mrs. Wilkinson is their teacher. Thirty of the 49 members are now Christians.—Otha Wilkinson, minister.

District of Columbia.

Washington, Oct. 26.—The Ministerial Association of the District of Columbia met in the Vermont Avenue Church, October 19, George E. Dew in the chair. Present: G. E. Dew, F. D. Power, G. A. Miller, J. E. Stuart, W. G. Oram and W. F. Smith. Reported additions: Vermont Avenue, three by letter; Fifteenth Street, one by confession and baptism and three by letter; Ninth Street, two by confession and baptism. At the close of the Gipsy Smith campaign now going on both Fifteenth and Ninth Street will have revival services. Brother Lutz, of Harrisburg, Pa., will do the preaching for the Fifteenth Street brethren.—W. S. Smith, secretary.

Illinois.

Athens, Oct. 23.—I have just closed a week's meeting with the church here. Could we have had three or four weeks we could have had a fine ingathering, which is much needed. The field is needing a meeting, but the political campaign is holding the attention of the people.—E. W. Brickert.

Harristown, Oct. 28.—I closed a meeting at Williamstown, Mo., with 18 additions—eight by baptism, eight by letter and two from the Baptist church. I am now at Harristown, Ill., with J. H. Bristor and Miss Elizabeth Baird. We have been here two weeks, with 28 additions up to the present time. This church is in a very fine spiritual condition.—C. L. Harbord, evangelist.

Barnett, Oct. 24.—Our 21-days' meeting at Shaw's Point closed last night with 36 additions, 23 by baptism, six from the Baptists, three from the Methodists and one from the United Brethren, and three by statement. F. A. Sword, of Lanark, Ill., was our efficient evangelist. He is an earnest, zealous worker, preaching sound doctrine, the unity of Christians, a good mixer, and a winner of souls. We have retained his services for October, 1909. We are needing a minister for half time.—C. E. Barnett, clerk.

Indiana.

Owensville, Oct. 26.—I am at present in a meeting here assisted by E. M. Ford and wife as chorus leader and soloist. Any evangelist or pastor wanting a chorus leader should write them. They may be addressed at Effingham, Ill. —G. W. Ford.

Indianapolis, Oct. 26.—The Sixth Church of Indianapolis, C. W. Cauble pastor, and E. C. Mannan, singing evangelist, have just closed a three-weeks' meeting with 47 additions. We have had a great meeting. Did not reach the climax until last Sunday when, in the morning sermon, Brother Cauble brought out the fact that every church should have a Centennial aim. He closed his sermon by saying: "I have given this matter careful thought and make this suggestion: That before October 1, 1909, we as a church remove all indebtedness and come out free from all mortgages." This was unanimously carried by congregational vote.—E. C. Mannan, 1013 East Morris street, Indianapolis, Ind.

Iowa.

Oelwein, Oct. 27.—Our work is looking bright. We commence a meeting November 8 with Noah Garwick, of Waterloo, as evangelist. Just closed a meeting at Troy Mills, with 12 additions. I held a meeting at Garwin in September, with 23 additions.—C. L. McKinn.

Kansas.

Bonner Springs, Oct. 22.—Evangelists Thomas L. Cooksey, M. D., and J. Ross Miller were with this church in a 19-days' meeting in which time there were 45 additions to the membership—about half by baptism and a few of them children. Dr. Cooksey knows how to take the gospel to men. His sermons are logical and free from sarcasm and other objectionable features. People of other denominations heard him gladly and some of them united with this church. Mr. Miller is very efficient. Bonner Springs church now has 433 members and is making plans for the year's work. Over 250 have been added to this church during the present pastorate of two years.—O. C. Moomaw, minister.

Toronto, Oct. 21.—Closed here with 18 baptisms, 10 by statement and two who had been baptized and working in other religious organizations. Among the number added were 12 men and boys, the youngest being 10, the oldest 65. Seven husbands and wives came together. This puts the work in much stronger and better shape. W. M. Bobbitt preaches one-fourth time for them. We go to Concordia November 1. W. L. Hays, of Kansas City, was my singer.—O. L. Adams.

Clearwater, Oct. 26.—The meeting here closed with 31 added. Brother Carter is a fine co-worker.—M. B. Ingle.

Kentucky.

Lawrenceburg, Oct. 23.—Our meeting continued 20 days, including a reception last night to the new members. We had a total of 82 added—46 by letter, six from other bodies and 30 by confession and baptism. L. W. Ogle rendered us valuable assistance in his solos and chorus work. We go forward, encouraged.—W. C. Gibbs.

Louisiana.

Alexandria, Oct. 24.—A. Martin, of Davenport, Ia., who recently held two fine meetings in Kentucky, is now in a meeting here, and will begin with G. M. Weimer at Larned, Kan., November 18. Brother Martin is now making dates for 1909, and churches wishing his help should write to him at once.

Massachusetts.

Everett, Oct. 19.—Three additions last Lord's day at the Union Christian Church.—A. T. June, minister.

Michigan.

Ann Arbor, Oct. 8.—There were two additions here last Lord's day—by letter and confession.—O. E. Tomes.

Missouri.

Frankford, Oct. 29.—Geo. L. Snively and C. H. Altheide held a very interesting meeting for the church here, of which Talmage Defrees is minister. The attendance throughout the meeting was good, and on Sundays the church would not accommodate the people. Mr. Altheide in his work as solist, chorus leader and personal worker added not a little to the interest and success of the meeting. Mr. Snively gave great satisfaction. This wealthy congregation, at the suggestion of the pastor, is planning to make an institutional church, and will shortly establish a gymnasium and reading rooms, thereby intending to reach a large class of people not interested in Christian service.

Pogard, Oct. 24.—R. H. Sawyer, of Carrollton, closed a meeting here, resulting in seven by statement and ten by obedience and baptism. The number of additions does not begin to tell the story of the good accomplished, nor the labor performed. Being in a very conservative community, surrounded by denominations, and weak in numbers, the church was discouraged. Now the membership is awakened and much good in the future may be expected. Brother Sawyer presents the plain and simple gospel with courage and conviction. It would be a good thing if he could be induced to take up the work of evangelizing permanently.—F. A. Wellman, minister.

Webster Groves, Oct. 21.—I have just returned from a two weeks' meeting at Spaulding, with 18 confessions. I can hold a couple of meetings this fall and winter.—J. G. Engle.

Jerico Springs, Oct. 24.—While looking after our farm near Mountain Grove, I preached three sermons in the country, with 8 confessions. C. A. Hicks, pastor of the church at Mountain Grove, drove out on the following Lord's day and baptized three who made the confession the last night, and had one more addition by letter. Brother Hicks is held in high esteem in that community.—E. W. Yocum.

Laddonia, Oct. 24.—We are having the best meeting Laddonia has had for many years, with 41 accessions to date, with more to follow. Spicer and Douthit are a strong team. We expect to pass the 50 mark before we close.—J. D. Greer.

Foley, Oct. 26.—M. D. Dudley, of Paynesville, Mo., closed a successful two-weeks' meeting last night at Corinth Church, near here, with 16 additions, as follows: Eleven by confession, one reclaimed and four by letter, and the work otherwise built up and strengthened.—E. B. Brown.

Bethany, Oct. 26.—One addition at regular services last Sunday. We will begin a meeting with home forces on November 8.—Andrew P. Johnson.

Springfield, Oct. 27.—N. M. Ragland and Charles E. McVay, singer, are in a meeting with the First Church here. Brother McVay has some open dates after December 1.

time; money raised and Roy Lucas called to minister.—Samuel Gregg, state evangelist.

New Mexico.

Elida, Oct. 5.—My husband left here July 18 on account of some trouble with his heart. He conducted a short meeting at Merriek, Okla., with five baptisms, then one at Luther, Okla., with 20 baptisms, and one near McLand, with 33 additions, including a Baptist preacher and three other members of the Baptist church. I expect him home from Oklahoma soon.—D. M. Lea.

East Las Vegas, Oct. 27.—There have been four new members added to our congregation, making 24 since July 1, or a net gain of 21. Our congregations have about reached the limit of the capacity of our hall. I believe the church here has a brilliant future. We have 20 enrolled in our teacher training class.—Meade Ervin Dutt, A. C. M. S. minister.

Oklahoma.

Frederick, Oct. 19.—Closed a good meeting at Hastings with 44 added in ten days—10 by confession, two from other bodies, 12 from the nonprogressive brethren; eight reclaimed and 12 by statement. We organized the church and raised $1,000 for a church, which, when erected, will be the finest in town. H. E. Winters did the singing. Our next meeting will be at Jet, Okla. —Charles P. Murphy, evangelist.

Murray, Oct. 17.—Elder J. O. Adcock, evangelist, and Sister Goldie Ditch, singer at Fort Scott, Kan., just closed a two and a half-weeks' meeting at this point. Many confessed their faith in Christ and were baptized. They left us with a newly organized body of 47 active members. The evangelists rendered fine service.—J. O. Murray, elder.

Ohio.

Ashtabula, Oct. 23.—Work moving along here in fine shape. The Bible school is now in a contest to bring it up to 600. Have had 12 additions since last report.—J. W. Underwood.

North Eaton, Oct. 21.—We have just closed an 18-days' meeting with Evangelist M. J. Grable, of Bethany, W. Va., with 16 additions by statement and letter, and 14 by confession and baptism. Our church has not only been helped with these additions, but we have been helped spiritually. Brother Grable's sermons were forceful. We have had additions from the Methodist, Congregational and Baptist churches. This is the only church in town and was organized in 1846. It is the mother church of churches in this state and Michigan. We have an enrollment of 143 resident members. Brother Grable is to begin a 30-days' meeting with Salem, O., November 1.—B. Alvin Wilson, minister.

Delta, Oct. 16.—I am in a meeting here, with eight confessions to date.—A. B. Moore.

Texas.

Virginia.

Roanoke, Oct. 23.—We are in the midst of a very fine meeting. We are having big crowds. A number of men have been attending every night that never went to church before. So far 19 have confessed Christ and one added by letter. This is a mission church established two years ago with a membership of 34. The seating capacity is 400, with only an indebtedness of $115. God has blessed the brethren in this noble work. —D. D. Dick and wife, evangelists; George J. Ruth, pastor.

Washington.

Wenatchee, Oct. 19.—The work at this point still continues to grow, not only in numbers but in grace and knowledge of Christ. There were two additions October 11, and three on the 18th, which makes 170 additions in the twenty-one months I have been on the field. We are cooperating with Waterville and Entiat in supporting W. T. Adams as a living link evangelist. He is now at Brewster. A new church is one of the possibilities of the Wenatchee congregation.—A. J. Adams, minister.

Castle Rock, Oct. 18.—On October 18 we closed the greatest meeting in the history of the church here. The church was pastorless and disheartened. We went there some weeks ago to rest, but the brethren prevailed upon us to hold a meeting. The outlook was anything but bright, but the meeting put the church to the forefront. We located C. E. Daugherty, of California, for full time. There were 63 additions—mostly baptisms—nearly all men who are heads of families. We begin a 10-days' meeting with the Selwood Church, Portland, Ore., then Pomeroy, Wash., November 8.—Samuel W. Jackson and wife, Permanent address, 683 East Samon street, Portland, Ore.

ADULT BIBLE CLASS MOVEMENT

MARION STEVENSON

Is It Passing Away?

We are accustomed to hear it confidently asserted in some quarters that, sooner or later, we shall all be constrained to accommodate our idea of the Bible to what are styled the "assured results" of the application of the critical theories of Wellhausen to Biblical study. Those who have ventured to question the result of these theories have been promptly reminded that "the scholars are agreed" upon them; and where the doctors agree, what can the untaught say or do?

But it now appears from that candid and outspoken journal, "The Biblical World," that the advocates of Wellhausenism are not agreed. The leading editorial of the September issue of "The Biblical World" raises the question whether Wellhausenism is a house divided against itself, and seems inclined to believe, within the limits of possible definition, that it is. And the editorial raises a closely related question, whether we may expect the speedy downfall of Wellhausenism, and answers the question by saying, "that depends." The following liberal excerpts from this interesting editorial explain the situation:

"The success of the critico-historical method seems to be so firmly assured that we might well fear lest it become a new orthodoxy and develop a new dogmatism. The hour of triumph is not infrequently the hour of greatest danger.

"Signs are not wanting, however, that the movement is not to be allowed to rest upon its laurels. A period of introspection, or self-criticism, has set in. Released from the necessity of defending themselves from outside attack, the representatives of the new Old Testament learning have begun to examine more critically the strength of the positions they occupy. One result is the so-called Pan-Babylonian school of criticism, which was so ably described and criticized by Professor Barton in the May number of the "Biblical World." Briefly stated, its contention is that the Wellhausen school has overlooked, or underestimated, the fact that the Hebrews lived in the midst of a great Oriental civilization, the main ideas and institutions of which they must have shared. Consequently, they are to be given credit for greater attainment, intellectually, socially, and religiously, in the early years of their existence than is commonly conceded them by modern criticism. The results reached upon this basis, on the one hand, accord more nearly with the traditional view in that they tend to establish the existence of monotheism in pre-prophetic Israel; but, on the other, they depart from long-accepted views more radically in that they tend to show that Israel's religious possession was not hers alone but was shared by the whole Oriental world.

A second result is the series of Old Testament studies recently inaugurated by Professor Eerdmans, of the University of Leiden, and directed, as he himself declares, against the position of the Wellhausen school in general, and, in particular, against its view of the origin of the sources that constitute the basis of the early Old Testament literature. The first installment of these studies concerns itself with an investigation of the prevailing documentary hypothesis as applied to the book of Genesis. The conclusions of this investigation are sufficiently startling. The J, E and P documents, to which we have long since become reconciled, are ruled out of court. In their stead appear as the ultimate sources of Genesis four strata of sagas or legends. To the first and oldest stratum belong a few stories reflecting an undimmed primitive polytheism. A second stratum recognizes Jehovah as one among many gods. The third carries over polytheistic elements from tradition to Jehovah, the only God. The fourth consists of supplementary additions from a late period when monotheism had triumphed and all the old sagas were interpreted monotheistically."

Thus it appears that the two fundamental theories of Wellhausenism are peremptorily challenged by members of his school, and the results are not assured. The editor says further:

"It is unnecessary to point out how vastly different this alignment of sources is from that now current. It is practically a return to the old fragment hypothesis of the early days of hexateuchal analysis. It may also be noted how wide a difference in the conception of Israel's religious development exists between the position assumed by Eerdmans and that taken by the representatives of the Pan-Babylonian school. By the latter, monotheism is assigned to the period of Moses; by Eerdmans, to the period of Jeremiah and the Exile. Which is the nearer right, cannot perhaps yet be determined. Time will tell.

"It should be remembered that Eerdmans, occupant of the chair formerly held by Kuenen, and the Pan-Babylonists are all alike members of the school of Wellhausen, having not the slightest intention of reinstating the old orthodoxy. Is Wellhausenism, therefore, to be described as a house divided against itself? And are we consequently to expect its speedy downfall? That depends, partly, at least upon our definition of Wellhausenism. If we identify it with the commonly accepted results of modern Old Testament criticism, we must of course acknowledge that these results, like any given set of supposed facts and opinions, must be modified in the course of time as new facts are discovered and as old facts are seen in new light. It is conceivable, indeed, that the modification may be so great as to render the original product practically unrecognizable. Such would be the case were Eerdman's views, for example, to become generally accepted."

If Wellhausenism has come to its downfall, what have we left as the result of the critical activity of this school? The editor says, "the contribution of modern historical criticism is not to be sought primarily in the results it has wrought out. It consists rather in its scientific method and spirit." And we are told that "the scientific method and spirit" consists in "applying every rational test and facing all the facts squarely without theological let or hindrance."

Here is where a large company of Bible students have found occasion to protest against Wellhausenism; they admit the value of the scientific spirit and method as above defined, but insist that Wellhausenism has too frequently failed in applying rational tests and facing the facts. If Wellhausenism has come to its downfall, it will lie among the ruins of many other theories which, in their day, seemed to bring "assured results." The fact remains, however, that through all these changes of critical fashions, "the Word of God liveth and abideth."

Important Teacher Training Conference in Kansas City.

At the First Christian Church on October 25 was held a very enthusiastic meeting of the officers and teachers of the training classes of Greater Kansas City, under the direction of the Kansas City Union, D. P. Gribben, President and Miss Abby Downing, Secretary. We have now an enrollment of between eleven and twelve hundred.

I had the privilege of opening the meeting with a short address on "What more we ought to do in Training for Service in Kansas City, and Why." I took the ground that we ought to reach not less than 2,000 enrolled, because, in the first place, it is easier to do a big thing than a little one; in the second place, we have the people, not less than 6,000 enrolled in our Bible schools, and 10,000 church members in the city. In the third place, we now have enthusiasm aroused, and while we are on the wave, we ought to be borne along to the desired port. In the fourth place, we need the culture. Many of the people of our churches are still lamentably uninformed about the Bible and the obligations of Christian service. While this is the case, the duty is plain for us to enlist them in this great training movement.

J. T. Ferguson, pastor of the Ivanhoe Church, and teacher of the training class at that place, spoke on "How to Arouse and Maintain Enthusiasm in the Work." He also conducted a most edifying conference.

D. Y. Donaldson, pastor of the South Prospect Church, and teacher of a large training class at that place, spoke and conducted a conference on the subject of "Ways of Teaching." Both of these exercises were very snappy, interesting and helpful.

President Gribben announced the preparation for a great union meeting of all the classes of the two cities during the winter, to be addressed by J. M. Kersey, of Parsons, Kan., teacher of one of the largest classes of the world.

I announced preparations for a great Adult Bible Class rally to be conducted by the International Supt., W. C. Pearce, and Gen'l Sec'y Marion Lawrance, for the two Kansas Cities in February, 1909.

Keep your eye on Kansas City as long as Dan Gribben is president of the Disciples' Bible Union, for he will never be satisfied until the largest possible work is accomplished.

Interest In Home Department.

At Weston, Mo., under the enterprising leadership of J. E. Wolfe, a Home department of fifty has been worked up during the early autumn. This has resulted from a visit made by J. H. Bryan to that school during the summer. All of the members of the Weston Church save 46 are now in the Bible school. The enrollment now exceeds 200. What Weston can do, you can do.

Illinois Training Classes.

The work is moving grandly forward. It has been wonderful in its enrollment, and we expect to greatly increase this, but we now expect to give more attention to the classes taking examinations and finishing their work. Reports will be received from Mrs. Northrup at frequent intervals of such work done, and will be published in connection with other reports. Remember, it is not the enrollment that counts, but the finished product—the graduates.

Things Booming at Mitchell Park.

C. A. Lowe, pastor of Mitchell Park, St. Joseph, Mo., sends in a list of members of an Adult Bible Class just organized, of even sixty. His class will receive the International Certificate. They have also organized a class of about sixty in training for service, and a large number of these will go through the course and receive the diploma. This school received a taste of teacher training last year, graduating a splendid class in the early spring, and they are pushing on to larger things. It is needless to say that Mitchell Park Church is growing in all its departments and promising to be, very soon, one of the strongest churches in the state. It was planted as a mission only a few years ago. C. A. Lowe is a real leader, and the Lord is rewarding his efforts.

Bible School Aims in the Empire State.

The Bible schools of the Empire State have the following definite aims before them for the current year:

1. That teacher training classes be organized in all our schools.
2. That particular attention be given to the organization of Adult classes.
3. As a Centennial aim, if the combined offerings of the schools warrant, that a Bible school evangelist be engaged for a series of revivals, expenses to be paid out of this fund.
4. That the work of the Bible schools be made more efficient throughout the state.
5. That the state board assign to the Bible schools one mission, to be supported by them as their living link mission.

These aims, as superintendent, I am trying to have each school attain. Encouraging reports of progress are received from many schools.

Plodding Its Way.

This is the story of a small class plodding its way through. When I came to Rantoul, December last, I found a class with an enrollment of 32, waiting to begin a course in teacher training as soon as I could arrange to begin teaching them. We started January 1. While we had an enrollment of 32, we never had an attendance of more than 22. The class held its interest splendidly for about two months, when our meeting came on, and after it two weeks of quarantine for the scarlet fever. When the class resumed work after these things it had dwindled to about 15. We lost a few more as we went through the year, but 14 took the first examination, 10 took the second, 9 the third. The class of nine graduated with good grades the last of June. I have one or two comments to make as a result of this work:

1. The sifting process is probably inevitable in every class, but the smaller the class becomes the greater the proportionate amount of earnest purpose.
2. Our small class discovered some very good teachers. One good teacher is worth a class.
3. We rushed the work too much. We finished in six months. I would not do that again.
4. The great essential in teaching these classes is drill, drill, drill.
5. Even a small class graduating inspires others to take the work. We now have a nice class taking the course in the regular sessions of the school, which is probably the best place.

Organized Adult Bible Classes.

The following additional list of organized adult Bible classes has been received from the international adult department. A previous list was given in The Christian-Evangelist of August 20. These two lists give all the adult classes among the schools of the Churches of Christ which have reported to the international superintendent of adult department, W. C. Pearce, Chicago, Ill., and have received the international certificate of recognition, up to June 25, 1908. It is hoped that many have reported to Mr. Pearce since that date. Your class may be among those whose enrollment will be reported to us later for publication.

The lists so far, this and the one of August 20, are encouraging, but emphasize the fact that many of our best adult classes are either not yet organized according to the international standard, or being so organized, have not yet reported. Organize and report.

Midweek Prayer-Meeting

By Charles Blanchard.

RIGHT USE OF THE LORD'S DAY.

Topic for Nov. 11.—Rev. 1: 10; Matt. 12:1-13.

John was in the Spirit on the Lord's day, when the Master appeared unto him and gave him a glimpse of the glory of his presence and of his power, and showed unto him things to come. To be in the Spirit is the chief thing. After all, it is the attitude that we have and hold toward the Christ and our fellows that determines the manner in which we are to observe the Lord's day, as in all other things that relate to the Christian life and service. "One man esteemeth one day above another; another esteemeth every day alike. Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind. He that regardeth the day regardeth it unto the Lord; and he that regardeth not the day, regardeth it not to the Lord." (Rom. 14:5, 6.) So it is out attitude to the Lord that gives our observance or non-observance of the Lord's day significance. The old controversy in the early church regarding the keeping of the Sabbath is dismissed by the great Apostle in the language quoted above. He makes it a personal matter between man and his Lord. A little further on in this same chapter he says, as a conclusion of his argument regarding the observance of days and the eating of meats offered to idols: "For the kingdom of God is not meat and drink; but righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Spirit. For he that in these things serveth Christ is acceptable to God and approved of men." The Master's attitude toward the Sabbath may indicate the right use we ought to make of the Lord's day. He was Lord also of the Sabbath. What he did we may safely do. The sanity of the Saviour in all his relations to the society about him is one of the most striking things in his personal ministry. Good sense marked all his intercourse with men. He never was caught napping. He was frank and outspoken, yet never unreasonable. He makes his constant appeal to the scriptures and to the humanities—and invariably puts humanities first. It was this that exasperated the Pharisees. And we have the representatives of this "straightest sect" of the Jews among us still.

The Christian law of the observance of holy days is that they should be made to serve the interests and needs of humanity. Hunger is more holy than any holy day. It is more important to minister to the needs of men than to observe any religious ceremony or keep holy day. His logic is the logic of love, of sound reasoning and good saving sense. "If ye had known what this meaneth, I will have mercy and not sacrifice, ye would not have condemned the guiltless. For the Son of man is Lord even of the Sabbath day." And then to teach a great practical lesson for all time he questioned and answered his own question: "What man shall there be among you, that shall have one sheep, and if it fall into a pit on the Sabbath day, will he not lay hold on it and lift it out? How much, then, is a man better than a sheep? Wherefore it is lawful to do well on the Sabbath day." Against such there can be no reasonable answer. The only reply that could be made was that of unreasoning hatred, as shown in the determination of the Pharisees to put him to death, because he healed the man with the withered hand. The example of Christ is a safe guide for every servant of his or of mankind.

The Church of Christ and Men.

destinies, he grew into the most gigantic figure of the Roman world. Ages make men, and if a materialistic age like this has brought forth a race of Titans, what shall we expect from an age of faith and conquest? Surely then, society shall begin to see clearly and men shall love one another and governments shall serve and there shall be happiness and plenty for all and architecture and music and sculpture and painting and poetry shall burst into their blossom, and "his servants shall serve him," and the prophet's dream shall be fulfilled.

At last, then, we have come to see that this problem of men is rightly conceived only—as all problems are, for that matter—when it is viewed in its relations to that indefinable, unfathomable thing which we call the spiritual growth of the world. We who are but children may not hope to do better at any time perhaps than to cast a glance into its mysterious depths by some real or imaginary flash of light.

CEREAL RELIABILITY.

The Question Answered.

Sufferers from certain ailments where special foods are as important and as necessary as proper medical treatment and guidance, should be absolutely certain of the Cereals and Cereal Products which they use. Foods known as Sanitary Foods and Specialties should receive the most careful consideration before being purchased.

It is a pleasure for this paper to refer our readers to the well and favorably known firm of Farwell and Rhines, of Watertown, New York, who have, for the past thirty years, produced and sold special foods for sufferers from Acid Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Intestinal and Kidney and Liver troubles. Their best known and most widely distributed products—both here and abroad—are "Cresco Flour," and "Special Diatetic Food." These are used for making bread, biscuit, gems, griddle cakes, etc. "Cresco Grits" and "Barley Crystals," two other products of this firm, are dainty and delicious breakfast and desert cereals.

This firm, recognizing the fact that a trial only can prove the full value of such products, will send liberal samples to inquirers who feel the need of such goods.

The following is a letter sent in to Messrs. Farwell & Rhines which shows the grateful appreciation of at least one individual:

"Some four months since we began using your Flour for our boy, afflicted with Diabetes Mellitus. Its use has been attended with most valuable results. We have noticed a marked decrease in the amount of sugar, together with an increase in his weight, he having gained six pounds in the past two months. He is stronger in every way, and we have great hopes of his complete recovery. We think the Flour is just the thing for such cases." Very truly,

The Life, Not an Objective Institution.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

In your issue for August 27, in "Notes and Comments," you take the position that John 3:5 justifies the use of such expressions as "conditions of church membership" and "receiving people into the church," inasmuch as the expression, "kingdom of God," there means the church.

I am convinced that the expression, "kingdom of God," there means the life to which God calls us through Christ, rather than an objective institution.

The idea set forth by Brother Encell is worthy of our most serious and reverent attention. Our religious thinking and speaking is much more church-centered than it is Christ-centered, the man Jesus being very much hidden from view by what is called the church.

The Bible nowhere speaks of baptism as "one of the conditions of entrance into the church." Neither does it encourage the use of such expressions as "joining the church," "coming into the church," "member of the church," "building up the church," "joining our church," "placing my membership in this church," etc., etc.

We very greatly need to get away from this harmful way of thinking and speaking concerning our Christian life and its environs. My heart almost bleeds when I hear even our preachers, our spiritual guides, putting their teaching from the church standpoint so very largely. They work great harm to their people by it. If it seems wise I shall later on point out some of the greatest injuries inflicted thereby. But almost any devoted follower of Jesus can see it for himself if only he stops to think of it.

Imperial, Cal. Ernest Thornquest.

[We can assure our correspondent that we have no sort of sympathy with the tendency too manifest in a large part of the religious world to substitute Churchianity for Christianity. Any doctrine or practice that tends to hide or obscure Christ in the work of saving men is to be deprecated. Joining Christ rather than joining the church is the primary New Testament idea, and it should be kept prominently before those whom we are seeking to win to the Christian life. We must remind our correspondent, however, that there is another extreme just the opposite of that of the ecclesiastics which has the support of a class known as "Liberals," and which minimizes the church as a mere human expedient and regards with indifference the matter of church relationship. We can, according to this theory, establish any kind of an organization with such terms of admission as may seem expedient, and call it the church. We cannot believe that our correspondent is in sympathy with that view of the church. According to the New Testament the church is called "a glorious church," "the pillar and ground of the truth," "the body of Christ," "the bride of Christ," an institution of which it is said that "Christ loved the church and gave himself for it that he might sanctify it, having cleansed it by the washing of water with the Word." Jesus Christ is its builder, and he is yet to fill it and to glorify it.

No doubt the kingdom of God in the passage mentioned does stand for "the life to which God has called us," but also for the church in which that life has objectified or embodied itself, in order to do the work of God in the world, and for its own more complete development. We need not and dare not separate the life to which God calls us, from the Church which God has ordained as the normal expression of that life. By uniting the two—the life and its embodiment—we avoid both the extremes to which we have referred. Every great idea, or truth, or principle, must be embodied before it can accomplish any enduring good for humanity. As Jesus Christ was "God manifest in the flesh," so his church is Christ manifest in society—a new incarnation, as it were. The fact that men enter into this kingdom of God by a birth of water and of the Spirit, shows both its spiritual character and its objective existence.—EDITOR.]

BROWN.

The Central Church of Denver, Colo., is bereaved in the death of our beloved brother, Dr. Leander S. Brown. For twenty-eight years a consecrated minister of the gospel, when that was no longer practicable he took a course in osteopathy and became a successful practitioner in Denver. Born in Wayne county, Ohio, July 5, 1840, he was brought up in Washington county, Pennsylvania, became a student in Pleasant Valley Academy, under L. P. Streator, taught several years in Illinois, entered Bethany College and graduated from that renowned mother of preachers in 1867, and entered immediately on his chosen work of preaching Christ. His work as a minister extended through the states of Illinois, Iowa, Pennsylvania and Colorado. In 1879 he graduated in the New York Homeopathic College, but continued preaching for seventeen years afterward. He was nine years pastor of the Christian church in Plymouth, Pa., and his successful work there is gratefully remembered. It was through old Pennsylvania friends that he was induced to come to Colorado in 1893 and take up the new work in Fort Collins. The church there is a monument to his faithfulness. Brother Brown was a member of the Central when the present pastor came back to this church in 1903. He had been elder and one of the most faithful members. Pastors sometimes complain of the ex-preachers in the membership; there is no complaint of that kind in this case, for we had no more sympathetic friend and helper than Dr. Brown and his equally faithful wife. He had lived long enough and worked long enough to be entitled to claim some exemption from arduous church duties, but no one in the church was more regular in attendance at Bible school, at morning and evening service, at the mid-week and other services. He and his wife were there rain or shine until enfeebled health made it impossible for him. He was brave and independent. It was easy for him to stand alone if need be in defense of the truth. His convictions were firm and fixed. He was naturally conservative. I did not expect him to sympathize with my more liberal interpretation of the gospel but his honesty and sincere desire for the truth was stronger than his conservatism and made him patient and hospitable in the consideration of new ideas. Having earned his confidence I had no truer or more appreciative friend. We miss him. Such men are indeed pillars in the church. All the way along through life his influence was good in the church, in the home, in the community. He was "salt of the earth." Children in the faith all over the land rise up and call him blessed.

LOWRY.

Mrs. Emanuel Lowry died at her home in Gibson City, Ill., on Thursday, Oct. 15, after an illness of two months with typhoid fever. Her age was 71 years. Mrs. Lowry, whose maiden name was Phoebe Colborn, was born in Somerset county, Pa., in 1837, and was married to Emanuel Lowry in 1862. They began their married life in Bethany, West Virginia, where Mr. Lowry attended college, and was also associated with Alexander Campbell in the publication of the Millennial Harbinger. This early association with the fathers of the faith was reflected throughout the lives of Mr. and Mrs. Lowry. Wherever they lived they were among the foremost members of the Church of Christ, upholding it materially and spiritually, and exemplifying in their daily lives the faith they felt. They lived in Eureka, Ill., from 1872 until 1875, when they moved to Gibson City, Ill., where the best years of their lives were spent. In 1907 Mr. Lowry died, after a wearing illness of ten years, during which his devoted wife was his constant attendant. After his death Mrs. Lowry, still in vigorous health, resumed the activities of life, and when attacked by the malady which caused her death was planning a trip to California to visit a son. The last few weeks of her life afforded a marvelous revelation of Christian fortitude and cheerfulness under the severest test that a human being can be subjected to. She had shown to her children every other attribute of the ideal Christian mother; it remained only for her to show them how to die; and this she did with such grace, with such nobility, that the memory of the closing hours of her life will always be treasured as a priceless recollection by those who gathered around her deathbed. She is survived by three sons and one daughter.

Heads Up.

Don't kick and whine,
Just get in line
With the fellows who've grit and pluck.
Don't frown and scowl,
Look glum and growl;
Stop prating about ill-luck.

Lift up your head,
Don't seem half-dead,
Stop wearing a wrinkled face;
Give smiling hope
Sufficient scope,
And joys will come apace.

Out on the man
Whose little span
Is full of grief and gloom;
Always dreary,
Never cheery,
From trundle-bed to tomb.

Give me the chap,
Who, whate'er may hap,
Looks up and is cheerful still;
Who meets a brunt
With a smiling front,
And nerve, and vim and will.

Discouraged?

Discouraged? Let the word and the thought have no place in your life. Manhood is made for better things. The disheartening trials of to-day may be made the means of greater strength and a more satisfactory position on the morrow. Only, they are to be bravely met and conquered, not shirked and cowardly avoided. Even when sorrow comes, behind it may be seen the kind, loving countenance of a Father who wills well to all his children and who gives liberally to all such as ask of him sustaining grace and encouragement.

The vision of the new heaven and the new earth is terrestrial, not celestial. All remedial agencies have as their objective a human world transformed and regenerated. —Bishop Gore.

A very devout Presbyterian clergyman in the Middle West had just married a couple, and, as was his custom, offered a fervent prayer, invoking the divine blessing upon them. As they seemed to be worthy folk and not overburdened with this world's goods, he prayed, among other things, for their material prosperity, and besought the Lord to greatly increase the man's business, laying much stress on this point.

In filling out the blanks it became necessary to ask the man his business, and, to the minister's horror, he said: "I keep a saloon."

In telling the story to his wife afterward the clergyman said that as he wrote down the occupation, he whispered:

"Lord, you needn't answer that prayer." —Philadelphia Public Ledger.

Prompt People.

Work, play, study—whatever it is, take hold at once and finish it squarely; then do the next thing without letting any moments drop between. It is wonderful to see how many hours these prompt people contrive to make of a day; it is as if they pick up the moments that dawdlers lose.

And if you ever find yourself where you have so many things pressing that you hardly know how to begin, let me tell you a secret: Take hold of the very first thing that comes to hand, and you will find the rest all fall into file, and follow after, like a company of well drilled soldiers; and though work may be hard to meet when it charges in a squad, it is easily vanquished if you can bring it into line.

You may have seen the anecdote of the man who was asked how he had accomplished so much in his life. "My father taught me," was the reply, "when I had anything to do, to go and do it." There is the secret, the magic word "now!"

Make sure, however, that what is to be done ought to be done. "Never put off till to-morrow what you can do to-day," is a good proverb, but don't do what you may regret.

Boy (who has been naughty and sent out into the garden to find a switch to punish him with)—Oh, mammy, I couldn't find a switch anywhere, but here's a stone you can throw at me.—Punch.

God's Smile.

A tiny boy, two years old, stood in a ray of sunshine, and said gaily: "Me standing in God's smile, mamma." His mother said: "God grant my darling boy may so live as always to stand in God's smile." Not long after God called the mother, and, like Jochebed, she left her boy to the care of the others. He grew to manhood, and grew in favor with the king, and tried to please him and forgot to put God first. But he was restless and unhappy. God's smile was gone. One day looking over some old relics, he found a paper parcel. Inside was a tiny pair of blue shoes, and a letter in his mother's handwriting: "These shoes were worn by my darling boy when he was two years of age. He stood in a ray of sunlight, saying: 'Me standing in God's smile, mamma. God grant my darling boy may so live as always to stand in God's smile." Through the little shoes and the mother's letter God spoke to him. He saw that he had been standing in the king's smile, and lost God's smile. Confessing his sins and asking forgiveness, he dedicated his life to his mother's God.—Sunday-school Illustrator.

A PRAYER.

We thank thee, Lord, for the glory of the late days and the excellent face of thy sun. We thank thee for good news received. We thank thee for the pleasures we have enjoyed, and for those we have been able to confer. And now, when the clouds gather and the rain impends over our forest and our house, permit us not to be cast down. Let us not lose the savor of past mercies and past pleasures; but like the voice of a bird singing in the rain, let grateful memory survive in the hour of darkness. If there be in front of us any painful duty, strengthen us with the grace of courage; if any act of mercy, teach us tenderness and patience.—Robert Louis Stevenson.

For the Father's eye is on us,
Never off us, still upon us,
Night and day,
Work and pray.
Pray! and work will be completer;
Work and prayer will be the sweeter;
Love! and prayer and work, the fleeter
Will ascend upon their way.
—Dora Greenwell.

I Only Know

My present duty and my Lord's command
To occupy till he come. So at the post
Where He hath set me in his province,
I choose, for one, to meet him face to face,
No faithless servant frightened from my task,
But ready when the Lord of the harvest calls.

The President's Revelation.

The celebration of his fiftieth birthday recalls the incident that while President Roosevelt was holding an open-air reception at Syracuse, a tall negro pushed his way forward through the crowd and eagerly grasped his hand.

"Yo' 'n me war bo'n on the same day, Mistah Roosevelt!" the darky enthusiastically said, his shining black face almost cleft from ear to ear by a grin.

"De-lighted, indeed, to hear it!" warmly responded the President, taking a fresh grip on the black hand and laughing heartily. "So you and I were born on the same day? Well, well!"

"Yo' am fo'ty-seven yeahs old, suh?"

"I am," was the quick answer.

"An' yo war bo'n on Octobah 17, 1858?"

"Yes."

"Ya-as suh," then exclaimed the darky, shaking all over with rapture; "ya-as suh, Mr. Roosevelt, yo' an' me is bofe twins!"

The Full Appreciation of Life.

Surely conversation should be able to draw from character and intellect its finest essence. To have the ability to seize upon some little incident of experience and by the exquisite nicety and humor of a few pithy and striking phrases elevate it to the dignity of easy and tripping conversation, that is a feat to which provincial self-complacency can never attain. The average mind, though, with its limited horizon, seldom, alas! has a craving for a wider view of things. It takes its own way, prefers usual tastes, likes defined and practical pursuits, and looks upon its own narrow path and hemmed in experiences as an ample sufficiency. "How funny you are to read rather than to sew!" was a remark to a woman heard the other day; and what could be more actively in the comic vein to the initiated? Here certainly was ignorance dressed up in costume and whimsically paraded! "I don't know enough to embroider well," was the quick answer, but the reply was too deeply tinged with irony to penetrate the wooden sensibilities of the first spaker. From the first remark one might gather that all knowledge wandered about at large and ready to hand for our easy discernment! If one wishes (and most people do) to know the whole wonder and charm of the world and to gain a region of new images and fresh feelings, to bar the door of it all by refusing to read, to see, and to do is not the most effective step. Very little of the fullness of joy in life springs full grown into our consciousness, and to read and work is, after all, the simplest way to find a more fervent appreciation of life and all it offers. It is not to be wondered at that so many people find the world a dull place, without color and tone, for they themselves are best described by just such adjectives.—The Outlook.

GIRLS WHO MAKE THEIR WAY

Qualified for Success.

Yolanda Klar, a Hungarian girl employed in a New York importing house, takes dictation, keeps books and writes letters in four languages—English, French, German and Hungarian. At present she is also studying Spanish, because she believes there is a bright future for the girl in business who can manage the correspondence of a business house which has trade with the Spanish-American countries.

Miss Klar was educated at the Girls' College in Buda-Pest, taking the business course, which lasts three years and includes, besides stenography and typewriting, bookkeeping, composition and modern languages. Choosing America as the most promising field she came here and studied our business methods for a few weeks, perfecting herself in English. She had no difficulty in obtaining a fine position.

Energy Won.

Martha Overland is an enterprising Norwegian girl who has made her way. To begin with, she spoke all three of the Scandinavian tongues, and to these she added French, German, Spanish and English. She was educated in Norway and came to America immediately on finishing her school course. With boundless energy she longed for the opportunity awaiting American girls. She went to Minnesota and took what seems to be a quick road to success for the business woman—a course in stenography and bookkeeping. Her knowledge of the Scandinavian tongues enabled her to find a situation readily in a business house that has large dealings with the Scandinavians of the Northwest.

Being attracted to the law, she took up the study of it nights, in place of reading novels, and now she has an offer of a very lucrative position with a prominent law firm.

Gained a Reputation.

Hortense Hepner, of New York, is correspondent for a great German commercial enterprise that has branch houses in nearly all the countries of the globe. German by birth and education, she composes and writes better English than three out of four native born Americans do. For seven years she made her talents and industry available on a Spanish trade paper. Obtaining a place in the American Museum of Natural History, she turned into English the reports of Dr. Lumholtz, the German scientist, who for several years made studies among the Indians of Mexico and the Southwest.

In her present position she reads and makes clippings from English, German, French, Italian and other newspapers. She is also a stenographer. So wide has become her reputation for reliability and intelligence that she is frequently employed by professional men for technical and scientific researches in English and foreign languages.

More Than the Ordinary.

Some years ago Ora Lee Fox found herself a girl without any particular future or opportunity in her native town of Leesburg, Va. She tried teaching, but concluded that it did not pay. She entered a commercial school in Baltimore, and before the end of the course was asked to take the place of one of the teachers on account of her general culture, as well as proficiency in the branches she was to teach.

But ambition spurred her to further reaches, and she went to New York as a stenographer. Seeing the big ocean liners going in and out it seemed easy to take the trip to Europe she had always dreamed of, if she could save the money. She found a Frenchman who wished to exchange lessons in his language for lessons in English, and also an Italian who wished to make the same sort of trade. Thus she qualified to be something more than an ordinary stenographer, and became the correspondent in a house that had French and Italian export trade. A part of her work called for the translation of technical marine insurance documents, among them occasionally a French log book. Also she had to keep in touch with the shipping news in the foreign papers. This was the sort of work that paid a good salary, and she was not long in having a bank account that warranted a trip to Europe.

A Quick Voyage.

Clara A. Grace, an employee of a London business firm, claims to have made a record trip from London to New York and return. She was pledged to be back in the English city on a certain day to release her colleagues for vacation. She made the round trip in fifteen days. She transacted some important business in New York, remaining in the city only twenty-five minutes.

For Clean Speech.

The person who tells a foul story is no better than the one who would put poison in a well. And yet there are many of them going about. Perhaps the lowering of the moral tone in current fiction is responsible for it. Ask the bookseller what is his best selling piece of fiction, and he is quite likely to mention the title of a book whose morality is low. And there is a lot of that kind of foul stuff on the market; and people of respectability read it. Otherwise there would be no sale for that type of literature, and it would disappear because it would have no commercial value.

It is easy to pass from the reading of a story of loose morality to the telling of one. So it has come to pass that there is a good deal of retailing of incidents of questionable moral quality. If it is demoralizing to read a bad story, it is doubly foul to tell one. For when a person does the former his self-respect is impaired, but when he does the latter he has administered poison to every person who hears him. A life may be blighted by the recital of a foul tale, and no man ought to be willing to pay that price for the fun of telling one.

But what's to be done! Two things every person can and ought to do in regard to this matter:

First. Never tell a foul story.

Second. Never allow one to be told in your presence.

The old incident about General Grant's treatment of a teller of evil stories comes to mind. He was one of a party of gentlemen who were conversing together. One of the men had a story to tell, and communicated his desire to the others. "Are there any ladies here?" said the man, knowing that the story he intended to tell was not fit to fall upon the ears of women. "No," said Grant, "but there are gentlemen present." And the taciturn general was right. A story that is not fit for the ears of women can not be proper for the ears of men.

This brings to mind a word of personal testimony from Mr. James L. Houghteling, president of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. He said: "After the change that came upon me in my senior year, when I came back to college, the men used to gather round the open fire. One evening somebody started a 'smutty' story. I got up and went out. Next evening we gathered again, and somebody cracked a 'smutty' joke. I got up and went out. The third time when it happened, somebody said, 'What is the matter with you, Jim?' "Well,' said I, 'I can't stand that sort of thing. It is bad for me, and is bad for all of us. It is unmanly, and it is un-Christian, and I am going to get out.' And the smallest, most insignificant man in the party said, "Jim's got religion.' And the biggest, manliest fellow

Charcoal Removes Stomach Poisons

Pure Charcoal Will Absorb One Hundred Times Its Volume In Poisonous Gases.

Charcoal was made famous by the old monks of Spain, who cured all manner of stomach, liver, blood and bowel troubles by this simple remedy.

One little nervous Frenchman held forth its virtues before a famous convention of European physicians and surgeons. Secheyron was his name. He was odd, quaint and very determined. His brothers in medicine laughed at his claims. Thereupon he swallowed two grains of strychnine, enough to kill three men, and ate some charcoal. The doctors thought him mad, but he did not even have to go to bed. The charcoal killed the effects of the strychnine and Secheyron was famous. Ever since that day physicians have used it. Run impure water through charcoal and you have a pure, delicious drink.

Bad breath, gastritis, bowel gases, torpid liver, impure blood, etc., give way before the action of charcoal.

It is really a wonderful adjunct to nature and is a most inexhaustible storehouse of health to the man or woman who suffers from gases or impurities of any kind.

Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges are made of pure willow charcoal, sweetened to a palatable state with honey.

Two or three of them cure an ordinary case of bad breath. They should be used after every meal, especially if one's breath is prone to be impure.

These little lozenges have nothing to do with medicine. They are just sweet, fresh willow, burned to a nicety for charcoal making and fragrant honey, the product of the bee. Thus every ingredient comes to man from the lap of nature.

The only secret lies in the Stuart process of compressing these simple substances into a hard tablet or lozenge, so that age, evaporation or decay may not assail their curative qualities.

You may take as many of them as you wish, and the more you take the quicker will you remove the effects of bad breath and impurities arising from a decayed or decaying meal. They assist digestion, purify the blood and help the intestines and bowels throw off all waste matter.

Go to your druggist at once and buy a package of Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges, price 25 cents. You will soon be told by your friends that your breath is not as bad as it was. Send us your name and address and we will send you a trial package by mail free. Address F. A. Stuart Co., 200 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

in the crowd said, 'Shut up!' And never through all the rest of my college course did I hear an unclean thing said in that room. My life shall be a challenge, not a truce."

Keep thy tongue from evil, says the psalmist and philosopher of the olden time; and by the side of his wise word let us place these from wise men of more modern times: Nothing is so contagious as example. It lets loose in our lives those bad actions which shame would have kept imprisoned. Therefore, tempt not contagion by proximity, and hazard not thyself in the shadow of corruption. Or, to use the words the great apostle addressed to those who were in danger of being drawn away from the true faith to the corrupting influences of idolatry: "Come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing."—Epworth Herald.

Looking at the Best Things

By Priscilla Leonard

"My little girl has taught me one thing," said a young mother the other day. "She picks out the prettiest thing she can find to look at, and then she looks at it and doesn't notice the ugly things. The Evanses next door keep their porch in a condition that just depresses me—it's so cluttered up. But they have some fine geraniums growing in tomato cans, and my little Clara thinks they are beautiful. She hangs over the fence and looks at them, and Mrs. Evans is so pleased at the child's appreciation that she has actually tidied up the porch once or twice, and Mr. Evans has painted the cans green. I never could have gotten them to do that, because I looked at their porch and was depressed. Clara has done it because she looked at their geraniums and was delighted."

There was sound philosophy in this bit of experience. The souls that have power, in this world, are the souls that see the right thing—the key to the situation. And as we only see what we look at, our powers in life are strictly proportioned to the way we look at life and the things we fix our eyes upon as we go along. No soul is ever powerless or discouraged except through having looked, momentarily or steadily, at the unessential and misleading things. To see life truly is to be a "seer," with the knowledge which is power.

Pessimist and optimist have perhaps never been more wittily defined than by the familiar stanza—

> "'Twixt optimist and pessimist
> The difference is droll—
> The former sees the doughnut,
> The latter sees the hole."

And the point of the wit is that both doughnut and hole are there to see, plain to every eye. The optimist sees the hole, but only as an unimportant incidental to the very form of the doughnut. But the pessimist, by concentrating his vision on the hole, misses its place and use, and exalts it into a dread, gloomy and universal vacuum. Each has an argument—a logical argument—but the eye judges between them in the end. The pessimist's eye can not be argued down, and it makes him miserable as long as he refuses to look at anything pleasant or beautiful.

In every field of vision, one may as well admit, there are extremely ugly things included in the view. No one who has lived to years of discretion but has seen many things which he or she would be glad to forget. No intelligent man or woman believes that all men can be trusted, all women admired, or any ideal fully carried out in earthly surroundings. Almost every apple is specked, and every family has a skeleton, even if it no longer has a closet. Total depravity is still with us, even if conviction of sin has become rare. The world is full of evil and pain and defeat. But that is the worst part of the world. That is the trouble with it—its negative side, its dark background, its hole in the doughnut. The doughnut remains, around the hole, just the same. The good, the beautiful and the true, in large, though not complete measure, exist in every man's environment. There are men who can be trusted, women who are good and lovely and loving, ideals that lift the soul toward their realization in a larger life. Total depravity has been redeemed and regenerated in every case willing to throw itself on God. To overcome evil with good is the trend of the universe, and every star in the highest heaven stands ready to have a wagon hitched to it by the humblest individual who picks it out and keeps his eye upon it. People who look at stars may tumble into ditches sometimes, but they climb out and ahead, and never see the worst of the mud at all.

There is always a choice of vision, too, even among pleasant things. "I could not live if it were not for my dog!" said a lonely woman in whose little house a handsome, lively spaniel reigned supreme. The dog was a beautiful thing to look at, and his devotion was beautiful, too, to see. But if that very woman had looked over into the next street, she would have found neglected children into whose eyes the same devotion would have sprung, and the same welcome, if she had looked at them and helped them. It is a pitiful thing to see human beings find intimacy with pets more lovely than intercourse with human souls. They are looking at the second-best things instead of the best; and to look at the best things is the secret of true living.

As we look at the best things, loving and following them, power enters into us from them—a power not our own, but given to our use. It has been found in even the primary schools that a "gem" of lovely verse taught to a little child keeps that child from temptation and unhappiness in a most surprising way. "I said my gem over, and everything went right," said one boy to his teacher after an experience of injustice. Our schoolrooms bring to children nowadays the help of the highest art, in picture and statue; and the children look with all their eyes, and study the better for it. A noble book kept before the eye of the mind makes life a transformed thing to the soul's vision. What we look at, that we become. "As seeing him who is invisible" is the story of that great army of the saints, the martyrs, the heroes, which marches down the ages to the eternal goal—and which we can join if we choose.—Interior.

Are You Critical?

Do any of us women realize how much of our ordinary talk consists of criticism? There is no doubt that it is interesting to watch people to study their characters and ways, and to communicate our impressions about them to others. Take away the element of personal criticism, and conversation, one must admit, would lose a good deal of its interest. Yet it is not a little disturbing sometimes to reflect, after leaving a house where you have been entertained for half an hour by sprightly and witty comments on mutual acquaintances, that in all probability your own personality is furnishing the text for a similar entertainment with the next group of callers. After all, it is better to be kindly than amusing. It is better to pass over a good deal that does not quite commend itself to us (so long as no principle is involved) than to be always making a fight for one's own way of doing things at the cost of friction and disagreement.—Christian Guardian.

Do You Hear Well?

The Stolz Electrophone—A New, Scientific and Practical Invention for Those Who Are Deaf or Partially Deaf—May Now be Tested in Your Own Home.

Deaf or partially deaf people may now make a month's trial of the Stolz Electrophone at home. This is unusually important news for the deaf, for by this plan the final selection of the one completely satisfactory hearing aid is made easy and inexpensive for everyone.

Mrs. C. Lidecka, 238 12th Ave., Maywood, Ill., wears an Electrophone. Less conspicuous than eyeglasses.

This new invention (U. S. Patent No. 763,575) renders unnecessary such clumsy, unsightly and frequently harmful devices as trumpets, horns, tubes, ear drums, fans, etc. It is a tiny electric telephone that fits on the ear, and which, the instant it is applied, magnifies the sound waves in such manner as to cause an astonishing increase in the clearness of all sounds. It overcomes the buzzing and roaring ear noises, and also so constantly and electrically exercises the vital parts of the ear that, usually, the natural, unaided hearing itself is gradually restored.

Prominent Business Man's Opinion

STOLZ ELECTROPHONE CO., Chicago.—I am pleased to say that the Electrophone is very satisfactory. Being small in size and great in hearing qualities makes it PREFERABLE TO ANY I HAVE TRIED, and I believe I have tried all of them. I can recommend it to all persons who have defective hearing.—M. W. "I Don't Want To."

Whenever Jim was asked to run an errand or do any little thing, he would say: "I don't want to."

One night he brought a book to mamma, who was busy knitting, saying: "Mamma, read me a little story."

His mamma wanted to teach him a lesson, and said: "I don't want to."

Next day Jim went to his papa with a broken whip. "Papa, please mend my whip."

"I don't want to," said his papa.

At this the little fellow began to cry. Then his mamma put her arms around him and told him they were trying to teach him how wrong it was for him to say, "I don't want to," when he was asked to oblige others.

Jim saw the lesson intended, and the next day, when mamma asked him to hand her a drink of water, he ran immediately and brought it to her. He saw that he must oblige others if he would have others oblige and love him.—Exchange.

Growing Pains.

Last night, in bed, I thought I'd grown
An inch or two or more,
With growing pains, but I must own
My height's just as before,
I measured by the door.

Now, if a little boy complains,
When in the morning light,
He finds, though he's had growing pains,
He hasn't grown a mite,
Would you condemn him quite?

The Two Pigs

Henry had a whole bunch of bananas, a hundred of them, all for himself. The captain of the Henrietta gave them to him the day the ship came in when he and his father went down to ask after the cargo, for his father owned the big boat. Captain laughed a tremendous laugh when Henry put his arms around the big bunch and asked ecstatically, "All for me?" "All for you," he replied. Eat them all up before I come back, and you shall have another." And Henry said, "Yes, sir; I'll try, sir," and did not even wonder why the captain and his father laughed harder than ever.

The bananas were hung in the cellar to ripen, and every day Henry went down to look at them and pinch them to hurry them up. At last two turned yellow, and he joyfully brought them upstairs.

"But you must promise not to eat more than three a day, or else it will have to be my bunch of bananas," his mother said.

"Oh, no!" Henry exclaimed. It is my bunch; all my own, the captain said, and nobody can pick them but me!"

"Well," his mother replied, "then remember, only three a day."

They turned yellow very slowly; there never seemed to be more than enough for Henry. Every morning he went down into the cellar and came up with one, and ate it for his breakfast, and then two more somehow turned ripe enough to eat later on, but only one was ready in the morning. Sometimes James, his big brother, would look at Henry as he ate it, and say, sighing heavily:

"I am exceedingly fond of fruit myself. Don't you think if I went down cellar I would be able to find one more banana that is fit to eat? How many are there left on the stalk? What, only eighty-five? Well, if that is all, I would not think of robbing you; still—"

"When they begin to ripen faster, I am sure he will want to divide with us all," said his mother encouragingly, but Henry looked silently down into his plate. He was very fond of bananas.

Mr. Henderson's pig, Jacob, lived just over the fence at the bottom of the garden. Such a clean, fat, cheerful pig as he was! Henry loved to lean over the pickets and poke his sides with a stick and feed him the little green, wormy apples no one else cared to eat. One day it occurred to him to wonder whether pigs liked bananas, so he broke off a piece from one he was eating and passed it over the fence, and Jacob seized it eagerly and grunted with delight.

"If I had more than just three a day I'd give you a whole one," said Henry, "but three a day is such a few." Jacob listened with his head on one side and looked hungry.

The bananas began to ripen fast now; Henry did not have to pinch them to make them soft, and he worried a little for fear more than three a day would be ready to eat. Once his mother went down and saw how yellow the bunch were turning, and asked: "Don't you want to pick off enough for every one for breakfast to-morrow? You have so many, you know, and they will surely spoil." Henry looked serious.

"But Captain Hicks gave them all to me," he said. "He wanted me to eat them all myself; I don't believe he'd like it if I gave any away."

His mother was very sober. "You surely do not mean that you are going to eat them all yourself," she said. "That would be too selfish." Henry looked doubtfully at her.

"I'll give you one," he said, after a minute. He walked over to the bunch and examined it. There was a small brown banana tucked in between two others. His mother had said she liked them thoroughly ripe, so he picked this one off and gave it to her. She turned it over silently and looked at it. Henry felt a little hot. "Thank you," she said at last; "it's kind of you to give me the very nicest one." Then she went upstairs. Presently Henry went out to talk it over with Jacob.

"They all think I'm selfish," he whispered, "but I'm not at all. It's only that the captain would be angry if I gave them away when he said they were for me. Besides there aren't very many left, not more than sixty or seventy, and they would not last any time at all if I gave papa and mamma and James and Bridget one apiece every little while." Jacob looked sympathetic. Henry talked to him a long time and felt better; then he fed him the green apples lying on the grass until he was tired picking them up. "You're an old greedy," he said at last. "You're a regular—pig!" Then he laughed and turned to speak to Bridget, who was coming toward him.

"Ah, now," she said coaxingly, "I want you to give me a few of those fine bananas of yours for supper, for my apple sauce is all burned up. Come now, and I'll bake you a cake come Wednesday," Henry shook his head.

"I can't," he said, firmly. "There aren't enough ripe to cut up, and still leave three for me to-morrow. You hadn't ought to have burned up the apple sauce, Bridget."

Bridget went into the house, muttering to herself. There was nothing to eat with the sponge cake at supper, for, as mother explained, the apple sauce had met with an accident.

"Sliced bananas are not bad," said James, soberly. "Not bad at all; and with eighty—or is it ninety to-day, Henry?—already in the house one would think we might have a few."

His mother shook her head at him, but Henry saw her eyes twinkle, and James had to cough very hard in his napkin to keep from laughing. It was very uncomfortable. But they were going so fast! If only he could have more than three a day! How many times did three go into seventy, anyway? What if they did spoil before all those days were over? If they did it would be all his mother's fault for letting him have so few. He looked resentfully across at her, and slid down from his seat and went down into the cellar.

The bunch was nearly all turned now; there was hardly a green banana to be seen. Some of them were spotted with brown, and a good many were brown all over. He pushed his hands down in his pockets and thought about the matter. Perhaps he would better give away a few. He broke off four of the darkest ones and carried them upstairs. "You can have these for breakfast, Bridget," he said, laying them on the kitchen table. But Bridget was still cross.

'Is it them old black ones you'd be giving me?" she asked, with a toss of her head. "Sure, you can take them out to the pig, then."

Henry's feelings were hurt. He gathered them up, and went outdoors. They were too nice to give to Jacob, but he was afraid to offer them to James or his mother for fear they would think them overripe, too. He had had his three already that day; besides, he didn't want them. He was getting a little tired of bananas. Finally he handed them to a ragged boy that was passing and after looking them over suspiciously the boy threw three away and ate the fourth. Henry's heart swelled painfully as he went in the house.

The next day there was a school picnic, and Henry took the basket Bridget gave him, and then went down for his three bananas. He counted them, and was alarmed; so many left, and all so soft! He was sorry now he had not let the family have some every day. What should he do with them? He could never finish them before they all turned black. If the captain never gave him any more, he would not care. Somehow they had not tasted very good lately. He would tell his mother she might have the rest. He went upstairs slowly.

"Mother," he said, feeling very generous, "I guess you can have all the rest of the bananas to cut up."

His mother smiled. "O, no," she said. "I think you may finish the bunch yourself, but as I am afraid they may spoil before they are eaten if you have only three a day, you may eat six now; six every single day!"

Henry felt a distinct hatred for the bananas. Six a day! He could never, never eat them. He felt sick all over as he thought about it. He turned away without a word. Just as he passed the sitting room door he heard James say:

"The banana cure for greediness seems to be working all right, doesn't it?" and then he laughed.

Henry walked on. He was not sure he understood what James meant but he was afraid he did.

The cellar was to be whitewashed that day, and Bridget brought the tubs and boxes and fruit cans all up on the back porch, and laid the bunch of bananas on the bench. She was very busy, so she never saw Jacob when he crept through a broken rail and stole softly up to the house. There he found the bananas, and with soft grunts of delight he began at one end of the bunch and ate right down to the other end. When Henry came home his mother told him about it, and every single banana was gone; and she was not much surprised when he never said a word.

At supper James asked: "How many bananas left to-day, Henry?"

"Not one," said Henry, eating bread and butter very fast. "The pig ate them all up."

"Really?" asked James with interest. "Which pig?"—Ex.

Edgar's Soldier Lesson.

Really it was too bad. Edgar was going out to play soldier. He slipped on the steps and twisted his ankle.

"My little lad must go to bed and get well," said Mamma Gates.

"Boo-hoo!" howled Eddy.

Uncle Caspar looked up from his paper and smiled.

"I don't want to go to bed. I want to go and be a soldier," soobed poor Edgar.

"But if your ankle is not bathed and put to bed, you will be very lame to-morrow."

"I don't care," whined Eddy. "I don't want to go to bed."

"I thought you were playing soldier," said Uncle Caspar. "What does a soldier do?"

Edgar looked up, puzzled. "He marches and he drums." Eddy looked at his drum and began to cry again.

"Is that all he does?"

"He doesn't have to go to bed," whined Eddy.

"But sometimes he gets hurt badly. He is shot in battle. Then what does he do? Does he howl and cry?"

Now, Uncle Caspar was an old soldier whom Eddy admired very much.

"No-o-o! I guess not. I don't know," said the boy.

"No. He goes to the hospital. There he is as brave as when he drums and marches."

Edgar wiped his eyes and looked eagerly at his uncle. "Is going to bed and not crying being a soldier?" he asked.

"Yes, my boy, that is the bravest part of it. Now let me be the ambulance—that's a wagon you know—and take you to the hospital."

Uncle Caspar picked up Eddy in his arms and carried him gently to his chamber.

"Now I'm going to be a good soldier," said the boy, with a smile. He did not wince when his uncle felt the sore ankle and bound it up.

"That's a brave lad, Eddy," said his uncle. "Now play it does not hurt, and go to sleep."

Half an hour later Eddy was dreaming. He looked like a brave little corporal taking his rest.

Uncle Caspar hung up Eddy's flag and gun where he could see them when he awoke. The drum with the soldier cap upon it was placed on the bed. Edgar limped downstairs the next day, and went into camp on the sofa. He whined and complained no longer. He had learned a lesson, that a brave man is patient in suffering.—Little men and Women.

Boys and Their Mothers.

Some one has written beautifully to the boys in the following manner. Here is a whole sermon in a few sentences:

"Of all the love affairs of the world, none can surpass the true love of the big boy for his mother. It is pure and noble, honorable in the highest degree to both. I do not mean merely a dutiful affection. I mean a love which makes a boy gallant and courteous to his mother, saying to everybody plainly that he is fairly in love with her. Next to the love of a husband, nothing so crowns a woman's life with honor as this second love, this devotion of a son to her. And I never yet knew a boy to 'turn out' badly who began by falling in love with his mother. Any man may fall in love with a fresh-faced girl, and the man who is gallant with the girl may cruelly neglect the worn and weary wife. But the boy who is a lover of his mother in her middle age is a true knight who will love his wife as much in the sere-leaved autumn as he did in the daisied springtime."—Church Advocate.

St. Louis, Mo.

Dear Sirs:—

I received your letter and blank for three months' club offer. In three hours' work I had the blank filled, and sent it back. I am sending another list of nineteen names, all outside of the Christian Church, except one. I will try to get more.

I am fifty-two years old, and do all my housework, yet I feel I must do something to show our appreciation of The Christian-Evangelist, and the noble stand it takes for the union of all God's children on the Bible, the only stand we can take to fulfill Christ's prayer.

My husband and myself have been close readers of the paper for twenty-two years, and can't think of doing without its regular visits at our home.

Our prayer has been going up for that grand old soldier that occupies the Easy Chair; may the Lord spare him a few more years, to paint those beautiful picture of the Christ, and the Christ life, from God's Word, and also from nature.

Yours in the faith,

MRS. ALICE MIKEWORTH.

"GO THOU AND DO LIKEWISE," is not only a scriptural admonition, but one entirely appropriate in this connection.

We believe the circulation of The Christian-Evangelist can be doubled in ten days.

The Election.

Our readers have heard about it. We need not, therefore, go into details. The result was a surprise to both parties—to one in being defeated, and to the other in the magnitude of its success. Never were the forecasters more discredited. The campaign was peculiar in this, that no very definite issue was joined between the two leading parties. The issue turned at last upon the question as to whether the election of Mr. Bryan or Mr. Taft would be best for the business interests of the country. Laboring men as well as corporations were interested in this question, because employment and good wages are inseparably bound up with prosperity. Rightly or wrongly the people have decided in favor of Mr. Taft, dreading, perhaps, any change that might come from putting a new party in power. It is creditable to the defeated party that they have accepted the result in good faith, as good Americans always do, and that the country is settling down rapidly to its normal condition. Mr. Bryan has accepted his defeat in his usual good grace, and will remain the distinguished and honored American citizen that he has been for many years.

Moral Issues.

In some of the states the moral issues were those upon which the result of the election turned. It is gratifying that the race track gamblers and bookmakers did not succeed in defeating Governor Hughes in New York City. In Ohio and Indiana there is little doubt that the temperance issue was the controlling factor, and the candidates for governor in those states whose fortunes were bound up with local option were defeated, and their defeat is attributed by the daily press to their opposition to the whisky traffic. In Missouri the defeat of Governor Folk, candidate for the United States Senate, by Senator Stone in the primary election of nominee for the nomination, is a matter of regret with those who heartily supported the administration of Governor Folk, and who believed he had earned the right to still greater political distinction. The election of Mr. Hadley, Republican candidate for Governor in Missouri, and the carrying of the state by Mr. Taft, were some of the unlooked for results of the election. Perhaps in no election in the history of this country has there been more scratching of ballots than in the one just held, and this means an increase in the independent voters of the country.

Japan's Welcome to Our Fleet.

In the excitement over the election there is danger that the American people may overlook the significance of the warm, and even effusive welcome which Japan extended to our fleet on its arrival there recently. The newspapers for some time have been talking of the possibility of war with Japan, and one of our naval heroes had expressed very decided convictions on that subject. Nor can it be denied that there was some friction between the two countries not long since, growing out of our laws concerning Japanese immigration. It was never so serious, however, as it was sometimes represented to be, but the hearty welcome of official Japan, and of the people generally, to our fleet, and the mutual expressions of good will between the two countries will do much to remove whatever feeling may have remained from the episode referred to, and to cement the bonds of unity between these two nations. If, now, Japan and the United States can use their united influence to prevent the dismemberment of China and to promote her advancement, their friendship and co-operation will mean much for the future of that great empire.

Liberty of Conscience.

President Roosevelt has written a letter in reply to one received before the election inquiring the religion of Mr. Taft and his family. The President makes it the occasion of giving a lesson on religious freedom in this country. Among other things he says:

"The demand for a statement of a candidate's religious belief can have no meaning except that there may be discrimination for or against him because of that belief. Discrimination against the holder of one faith means retaliatory discrimination against men of other faiths. The inevitable result of entering upon such a practice would be an abandonment of our real freedom of conscience and a reversion to the dreadful conditions of religious dissension, which in so many lands have proved fatal to true liberty, to true religion and to all advance in civilization. To discriminate against a thoroughly upright citizen because he belongs to some particular church, or because, like Abraham Lincoln, he has not avowed his allegiance to any church, is an outrage against that liberty of conscience which is one of the foundations of American liberty."

The President is right, with this modification. The religious body that uses its political power to advance its ecclesiastical prestige and pretensions, and that furnishes any ground for the belief that its prevalence in politics would mean the restriction of religous liberty, will be repudiated by the American people.

The St. Louis Idea.

The corner stone of the new postoffice building, just east of the Union Station in this city, was laid yesterday. The building is to cost over a million dollars, and is to embody what is called "the St. Louis Idea" in the postal service. It is claimed that this building will be a model for the whole country, and that the first city to follow suit will be the national capital. Mr. Bartholdt, who had much to do in securing the appropriation for the building, in his address explained that, with the modern system of substations and mail cars, it is no longer necessary in large cities to locate the main postoffice building in the heart of the business district. "As a distributing station," he says, "its proper location is in close proximity to the railroad depot, not only because land is usually cheaper there, but mainly because a great deal of time will be saved in the transmission of mails. In place of the present wagon service, both slow and expensive, between the depot and the postoffice, the two will be connected by a subterranean tunnel, so that within five or ten minutes after the arrival of a train a letter can be ready for delivery either by mail car or carrier." Another feature of the St. Louis idea is that a postoffice is a workshop, and the building should not be constructed for show, but for convenience and comfort; that it should be only one or two stories high, with ample ground space, and lighted with glass roofs and well ventilated, and should be devoted exclusively to the postal service. The "idea" seems to have met with general approval throughout the country. A pleasant incident of the corner stone laying was the presence of the great-great grandson of the first postmaster of St. Louis, who participated in the ceremony.

Editorial

Some Demands of the Hour.

Some periods of time are big with destiny. A single year may be a pivotal one in the history of a nation, or of a people. We of this Reformation are facing a grave crisis and a great opportunity. The issues at stake are so important as to sober every thinking mind, and send us all to our knees for divine strength and guidance. Our approaching Centennial is at once our opportunity and our peril. Our opportunity, if we fulfill the obligations that are upon us and perform the tasks which we have set for ourselves; our peril, if we go to that historic occasion with no adequate understanding of the most fundamental principles of the movement whose Centennial we are celebrating, and with no proper appreciation of the duties and obligations which our position imposes upon us. We mention a few of the imperative demands of the hour.

1. Appreciation is one of the demands of the times. If we have no adequate appreciation of our place, as a religious movement, in the history of the world, or of the meaning and value of the distinctive position which God has given us to occupy, how can we fulfill those obligations and perform those tasks which will make our Centennial worth while? Indeed, why should we celebrate the centenary of a movement whose providential mission in the world has not mastered us? Let us renew our love for the plea our fathers made for a united church, in order to the conversion of the world—a union based, not on compromises or humanly-devised platforms, but upon the simple Christianity of the New Testament, and upon the original foundation on which the Church was built.

2. A second demand of the hour is humility. We can not thoughtfully contemplate the greatness of the truths which God has committed to our hands, and the opportunities He has given us to propagate and establish those truths, without feeling that, had we been more worthy servants, more faithful agents in carrying out his will, the Cause we love might have been more widely extended than it is, and less hampered by prejudices and misunderstandings which, perhaps, our own faults and extremes have helped to foster. Who are we that we should have been put in trust with so sacred a cause as that of leading in a movement to restore to the Church its lost unity? This reflection should humble us in the dust, lead us to a confession of our unworthiness, and to renewed consecration to Him who hath called us with so holy a calling. "Where is boasting? It is excluded." We have nothing to glory in, save the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the truth which He has given us, both to teach and to practice.

3. Another demand of the hour is vision. We must have eyes to see the open doors of opportunity about us, and to understand the meaning of God's providence in the times in which we live. God speaks to His people in the unfolding events of history, and if they are able to understand the signs of the times, they may know his will under any given set of conditions which may arise, and act with wisdom. Unless we have eyes to see what God is doing in our day for the union of his people and for the conversion of the world, how can we adjust ourselves to these modern movements in the Church, so as to advance the very cause which it is our mission to promote?

4. We must have unity among ourselves. On the eve of a great naval conflict, Lord Nelson, approaching two of his subordinate officers who were quarreling, placed their hands together in his, and pointing to the hostile fleet, said: "Yonder is your enemy; be friends." Our great Leader is saying to us to-day, as he points to the allied forces of evil, and to the abominations of heathenism, "Yonder are your enemies; be ye friends and brothers." Is he not, also, pointing to our approaching Centennial and saying to us, "Yonder is your opportunity of emphasizing your message to the world; close up your broken columns, and present a united front to the world"? To obey this divine mandate, which is as real as if we could hear it ringing down out of the skies, we must avoid extreme positions, avoid occasions of offense, as far as possible, and study the things that make for peace. We must not think more highly of ourselves, nor of our opinions, than we ought to think, but each look upon the things of others rather than upon the things of his own. We must believe in the possibility of being mistaken ourselves. We must think more of unity than of having our own way. We must allow others the liberty which we ourselves exercise, and attribute to them the honesty of motive which we claim for ourselves.

Of course, we might mention the need of heroism, a deeper devotion, larger liberality, more of the spirit of sacrifice, an increased zeal for the world's conversion, and a more hearty support of our missionary organizations; but these may be taken for granted, and will come, in their time, if the demands which we have mentioned above are met by us. The appreciation of our Cause and of our day and opportunity; the humility which distrusts our own ability and fitness, and seeks divine strength and guidance; the vision which can read God's handwriting in the events of our day, and can discern the signs of the times, together with the unity among ourselves, which can only result from a more vital union with Jesus Christ—if these virtues be in us and abound, they will bring in their train all other needed graces and virtues, and enable us to meet worthily, and to the glory of God, the duties and responsibilities of this historic year of our movement.

A New Step Toward Unity.

On the second day of December next, in the city of Philadelphia, that is, of "Brotherly Love"—auspicious name!—there will convene the most remarkable assembly in the history of Protestant Christianity. It is not too much to say that it will mark a new epoch in religious history. It will be the first meeting of the "Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America." This Council was provided for three years ago, in a conference held in the city of New York, composed of representatives of these various Protestant bodies, which met to devise a plan by which they could manifest to the world such unity as they had already attained, and co-operate, as far as practicable, for the advancement of the kingdom of God. The delegates from the various religious bodies are to meet on the second of December next, in the first Federal Council. The Independent, referring to this meeting, says:

"From that day of meeting there will be one Protestant Church of Christ in the United States, separated into denominations, it is true, but vitally one, meeting in a Council without legislative or judicial authority, but carrying a tremendous weight of influence and power. Thus united, these churches can and should control the sentiment of the country, for they represent the bulk of its population."

The Independent does not mean that the unity between these co-operating Christian bodies is ideally and scripturally complete. At least, if The Independent does so believe, we would be compelled to join issue with it. We believe that the union for which Christ prayed is something more vital and complete than anything that has yet been attained, or that will be manifested in the meeting at Philadelphia. But what a glorious step forward it is when Protestant Christians can meet together, through their representatives, under the common name of "Churches of Christ," and plan to work together as brothers in carrying forward the great moral reforms of the age, and becoming better acquainted with each other and so cementing the ties that make for a more perfect union! Fear has been expressed by many of our own brethren that this Council of churches, co-operating along many lines of work, will prove an obstacle to that complete unity for which we have been pleading for nearly a century. While we do not see that this can be possible, we would do well to study carefully its tendency and, as far as in us lies, hold up Jesus' own ideal of unity as the one towards which we must continue to strive as the true goal of all our efforts.

The question doubtless will be raised by some as to what good will be accomplished by this great assembly of Protestant Christians. The very fact of our meeting together under the common banner of Christ, with the view of promoting greater unity, will have a tremendous effect upon the world. The mutual acquaintanceship which will grow out of this mingling together will remove misunderstandings, diminish prejudice, and so tend to promote unity. These things would be worth while, if there were nothing else. But there will be vastly more than that. The delegates, of which there will be, perhaps, four hundred from the several co-operating bodies, including about thirty of our own members, have been divided into large committees to study and report upon various questions of common interest. One committee will report on Home Missions, another on Foreign Missions, another on Religious Education, another on Temperance, and still others on the Labor Problem, the Immigrant Problem, and the problem of Lord's day Observance. It is easy to imagine what new instruction and inspiration will come from these carefully prepared reports, and the discussions which they will elicit.

We have had no little discussion among ourselves on what was called federation, but let us hope that that period has passed. Let as many of us as can do so go to Philadelphia, aside from those appointed as delegates, to study the meaning and spirit of the great assembly, and in so far as it falls in line with our great providential mission, as advocates of Christian union, let us heartily co-operate with it. In so far as it may be found to cherish and promote ideals contrary to Christ's ideal of unity, let us bring our influence to bear, unitedly, against these errors. We are sure most of the controversy of the past grew out of misunderstanding, but we doubt not that, back of it, was a zeal for fidelity to our great providential mission. In so far as that was true, controversy will now give place to investigation, and we shall work together as original advocates of unity, with our brethren of other Protestant bodies who have more recently become imbued with the spirit of unity, for the furtherance of our common aims and ends, just so far as we may be able to do so without sacrificing our own ideals and principles, and no farther.

Nothing, we believe, would do more to invigorate our brotherhood, and put them in a proper attitude for our great Centennial celebration, than for them to go in large numbers to Philadelphia, and hear the chief men of all these Protestant bodies praying and pleading for the very ideals for which our fathers stood in the early days when it cost them the forfeiture of fellowship in their churches, and religious ostracism, to do so. It will give us a higher appreciation of the value of our own movement, and a better understanding of how we may best promote its success. We can not intelligently plead for union to-day without a correct understanding of the spirit and attitude of the religious forces of our day towards the subject of unity. They, too, should have a better knowledge of what we propose and of our spirit. This information on both sides can be secured in no other way so successfully as in the kind of co-operation provided for in this council of churches.

Notes and Comments

V. B. Kerr, a Baptist, writing from Virginia, wishes to know what it is that keeps apart the Baptists and Disciples of Christ. "Is it," he asks, "only the name, and what baptism is for, that keeps them apart? I think union can be made by agreement to take the name 'Christian' and let each member believe that forgiveness is before or after baptism as he understands the Bible to teach." We think the chief thing that keeps these two bodies of Christians apart is a misunderstanding of each other's position, and the prejudice which has resulted from this fact. True, there are some differences of opinion on doctrinal questions as there are among the members of both bodies, but these differences are not such as to justify division among the people of God. We join with this Baptist brother in his desire that these two peoples shall be one. But we must prepare the way for it.

We have all heard of the man who was so fond of peace that he was willing to fight for it. His position was consistency itself compared with another class, of which a letter before us speaks, saying: "There are some of our good brethren so loyal to the grand old plea of Christian union that they are willing to split the brotherhood over it." These good brethren who act thus have momentarily forgotten that our plea is for Christian union, in the hot pursuit of some favorite opinion. When they have time to think soberly and righteously they will right-up, and cease chasing any hobby or idea that threatens disintegration.

The papers report a great revival of prosperity throughout the country. Let us hope that this means a revival of increased activity and liberality in the Lord's work. What is material success for, except as a scaffolding for the spiritual building?

The Christian Century on its first page announces that "In response to a multitude of requests Professor Willett has agreed to make a personal statement of his convictions with respect to the matters entering into the current controversy." A preliminary statement appears in the same issue of the paper containing this announcement, in which Brother Willett sets forth his purpose in writing these articles. It is not to convince any one of the truth of his convictions, but simply to inform the brethren what these convictions are, and allow them to decide the question, "Is one who holds these views of the Bible and of our history loyal to the Scriptures and to the fathers? Is he worthy of fellowship in the work and worship of the Disciples of Christ?" We are glad that Professor Willett has decided to make this statement, which he calls "My Confession of Faith." It is due to Professor Willett, and it is no less due to ourselves and to the Cause we love, to give what he has to say an impartial reading, and to judge his utterances with that fairness with which we desire our own statements to be judged.

We call attention elsewhere to the report of "The New Organization for Men" formed by the committee which was appointed at New Orleans, at its recent meeting in Kansas City, as important news.

The election of R. A. Long as president and of P. C. Macfarlane, of Alameda, Cal., as secretary, who is to devote his time to the work, gives strong assurance of an advance movement in this work. One of the first questions to be decided is whether this organization of the men among us shall be allied with similar organizations in other religious bodies, much as the Christian Endeavor movement, or whether it will have an independent name, form of organization, and rules of procedure peculiar to itself. Of course, there may be union meetings of these organizations in various religious bodies without any formal connection in the way of organization, but it would add to the impressiveness and effectiveness of the organization, if it can be made a part of the general movement for the enlistment of the men in the active service of the church, which is now being pushed in all the Protestant bodies. The secretary is now making a study of the movement among others, and is to submit recommendations to a later meeting of the committee. The headquarters of the organization will be in Kansas City, where Brother Macfarlane will reside after about February 1, 1909.

It is a good time to keep in the middle of the road, but let us be sure that it is the right road—the King's highway of holiness. All dark and devious paths and all short cuts to the City of God may well be avoided.

The Christian Century returns to its criticism of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for its recent criticism of Prof. Willett on the miraculous. THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has never charged Prof. Willett with denying the possibility or reality of all miracles. All that is needed to clear up the point in discussion between the Christian Century and THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is some explanation from the former as to the meaning of Prof. Willett's language, that "the redemptive facts of the gospel are independent of miracle." We mentioned some of these redemptive facts that seem to us to be inseparably bound up with the miraculous. There were other statements from Prof. Willett that seemed to us unguarded and incapable of proof, but this one relating to the fundamental facts of the gospel is the one to which we have attached chief importance. Perhaps his position on that point will be made clear in the articles which he is now writing for the Christian Century.

Current Religious Thought

"A man is much more likely to be mistaken in what he denies than in what he affirms. What he affirms is what he realizes. What he denies may be only what he fails to realize."—"The New Theology and the Old Religion," by Charles Gore, bishop of Birmingham.

"As a rule, the more dignity a clergyman has the nearer dead he is. I believe in dignity, and the gospel affords the grandest theme for genuine dignity, both in matter and manner, but you can put both the preacher and sermon into a jacket so tight as to crush all the life out of them.

"You do not have to be a sissy to be a saint. The temptation is to be all clergy and no man. Sydney Smith said: 'There are three sexes: men, women and preachers.' The young clergyman's temptation is that of making himself a unique being.

"Many clergymen have the qualities that should characterize the Christian life—gentleness, meekness, patience and humility, but they often lack the more robust characteristics of manhood. The world demands preachers with opinions and a will—men who have the moral courage of invasion. Yet how many preachers fail for want of force! Their backbone is all pulp. They are good men, but they have to add to the patience of Job, the meekness of Moses, and the amiability of John, the sharp words of Elijah, the fearlessness of John the Baptist, the enthusiasm of Paul, the severity of Knox and the magnificent explosions of Luther's far-sounding indignation."—Madison C. Peters, D. D., in The Homiletic Review.

"It is to be feared that the ease with which pastors may be changed under our Methodist economy tends to develop among the laymen a liking for frequent changes, the spirit of the 'sermon-taster.' It is bad for both the preacher and people when the pastoral relation comes to be looked upon as a mere temporary bond."—Christian Advocate.

"John B. Stratton, presiding elder of Hartford District in 1854, persuaded me to commence my ministry in Forestville, Conn., under his direction. I found in him a genial friend, and a willing helper. His term in the eldership having expired at the conference of 1855, he was stationed at ———, where there had been difficulty the previous year, and the church, it was said, was divided and nearly broken up. At the conference of 1856 he invited me to an interview in a classroom of the church, and told me in a very pleasant but earnest manner the following: 'I went to———, and have been among the people for a year, but have never heard a word respecting their difficulties. And this is the way I avoided it—before any person could introduce the subject I hastened to express my joy in finding all so harmonious and loving. Said I: 'I have not heard a single person speak ill of another since I came among you, and I hope I never shall.' The result was I never heard the first word about their troubles from either party.' "—Christian Advocate.

"When a denomination fails to enlist its own young people in its work, the days of that denomination are nearly numbered. For if she can not hold her own rightful heritage, how shall she win over the outside world? If the children of the home find it more comfortable out of doors, there is no encouragement for others to seek admission, but good reason for them to avoid such a family."—Christian Instructor.

Fraternal organizations of men make much of public display in great processions, splendid attire, bands of music and festive celebrations. These make impressions on the crowds of spectators of the numbers and power of the order. With the exception of the Roman Catholic Church, how different is the method of the Christian Churches, which meet quietly in their assemblies, make no parade of numbers and use no processional display. The kingdom of heaven cometh not with observation, and its evangelical and missionary operations are carried on in unobserved ways. The early Christian movement in the Roman Empire was of this character, and was suddenly found everywhere extended. The public press does not mark the kingdom's advance in headlines, and unless one looks into religious weeklies and missionary magazines he is ignorant of the silent, constant and growing operations of the churches."—Watchman.

"When a minister expresses his opinion on political matters and is on your side, he is patriotic, but when his opinion is on the other side, he is interfering in politics."—Associate Reformed Presbyterian.

"John Thompson, D. D., of Chicago spent his August vacation, disguised as a workingman, attending services at nine wealthy churches of different denominations in that city, to test the spirit in which a laboring man would be received, and which the 'Ladies' Home Journal' had purported to have shown to be a frost. In a threadbare and shiny blue serge coat, trousers that were worn at the edges, a cheap cotton shirt and tie, old shoes and a black felt hat, the minister was so well disguised that even his friends might have passed him by. In fact, he sat in a street-car beside one of the members of his own congregation and was not noticed. 'I made the experiment,' he said, 'to find what, if any, truth there might be in the charge that the workingman and the poorly dressed visitor are not made welcome in our churches. I found, as I had hoped, that it was just the other way. In the nine churches that I visited, I found the congregation always attentive, and in eight of the churches the ministers were cordial.' This is wholly trustworthy, and it rather cheapens the statements made some months ago by the poorly dressed young lady who visited many churches, and related her experience in the 'Ladies' Home Journal.' "—Central Christian Advocate.

"In a ministry of more than forty years in revival work in all parts of the country, I have found that the homes where our religious journals are found are the most spiritual in life and consecrated in labor for Christ. And more—I have always noticed that the pastors who have given special attention in the pulpits and home to get religious papers into the families of their churches have excelled in their work of saving men, promoting missions, and all the financial departments of their churches.

"Now, I wish to speak of one feature of the special influence of a religious paper in the home life. It is that of providing the children, at the time of their marriage and making new homes, with a religious paper. Often have I noticed that when sons and daughters are married and settled in life, their pious parents, in whose homes they have been reared under the hallowed influence of the weekly religious paper, have bereft them of this continued influence and power, simply because when they gave them the departing kiss, and perhaps supplies to set up housekeeping in their new home, they have failed to subscribe for them the religious paper which had shed light in the pathway of their childhood days. One of the first blessings which parents should confer upon their children in the new home is the religious paper. And when this is done, who can tell the hallowed character-building which will be effected thereby. And not only this upon their personal lives, but the far-reaching influence for Christ upon the Church and the world."—Zion's Herald.

"Fire-smitten Fernie passed an ordinance cancelling all liquor licenses and prohibiting the importation of intoxicants. Without such an ordinance order could not have been preserved. St. John did the same thing after the great fire. On this the Maritime Baptist remarks: "If prohibition of the drinkshop is good for a town after a fire, or on an election day, it ought to be equally good at all other times."—Dominion Witness.

What kind of sermons do lawyers like? At the Baptist ministers' meeting in Boston, recently, F. K. Linscott, a lawyer, gave an answer to this question. A summary of the points made is: A sermon that has the ear-marks of a preparation such as he himself has been accustomed to make in his own work—logical, skillful in expression, and showing maturity of thought.

A sermon that is rich in practical purpose worthy of being accomplished.

A sermon pervaded with the spirit of sincerity and earnestness.

A sermon that indicates breadth of view in the outlook on life, and intelligent sympathy with other men's ways of looking upon life.

The speaker queried whether the filing of a brief of the Sunday sermon on a Friday for examination might not suggest some change in subject, style, tone and argument of the sermon.

A little law is not a bad flavor to a good Gospel.

"One of our neighbors—a gentleman a little over the allotted threescore and ten—was lately telling us his experience as a boy in the old Christie Chapel of Cincinnati. In that day of sixty years ago, when it came to singing, the Sunday-school superintendent would throw his head back and roll out in deep bass the words:

"The Judg-munt day is a-rollin' on,
The Judg-munt day is a-rollin' on,
The Judg-munt day is a-rollin' on;
Prepare to meet thy God."

And as he listened and heard other words—"We'll soon be goin' home"—it seemed to the boy as he sat on his bench, awed and terrified, as if the very next moment, Gabriel might sound his trumpet, and the end of the world be announced, and the Great Assizes begin.

"Well, doubtless these hymns were scarcely suited to little children and sensitive boys and girls. But, nevertheless, as our neighbor thought, and as we think, there was a dignity and grandeur to them far beyond the lum-ty-lum-lumty jig measures which have invaded our Sunday-schools in the last half century."—Western Christian Advocate.

Editor's Easy Chair.

The great quadrennial contest is ended. The political parties have marshalled their forces and put them into action. The day of the battle of the ballots came, one party vanquished all the others, and political peace is already settling down on the nation. Christians may well learn some valuable lessons from these great political campaigns. Note the zeal, for instance, with which the average man worked for the success of his party, and how the leaders in the campaign traversed the country from one end to the other, speaking day and night in halls, on the street corners, from the rear end of railroad trains, anywhere and everywhere, if only they might reach the people with their message. How long would it take to reach the whole world with the gospel, if the Church were to put the same sort of zeal into its work of having Jesus Christ made the King and Ruler of all men? The value of organization has been clearly demonstrated. 'Twas not enough to have zeal for one's party. Political leaders organized their forces thoroughly, so that every man in the party was located and urged to vote. It was only by complete organization that the committees in charge were able to reach every voter. If local churches were to organize their forces as completely as these parties were organized, how much more effective work would be done for the Cause! Now that the contest is ended, it is the glory of our country that the people accept the verdict at the ballot box as final. Partisan bitterness is abated. Men of different parties recognize each other as fellow citizens, and good-naturedly adjust themselves to the new situation.

In an editorial of fine spirit in The St. Louis Republic, in which it accepts its party's defeat in the state and nation good-naturedly and graciously, it refers to the promise of Mr. Hadley, the Republican Governor-elect in Missouri, to give the people of the state "a progressive, non-partisan administration," and says:

"In thus accepting the sincerity of these assurances The Republic has no thought that Mr. Hadley proposes to forget his party or forswear the particular political principles to which he is committed. It means only to welcome his promise to be a Governor for all the people and not merely a politician utilizing public office to further partisan advantage and advance personal ambitions. It will be easy enough, if Mr. Hadley is big enough and brave enough, to preserve his Republicanism while zealously furthering the true interests of all the people."

The principle involved in this statement is so sane and sensible that we wish to give it a wider application. It is just as true in religion, and in our fellowship with each other as Christians of different creeds, that our wider service for the common cause need not interfere in the least with our allegiance to the particular principles which we hold. If one is "big enough and brave enough," it will be an easy matter for him to preserve his own conscience and the truth for which he stands while co-operating with others differing from him in many things, for the advancement of the common cause. "He serves his party best," said President Hayes, "who serves his country best." Equally true is it that he serves best the special cause with which he is identified, who serves best the common interests of the kingdom of God. When we have mastered this simple principle the problem of whether we should co-operate with other Christians in furthering the interests which we hold in common, and how far, is forever solved.

A vital difference between the contest which Christians are waging and the political contest which has just ended, is the fact that the former, being waged against the forces of evil, will never end until the complete triumph of righteousness is achieved in all the earth, and Christ's reign over men holds undisputed sway. Our warfare, as Paul has said, "is not against flesh and blood, but against the principalities, against the powers, against the world-rulers of this darkness, against the spiritual hosts of wickedness in the heavenly places." If ever the time was when members of various religious bodies thought their real warfare was against those holding different religious opinions from themselves, that time is passed, and we now recognize the fact that our conflict is with error and unrighteousness. The political contest was a contest between parties; the Christian contest is one against the kingdom of Satan, the dominion of evil in the world. In the very nature of things this warfare must go on until the coming of the "new heaven and the new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness." Meanwhile, we are to regard as our brothers in this warfare all who stand with Christ and for Christ, and against his enemies. They may differ from us in their theological and ecclesiastical opinions, but if they are following Christ and seeking to make his will universal, they are not our enemies, but our allies, and we must make common cause with them against common foes; and this we must do without sacrificing truth or conscience. The more we realize the magnitude of the evils which the Church must overcome, and the tasks she must perform before the world is evangelized, the more disposed we shall be to overlook minor differences among the real friends of Christ, while we push forward, a united host, to bring the whole earth into subjection to our common Lord and Master.

In an important meeting in connection with one of our national conventions, when a very delicate and embarrassing question, which many feared would produce serious results, had been amicably adjusted, and the brethren were congratulating each other over the happy solution which had been reached, the beloved D. R. Dungan remarked, as he took us by the hand, "The spirit of Jesus Christ will solve all our difficulties." Never did this veteran teacher and preacher utter a greater truth than in that statement, which welled out of a full and overflowing heart. If we would only take Christ into our counsels, if we would only allow his spirit to dominate our spirits, there is no cause of alienation nor bar to co-operation among us that could not be speedily removed. The trouble is, we exclude our Master from too many of our meetings, when we come together to talk over our differences. What we need, and all we need, is Jesus Christ in our individual lives, in our homes, in our local churches, in our ministry, in our conventions, in our editorial offices, to insure harmony and peace, with order and efficiency. Just now, He of the wounded feet and hands and side —the Prince of Peace, the Counsellor—is knocking for admission into the councils of this brotherhood of believers, that his presence may dissipate all strife, and that his majestic personality may subdue all hearts, and unify them, while he leads us on to the achievement of a magnificent victory. Shall we not hush the clamor of controversy long enough to hear his gentle voice calling us into closer fellowship with himself and with each other, as we front the great tasks and opportunities which are before us?

The evening shadows of a weary, toilful day invite us home to rest and repose. How many and how diverse are the problems which an editor may be called upon to deal with in a single day! One who looks out on the whole wide field of our activities, and whose ears and heart are open to hear all the burdens and sorrows of others, and to listen to the complaints and criticisms of the querulous and fault-finding, and who seeks to lessen the friction at this point and at that, and to harmonize conflicting minds, and meanwhile suffer the misconstruction of his own motives, that he may benefit others, needs "the wisdom which cometh down from above," and the patience and forbearance which only the spirit of Christ can give. Yet every editor who seeks conscientiously to fulfill his obligations to the cause he serves, has this sort of demands made upon him continually. Is is any wonder if he should occasionally, in the agony of his soul, cry out with Paul, "Who is sufficient for these things? Our sufficiency is of God." When there is a seeming conflict between one's personal and material interests and what is clearly for the best interests of the Cause, a man of faith can not hesitate for a moment as to his course. He must "seek first the kingdom of God," and suffer whatever material loss and personal criticism may be involved in such a course. After awhile, when all life's mysteries are solved in the bright light of eternity which shall illuminate the dark problems of this our earth-life, and when all secrets shall be unveiled, it will be compensation enough if our motives are seen to have been true and honest. Meanwhile God knows, and we may also have the approval of our own consciences, if we are true to the light that is in us.

The Christian Conquest of America

By F. M. Dowling

I have always counted myself a friend and advocate of Home Missions. I am compelled to confess, however, that my recent review and new study, not only of the home-field, but of the world-field, have given me the conviction that the call of the Homeland is the supreme demand of the hour. The Church of Jesus Christ has never been challenged to a more magnificent, stupendous, far-reaching, age-determining, world-compelling, and withal inspiring task than the Christian conquest of America.

Do not misunderstand me. The priority which attaches to Home Missions is not a priority of need or of desert, but a question of strategy in the Christian's program of world-conquest. From this point of view the Christian conquest of America can not for a moment be considered a side issue, or a subordinate issue, but from every consideration a co-ordinate issue, and from some considerations the paramount issue. Take America for Christ and the evangelization of the world will be accomplished in the generation following that glorious achievement. Fail to take America for Christ, and the evangelization of the world becomes indeed a "far-off," though "divine event."

I. Loyalty to the spirit, purposes and achievements of the fathers of our Country demands at our hands the Christian conquest of America. In a peculiar sense America belongs to God. It is his, if I may so speak, by right of discovery and settlement.

I need not remind you that the motive of Columbus and his supporters was the desire to glorify God by the discovery of new lands for the spread of Christianity.

It is one of the commonplaces of history, thrillingly interesting history, that religion played a principal part in the drama of the subjugation and occupation of every section of our country as it was acquired and opened for settlement. It is equally true that our country belongs to God because of the place given to him in the formation of our national government.

This moment's pause at the gate of a most inviting field is all our time permits. Unless we are the degenerate sons of noble sires, loyalty to the ideas and ideals of the fathers demands of us the Christian conquest of America.

II. Loyalty to our country demands the Christian conquest of America.

Whatever has been done toward the accomplishment of this task, using a Home Missionary phrase in its broadest sense, "there remaineth very much land to be possessed." While it may be true that, as nations are classified according to their religions, and as far as formal official deliverances go, our country is Christian, it is still possible to point to vast stretches of our domain where the voice of the evangelist has not been heard, and to multitudes of our population who have not been touched by the influences of the gospel. To our sorrow, if not to our shame, salvation in America is far, very far, from being coextensive with even our evangelization. That man's grasp on the meaning of salvation must be very feeble who contends that America is saved.

Hear me, my brethren and fellow citizens, for I am but reiterating what the wisest of men have said when I declare that the supreme need of our country is the application to its multifold forms of life and activity of the principles of the saving Gospel of Jesus Christ. I can afford to make this statement, if a Gladstone could exclaim, "Talk about questions: there is but one question, and that is the Gospel."

I do not speak lightly. I am aware that in the judgment of many wise men the needs of America were never so crying and never so defying as to-day. Probably never in the world has so much been said about "problems" and "perils" as is being said in America to-day. Many believe that destructive forces are working on the very foundations of our government and free institutions, and that the walls are tottering. Many believe that American civilization is diseased at the roots, and that the disease must be healed, or its fate is sealed. Some believe that Lord Macaulay's prophecy will be fulfilled and that our experiment in free government will prove a failure.

Here is the problem of immigration, pronounced by many of our profoundest statesmen and sociologists, while radically different in character, yet not less vital to the Republic than the problem of slavery. The question is not yet settled, whether the incoming millions are to foreignize us or we are to Americanize them. Upon our answer to the question, "Aliens or Americans—Which?" depends the life of the Republic.

Then here is the problem of the city. We are coming to realize the truthfulness of Wendell Phillips' prophetic words: "The time will come when our cities will strain our institutions as slavery never did." Certain it is that the city will be the burial ground of the world's highest hopes, or the birthplace of still higher hopes to be realized in the ideal civilization of a coming day. The city holds the future.

And here looms up, hideous and terrifying, the problems of the saloon. All I can say is that the legalized liquor traffic is still the mother viper of the vilest brood of venomous vices that curse the body and damn the soul. The power of the saloon—somewhat broken, praise God!—is still sufficient to awe great political parties into silence and subservience.

Here is the Mormon problem. Authorities speak of the "Mormon octopus," steadily and stealthily extending its hideous arms over the republic. One authority speaks of the Mormon system as "a reactionary hierarchic despotism, a perpetual clog upon our advancing civilization, an alien imperium in imperio, a system which subsists upon ignorance if not upon vice."

Here is the problem of capital and labor. It is a colossal problem and growing every day. Wise and conservative men characterize our day as one of industrial revolution, and even speak of industrial war. It is full of foreboding in a country like ours, when class is arrayed against class. Conditions in our social and industrial life are such as to furnish fertile soil for the growth of an un-American and un-Christian socialism, and even anarchy.

Here is the problem of the Afro-American, as gigantic and staggering in many of its aspects as in 1861.

My brethren, it is in view of all these things that put our American institutions to tremendous strain that I have declared that loyalty to our country demands the Christian conquest of America, for nothing but the broadest and fullest application of the principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ will save America and the world. "Plant a Christian church," says Dr. Clark, in "Leavening the Nations," "in any community and it becomes at once the nucleus of law, order, moral living and civic virtue. Such communities multiplied across the state give character to a commonwealth, and such multiplied commonwealths made a nation strong by making it righteous." Mr. Clark appropriately dedicates his book, "To the Home Missionary Pastors of America and their wives, who with little praise of men are laying the real foundations of national strength and prosperity."

Dr. Carroll in his "Religious Forces of the United States," says: "The Church is the mightiest, most persuasive, most persistent and most beneficent force in our civilization." It was his conviction that the Christianity of Christ is the supreme need of our country that caused Charles L. Thompson to exclaim, "Home missions is the cause of our country. Its claims were never so eminent and manifest as to-day. In our national expansion the missionary must keep pace with the advancing line, for at last this country will be what Christian agencies and institutions make it."

Brethren, it is historically certain that our country, in the years of its beginnings, in the period of its settlement and expansion, was saved by Christianity—and I might add, Christianity as presented and represented by the home missionary. And it is equally certain that, if our country to-day is to be saved, it must be through the same transforming power. Our country is being saved, and it is Christianity that is saving it! I do not undertake to defend the Church in its lethargy and narrowness and slowness and insufficiency and lack of vision. Nevertheless, I make bold to affirm that the Church is the chief agency in every noble reform and forward movement. A glance at the names of acknowledged leaders in the modern crusade against evils of many forms will reveal the fact that these are men who are moved by the spirit and teaching of Jesus Christ. These masters of men are men who are glad to acknowledge the mastery of the Man of Galilee. And, sir, the triumphs of righteousness that we are permitted to see are the triumphs of the principles that are fundamental in the religion of Jesus Christ, the principles of justice, equality and brotherliness.

Christian men and women, I beseech of you, in the name of God and humanity, not to call a halt in the campaign that is being made against graft and bribery and fraud and theft and oppression and lawlessness, nor to ask the leaders, whoever they may be, to bring the colors back to the lines, but to cheer them on, follow them up the steeps to the hill-crests, and pay the price of victory, whatever it may be, knowing that righteousness alone exalteth a nation and secures for the people a prosperity that abides. And, brethren, while the situation is serious, almost in the extreme, nevertheless there is good ground for an optimistic view. The Church is awakening. She is becoming possessed of a social conscience. She is discovering the social teachings of Jesus. She is coming to have larger and truer conceptions of the kingdom of God, and to realize that she has a present-day message for all men. I see the Church to-day mustering her forces for a fight that will engage the attention of at least three worlds. I hear from all directions the rallying and challenging notes of her leaders. I heard the clarion call of Washington Gladden in his great address before the last Congregational council. I heard the call of the bishops of the Episcopal Church summoning their people to the conflict. I have heard notes equally clear and strong sounding from the platforms of many religious bodies as they have met in their annual gatherings, summoning the brave, the loyal and the true to join in the crusade against corruption and oppression and injustice and wrong wherever they lift their unholy heads in our social. industrial and political life. And, friends, the dawning of the new era of extended and applied Christianity has already made a good beginning in the solving of the problems with which the very life of the republic is bound.

Even the saloon problem, that has defied solution for so many years, is beginning to vanish. This convention ought to join with those who stand at ten thousand altars giving hearty thanks, with tears of joy and hallelujahs, for the unprecedented progress that has been made in the last year in the cause of saloon suppression. And we who have gathered here in this fair city of the Southland want to give thanks to you of the South, and to God for you, for your gallant, determined, inspiring, victorious leadership in this holy war. Anti-saloon workers are wont to exhibit maps colored black to represent saloon-cursed communities and left white to represent sections freed from the curse of the legalized liquor traffic. On the last map I saw a white cross of tremendous proportions lay upon the map of our beloved country,—its four extremities touching the four boundaries—and there were white patches of great extent amidst the blackness. The advance of the cause of saloon suppression amounts truly to a "temperance tidal wave." The manufacturers of alcoholic beverages are on the defensive and are now posing as reformers, and proposing to clean up the saloon and make it respectable. When they succeed in this, one man suggests that they be sent to hell with the commission to clean it up and make it respectable.

If you ask me for the latest victory of anti-saloon forces, I must reply that I have not heard of what has taken place since I came to this platform. Hear me, the child is now born who, so far as the legalized traffic in alcoholic beverages is concerned, will live to see a stainless flag floating above the capitol of every state in the union and from the White House in Washington!

Speaking now, no longer in detail, it thrills me to believe that our country faces no problem, however dark, that is not shot through with beams of light. I have prayed to God that I might be able to speak the well tempered word of courage and hope that I feel ought to be spoken. The task set for the church is so incomprehensibly stupendous as to stagger us and paralyze our energies. Nevertheless it can be done. Multiply these problems and perils tenfold, state their menacing and hopeless character in language tenfold stronger than has yet been commanded, paint the picture in colors tenfold more lurid than have yet been employed, make them insuperable—make the task impossible, do all this and more, and I should still want the Christian citizenship of America to declare, "It can be done!" The ground of our confidence is this: we believe in God, and we believe in man. This faith compels unwavering optimism. I resent the suggestion, if anybody makes it, that this optimism is of the quality of his who believes that "God takes care of children, fools and the United States." "My soul, wait thou only upon God; for my expectation is from him." "With men it is impossible, but not with God, for with God all things are possible." You recall that in the midst of the siege of Port Arthur, the Japanese soldiers sent word to the emperor that it was impossible to take the fort, and that the emperor sent back this word, "The emperor expects his men to do the impossible," and they did it. My brethren, hear me, if the task of America's salvation appears to you impossible, I still declare that under God you are expected to accomplish it. The very difficulties of the task ought to be an irresistible challenge to its undertaking. What men are you, and whose God is yours, that you are looking for easy tasks? Some advocates of home missions urge that their work is along the line of least resistance. This may be true, if you have in mind gathering together the children in some new communities into a Sunday-school. It is the opposite of the truth, if you have in mind the grappling with the mighty forces of our American life and applying them to the enterprise of the world's redemption. Home mission advocates sometimes declare that America is the ripest field in the world for "our plea." I don't believe it. I believe the foreign field is riper for Christion union than the homeland. But be this as it may, let America be the most inhospitable and hostile to "our plea," and to the gospel appeal, of all lands, loyalty to our country ought to cause us to fling ourselves into the conflict with a fiercer joy that our country may be saved.

Be strong!
We are not here to play, to dream, to drift;
We have hard work to do and loads to lift.
Shun not the struggle, face it; 'tis God's gift.
Be strong!

Say not the days are evil—Who's to blame?
And fold the hands and acquiesce—O shame!
Stand up, speak out, and bravely, in God's name,
Be strong!

It matters not how deep entrenched the wrong,
How hard the battle goes, the day, how long;
Faint not, fight on! To-morrow comes the song!
Be strong!

RESOLUTION.

[The following poem, sent us by one to whom the author gave a copy, possesses genuine merit, though the friend sending it knew not its author's name. Does any one know what name the initials represent?—Editor.]

I will not fear, though dark indeed
The prospects seem to be;
I'll humbly follow Truth's safe lead
In meek humility—
For where Truth leadeth all is well,
In perfect peace there will I dwell.

I will not doubt, however dim
May shine the rays of light;
I'll firmly stand and trust in Him,
And wait the fading night.
For even now methinks afar
I see the rising Morning Star!

I will not shrink, though wildly fierce
May hiss the bolts of scorn;
A God-like purpose naught can pierce,
Or quench a hope true born.
Inspired by Truth's resistless might,
Man ever gains his own birthright.

I will not cringe on bended knee,
And fear to claim my own;
The real king, God-sent, is he
Who makes and mounts his throne!
There is no law which says, "Thou must Forever grovel in the dust!"

From out the Eternal Source of things
There flows a stream of life and power;
Within ourselves the fountain springs,
Exhaustless, ceaseless, more and more,
And in its waters, sparkling bright,
Are love and power, wealth and might.

"I will!" Oh, let this firm resolve
Rise from the depths of Soul;
Let every thought and act revolve
Round one grand purpose, one great goal.
Then all the powers of earth and sky
Will help you on to victory. A. S. L.

EAGER TO WORK

Health Regained By Right Food.

The average healthy man or woman is usually eager to be busy at some useful employment.

But let dyspepsia or indigestion get hold of one, and all endeavor becomes a burden.

"A year ago, after recovering from an operation," writes a Mich. lady, "my stomach and nerves began to give me much trouble.

"At times my appetite was voracious, but when indulged, indigestion followed. Other times I had no appetite whatever. The food I took did not nourish me and I grew weaker and weaker.

"I lost interest in everything and wanted to be alone. I had always had good nerves, but now the merest trifle would upset me and bring on a violent headache. Walking across the room was an effort and prescribed exercise was out of the question.

"I had seen Grape-Nuts advertised, but did not believe what I read at the time. At last, when it seemed as if I were literally starving, I began to eat Grape-Nuts.

"I had not been able to work for a year, but now after two months on Grape-Nuts I am eager to be at work again. My stomach gives me no trouble now, my nerves are steady as ever, and interest in life and ambition have come back with the return to health.

As Seen From the Dome By F. D. Power

Washington for two weeks has been under the spell of Gipsy Smith. Thousands have thronged to hear him and many hundreds have been led to decision for Christ. Like John Bunyan his father was a tinker. "Tink, tink, tink," the sharp noise he makes in proclaiming his trade by beating on a kettle, gives the tinker his name, and this man like the prince of dreamers mended tinware, recaned chairs, made willow baskets and clothes pins, and his gipsy boy, Rodney, sold the clothes pins or pegs. The elder Smith was a horse trader, as every Gipsy is, and the mother told fortunes and they talked the Romany tongue and wandered from place to place, as all Romanies do. Then came the smallpox. A sister was taken ill as they were traveling through Hertfordshire, England. The father pitched the tent where he left the wife and the four other children. The wagon he placed a couple of hundred yards away, when he went with the sick child and nursed and cared for it. Then another was taken down and sent to the wagon. The mother prepared food and took it half way between wagon and tent, where the father would come and get it. The mother came nearer and nearer the wagon and then she was taken with the dread disease. There was the Gipsy father with the dying wife and sick children alone in the forest; with no knowledge of the Bible; with little knowledge of God. "Do you believe in God?" he asked his wife. "Yes." "Do you try to pray, beloved?" "I try to, and sometimes there is a voice that says to me there is mercy for me." The woman put her arms about his neck and kissed him. He went out and wept, and he heard her softly singing:

"I have a father in the promised land.
I have a father in the promised land.
My father calls me and I must go
To meet him in the promised land."

It was a song she had heard some children sing twenty years before. It marked the beginning of Gipsy Smith's remarkable career. His faith comes under the influence of a little Methodist church at Cambridge and then in touch with the Salvation Army and the Gipsy tent becomes a gospel tent and the gipsy wagon a gospel wagon. The boy when he sold his clothes pegs would say to the women: "Let me sing for you," and when they consented, would sing: "Who will be the next to follow Jesus?" and when they would shed tears, "I ran away for I didn't know what more to say." He met years after an influential woman who asked: "Do you remember when you sold me the clothes pegs and sang that song for me?" "Yes, and I ran away because I couldn't bear the tears," and then she told him how her daughter heard him and would not be comforted until she had prayed with her, and said, "Mother, I will be the next."

Gipsy Smith was born in 1860 in a Gipsy tent, fifteen miles from London, in Epping Forest. There are perhaps 20,000 Gipsies in the British Isles and perhaps 80 per cent have Bible names. His father was Cornelius and he had a brother, Ezekiel. They are some way related to the Hebrew race, for they have these names, though they have no Bibles. Are they remnants of the lost tribes? The Romany people and the Romany tongue scholars refer to India. The Gipsy love song goes this way:

Av' kushto parl o pani,
Av' kushto mir' akai,
Mi kameli chovihani,
Avel ke tiro rye.
Oh, love, come o'er the water,
Oh, love, where'er you be.
My own sweetheart, my darling,
Come over the river to me.

For thirty years Gipsy Smith has been doing the work of an evangelist. This is his sixth visit to America, and he has preached in many cities and towns. He comes to us from Baltimore, where he carried on revival services for two weeks with success. As chairman of the pastors' committee in charge of these services, I have been thrown much with Gipsy and have been impressed with his simplicity and earnestness and his knowledge of the scriptures and freedom from egotism and cant. He is just a man among men. He talks straight to people. He has the English of John Bunyan. He indulges in no coarseness or slang and seldom makes fun. He is terribly in earnest. He does not even care for the harmless story telling which we preachers are fond of when we relax a little. He addressed the pastors of the city in their general assembly, and while I have listened to similar addresses from Joseph Cook and George Miller, of British England; Henry Valey and Campbell Morgan and Dwight L. Moody, none have more impressed me with their evident sincerity and wisdom and truth. His great power is in his pathos. He can play upon all the emotions, but upon this he chiefly relies. He does not aim to excite people. He reasons calmly, but has great persuasive power. Sometimes he is intently dramatic, as when he represents one dragging his secret sins forth from his bosom by the hair of the head. He never rants. His language is refined and cultured. His voice is delightful to the ear and when he sings, especially his Welsh songs, every one is hushed. He is always clear in his scripture expositions. Many of his sermons are such as one hears from the pulpits of the Disciples. His discourse on "Repentance," for example, may have been taken from Briney's barrel or McGarvey's notes. His little flashes of truth as the distinction between crowding Christ and touching Christ are very refreshing. His sermon on "The Lost Christ" can not be forgotten. His peculiar, "Listen! Listen! Hear me!" thrills the hearer. His simple, unaffected eloquence gets right hold of the heart-strings. The man has great power, without question, and he loves his work and loves his Lord.

The preachers generally have stood by the Gipsy. He has treated them with every consideration. I secured the cordial co-operation of the rector of the most exclusive of our Episcopal churches. Some of the stiffest, starchiest clergy have been jolted and jarred out of their self-complacency and brought face to face with conditions they had not dreamed about. What a revelation came, for example, with the midnight march of thousands of Christians under the Gipsy's leadership! We passed through the slum section and the tenderloin, which lies next the White House, and the low theaters and strongholds of Bacchus and held a midnight service in a big playhouse, thus invading "Satan's preserves," and "sectarianism and insectarianism" gave way before the vision of the city's need.

I am not so sure but the executive mansion itself, with its Sunday political conferences in these days, could have been bettered by our visitation.

What of results? Well, tens of thousands have heard the Gipsy's straightforward gospel talks, thousands have been quickened, and hundreds for the first time have come to decision for Christ and the Christian life, many of whom never entered our churches. The methods have been simple and in harmony with the scriptural call, "Repent ye," "Repent ye therefore and turn." The great purpose of the evangelist has been to bring the heart and will to yield to the claims of Jesus Christ. The whole city, officialdom and slumdom, newspaperdom and churchdom, have been influenced for good. Washington will not soon forget, "Listen! Listen!" and

"Where He leads me I will follow,
Where He leads me I will follow,
Where He leads me I will follow
I'll go with Him, with Him, all the way."

"What does it cost?" That's the American question—the question we Yankees will put when we see the golden streets and the great White Throne. Well, $5,000; the hall $200 for every service and then of all the rest not a cent to Gipsy. Half our offerings went to the English committee, who sustain Gipsy and other evangelists in their world-wide campaign. Gipsy burns his life out for God at $3,000 a year. But what is the value of one soul?

"AT EVENINGTIME IT SHALL BE LIGHT."

I know not what the long years hold
Of winter days and summer clime;
But this I know, when life grows old
It shall be Light at eveningtime.

But this I know, beyond the Gates
At eveningtime it shall be Light.

PHARMACIST

Tells Facts About Caffeine in Coffee.

"About twelve years ago I stopped coffee," writes a Colo. man, "and began Postum. As a result, instead of being a confirmed dyspeptic as I was for many years, I enjoy good health and fine digestion.

"I formerly weighed 115 lbs., now 140. My waist measure was 29, now 36 inches. Not only this, but I enjoy Postum and my meals, while for years eating was an annoyance and often a torture.

"Like an old whisky toper I always thought I had to have my coffee and then always felt its ill effects in my stomach and on my nerves.

"Now I have so completely lost my taste for coffee, that recently, when a cup was given me by mistake and I tasted it, I found it nauseated me. On the other hand I not only like the healthful effect of Postum, but the taste is peculiarly agreeable to me.

"I have tried other cereal drinks but always come back to Postum. Realizing as I do, the evil effects from the poisonous alkaloid in coffee, and being a Postum Pioneer, I am a very successful missionary.

"One man, a school superintendent, from my recommendation, has had quite as happy an experience with Postum as I have had. My wife has also found great benefit from Postum, as coffee was the only thing which disagreed with her stomach at table.

"Being a graduate in pharmacy I know the alkaloid—caffeine—in coffee is a poisonous drug. As there is no drug in Postum I naturally drink it and recommend it to others." "There's a Reason."

RESEARCHES IN BIBLICAL ARCHÆOLOGY. Vol. I. By Olaf Toffteen, Ph. D., Professor of Semitic Languages and Old Testament Literature, Western Theological Seminary. The University Press, of Chicago. Pp. 302. Price, $2.50 net.

Chronology has been called the skeleton of history, and has, therefore, a very vital relation to historical research. Especially does chronology possess especial interest to students of the Bible. To such the present volume will possess special interest, as it attempts to cover ancient chronology of Palestine, Assyria, Babylonia and Egypt down to 1050 B. C. The period from that date to the Christian era is to be treated in a later volume.

The author gathers his chronological data for determining the dates of the patriarchs from the Bible itself. To do this he comes down late enough to find an "unchallenged date" from which to begin his reckoning, and then works backward to the days of the patriarchs. This unchallenged date he finds in the record of the kings of Israel and Judah, when they had transactions with other lands. Having corroborated these dates by different lines of testimony, the author works his way backward carefully and conscientiously, until he is able to give the dates of the patriarchs. We can not, of course, follow the author in these researches, but we are pleased to call the attention of those who are interested in Biblical chronology to this scholarly work, which, with its chronological charts and indices, will be found helpful to Biblical scholars who are engaged in such studies.

CHRISTIAN PRINCIPLES. By G. Campbell Morgan. Fleming H. Revell Co., New York, Chicago, Toronto.

Mr. Morgan is always edifying, and his chapters on "The Spiritual Nature of Man," "The Direct Dealing of Man with God—A Right and an Obligation," "The Relation of Reason and Faith," "The Preliminary Adjustment; Self Lost and Found," "The Realization of the Christ-life—Center and Sphere," "The Passion of Christ and His Church for the Kingdom of God" are very illuminating and helpful. The book contains 157 pages and sells for 50 cents.

THE JUNGLE FOLK OF AFRICA. By Robert H. Milligan. Fleming H. Revell Co.

This book is not only a credit to its publishers, but it is a distinct contribution to African literature. Mr. Milligan has written a most readable book full of laughable comments on the native life as seen by a live American. His book shows a real appreciation of native life and conditions, such as only one who lives there can write. It is as true of the conditions of life and mission work among the people where our mission is working. We bespeak for it the widest circulation possible, and recommend it to all friends of Africa who would get another vision of its great needs.—Royal J. Dye, M. D.

GOD AND ME. By Peter Ainslie. Baltimore: Temple Seminary Press.

This is the title of a handsome little book of 48 pages, beautifully bound, by our brother, Peter Ainslie, of Baltimore. It is a brief manual of the principles that make for a closer relationship of the believer with God." While the work is designed for all believers in Jesus, it is especially intended for those who have recently entered the Christian life. The significance of the title, "God and Me," is, of course, the personal relationship which each individual sustains to God. We have glanced through a number of these short chapters, and we find them exceedingly helpful, and breathing the very spirit of devotion and consecration. There are short talks on such subjects as "Belief," "Repentance," "Obedience," "Fruit Bearing," "Bible Study," "Prayer," "Thoughts," "Talking," "Temptation," "Amusement," "Companions," "Books," "Daily Rounds," etc., all of which are treated in a helpful, Christian way. The spirit of faith, which is everywhere manifest in these pages, will be a tonic to those who read it. We commend the little work to all who desire to cultivate closer relations with God. The price of the book is 45 cents. The Christian Publishing Co. will be glad to furnish it to any of our readers at the publisher's price.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT, THE BOY AND THE MAN. By James Morgan. 320 pages. Price, $1.50. The Macmillan Co.

A most interesting book, and one that can now be read from a non-partisan standpoint. In fact, politics does not enter much into the narrative. The author is a hero worshiper. Then he has a hero—a live one, and one whose life has been an open one. Here we are told of the boyhood battles, the life in the West, and the further career of our most strenuous President.

THE FLYING DEATH. By Samuel Hopkins Adams. 239 pages. Price $1.50. The Macmillan Co.

This is a striking story of the fanciful kind. It is a mystery almost to the last, and is one of the Jules Verne type, but instead of looking into the future, its theme is the revivifying of the past. It depicts the finding of a pteranodon. Most people do not know what that is, but it was indeed the flying death to many of the characters in the story.

THE CENTENNIAL OF RELIGIOUS JOURNALISM. Edited by Rev. J. Pressley Barrett, D. D., Editor "Herald of Gospel Liberty," the oldest religious newspaper. Dayton, O.: Christian Publishing Association.

The religious body which designates itself officially as "The Christian Church," otherwise referred to as "The Christian Connection," is fairly entitled to the honor of publishing the oldest religious newspaper. This fact is set forth with sufficient evidence against the claims of other journals, which have sometimes claimed that honor. "The Herald of Gospel Liberty" was, and is, the title of the paper, and its first editor was Rev. Elias Smith. They have a right to be proud of being the first to use the powerful agency of the religious press in the dissemination of Christianity.

The present religious body known as 'The Christian Church" officially, claims to be the successor of three religious movements which had their origin, respectively, in New England, under Abner Jones; in Virginia, by James O'Kelley, and in Kentucky by Rice Haggard, who, it is claimed, influenced the action of Barton W. Stone and his co laborers to accept the name "Christian," and the Bible as their only rule of faith and practice. These movements occurred in the latter part of the eighteenth century and in the first part of the nineteenth. In these historical sketches, and especially in the history of Barton W. Stone, and his relation with Alexander Campbell, we regret to notice evidences of the very sectarian spirit against which their movement and ours was originally a protest. Among other similar statements occurs the following: "Barton W. Stone was not a Campbellite. He never turned traitor to the principles of the 'Christian Church,' of which he was one of the earliest promoters," etc. Later in his life, "in fact during the declining years of his noble life," the writer states, "when a number of Campbellite elders (including Alexander Campbell himself) made overtures for a 'union,' insisting that they occupied the same ground, being finally convinced by their prolonged assurances that they were acting in good faith, he gladly welcomed them in the closest union affiliation. But as regarded the 'Christian Church,' of which Stone lived and died a member, these elders proved to be 'wolves in sheep's clothing,' and 'scattered and divided the sheep' of many of the Christian flocks he had been instrumental in organizing." How far these statements are from facts, and how cruelly they misrepresent the godly men whom Stone recognized as his brethren, is known to living men among us to-day, who are acquainted with that early history. Alas, for the corrupting and dwarfing influence of the sectarian spirit!

PAUL THE MYSTIC. A Study in Apostolic Experience. By James M. Campbell, D. D. Author of "The Indwelling Christ," "After Pentecost—What?" etc. G. P. Putnam's Sons. New York and London. $1.50 net.

It may startle some readers to think of Paul as a mystic, since mysticism has fallen into disrepute in the thought of many people. There is no question, however, but that the Apostle Paul possessed a strong element of the mystical in his religious temperament. This book of Dr. Campbell deals with that feature of the great apostle. It is an interesting study, not only of mysticism in its best meaning, but of the apostle himself, who was a many-sided genius. The book may be regarded as a treatment of the deeper things of spiritual life—the "within things," as it has been styled. As such, it is a good antidote for legalistic and mechanical views of religion, which have to do mainly with logical formulas and with external requirements. Indeed, the author seems to push his argument in some places rather to an extreme, for the sake of emphasis. Commenting upon Paul's statement, "When that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away," he says: "When the pearl of spiritual authority is grasped, the bauble of external authority falls from the hand." We are sure, however, the author would not approve an interpretation of his words that would make them mean that when one has reached a certain stage of spiritual development the Word of God, which is external authority, becomes a "bauble" and should be allowed to fall from the hand. We are to judge our mystical states and profoundest spiritual experiences by the Scriptures, which remain the true norm of our spiritual life. The book, however, emphasizes a side of Paul's life which needs emphasis, and presents a view of Christianity which will prove highly advantageous to many. It is written in the author's clear, flowing style, which makes it a pleasure to read after him.

Our Budget

—Now let us face toward Pittsburg and our Centennial tasks.

—Let us keep step together if we would have the world hear the tramp of our marching legions.

—THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST throws out its towline to every worthy enterprise among us, and pledges its help toward the realization of all their worthy aims.

—While we are seeking thus to help everybody and every institution and every enterprise among us, let them not forget to help us, that we may the better help them.

—We are still receiving orders for back numbers containing reports of the New Orleans convention, and we shall be glad to send them while the edition lasts.

—The daily press reports that large numbers of idle men are being set to work in the factories and other industries of the country. Let the churches try to get all their idle members to do something for the Lord this Centennial year.

—This is no year for preachers and editors to carry chips on their shoulders, seeking an occasion for a theological tussle. It is rather a time for cultivating the largest charity and manifesting that irenic spirit which becometh a people pleading for Christian unity.

—That is a great address on Home Missions by Frank M. Dowling, of California, on "The Christian Conquest of America," which we are publishing this week. There must be some tonic in the Pacific breezes that stimulates these ministers on the Coast in attaining to such breadth of vision and such strength of expression. Be sure to give the address a careful reading. In the instalment to follow Brother Dowling considers our plea as related to the conquest.

—The Christian Publishing Company has now ready sample copies of its Sunday-school literature for 1909. These will be sent to interested parties on application. We believe both quality and prices will be approved. We have sought to give the best.

—To-day, Saturday Nov. 7, just exactly ten weeks since the violent attack in his face and neck, the Editor of this paper is able, for the first time since his illness, to uncover his face to the public, although it yet bears, and always will, the marks of the conflict. He can never adequately express his thanks to his readers in all parts of the world for their sympathy and prayers, but he will seek, during the remainder of the time allotted him, to render the best service he can to God and fellowmen.

—"Your paper surely inspires one to do good," writes a reader in renewing. That is high praise.

—The church at Enfield, Ill., has located George B. Green as minister.

—L. A. Chapman recently preached a sermon on "Christian Citizenship" at Elmwood, Neb., which was recognized as a fine statement.

—The church at Deland, Ill., has become a living link in the state work, with Villa Grove as its station. W. T. McConnell is the minister.

—S. C. Pierce has removed from Hebron, Ohio, by reason of his wife's health, and goes to Hallettsville, Texas.

—The church at Quincy, Ill., has become a living link in the state work. E. S. Potter writes: Clarence DePew here, and after preparation by Pastor Darsie it was easy work. Everybody rejoicing."

—J. Randall Farris, late of South Bend, Ind., has just entered upon the pastorate of the Central Church, Bristol, Tenn.

—R. H. Crossfield has entered upon the presidency of Transylvania University, and writes us it has a most hopeful outlook.

—R. H. Lampkin has left New Windsor, Colo., for Jacksonville, Fla., where he will help to build up mission work in the city.

—Ward Russell has accepted the work at Bartlett, Texas, for full time, and his beginning there is with much encouragement.

—C. W. Comstock, of Portland, Ore., enters upon work with the congregation at Sheffield and Mt. Washington, Kansas City, November 29.

—The C. W. B. M. session of the Mississippi convention reported the greatest gain during the year in the number of auxiliaries of any of the states.

—R. W. Abberley began a series of meetings with S. H. Zendt and the church at Oskaloosa, Iowa, last Lord's day. Leroy John is leading the music.

—The church at Bryan, Texas, where all departments are doing good work, has unanimously called James A. Challenner to be its minister for the third year.

—One of our exchanges is discussing instrumental music in the churches and trial immersion. Nothing like keeping up with the latest thought of the times.

—M. M. Baker, who has done a good work at Meridian, Miss., is now leading the forces at Poplar Bluff, Mo. We are glad to welcome Brother Baker to this imperial state.

—Sumner T. Martin was surprised recently by a large company of the members of the church at Santa Barbara, Cal., with a fruit shower, and earnest words of cheer and encouragement.

—"Ten Years on the Congo," is the title of a little sketch by Mrs. Royal J. Dye, which has been published by the Foreign Christian Missionary Society. It should be scattered broadcast.

—T. N. Barnes writes that his family is quarantined at Halstead, Kan., where his youngest daughter is dangerously ill. The public schools have been closed. He is at Tribune, and is the only minister in Greeley county at present.

—J. W. McGarvey, Jr., has accepted a call to settle with the church at West Point, Miss., one of our strongest churches in the South. He, therefore, leaves Lexington, Ky., for his new field, where he has been in a successful meeting.

—A. C. Foster, of Decatur, Ill., desires to quit practicing medicine, and again enter the full work of the ministry. He will either take the evangelistic field, furnishing his own singer, or locate with some good church. He prefers central Illinois.

—J. S. Montgomery will work for the next year with the churches at Stephenville and Hico, Texas, instead of Hico and Hamilton. He has moved to the first mentioned place and has received a very hearty welcome.

—F. M. Green, one of the men honored for his work and his years, has been appointed chaplain of the county infirmary at Akron, Ohio. He will hold regular services every other Lord's day, probably, and perform the same pastoral duties at the infirmary as other ministers do.

—Glancing through our library the other night we ran across M. E. Harlan's "Ideals for Young People," which we read again with interest. It occurred to us that scores of our patrons would like to secure a copy for a Christmas or New Year's gift to their sons or daughters. On inquiry, we found a half hundred only on stock in our book store, price 50 cents cloth, 25 cents paper. While they last we will sell them at that price.

—"I have no time to read your paper," writes a subscriber. No time to read a religious newspaper telling of the progress of God's kingdom, and giving instruction concerning the duties and privileges of the Christian life! What is time for, anyway, if not to prepare for eternity?

—The church at Fruita, Colo., is occupying its new tabernacle, which is located on e best lot in the town. The building is equate for present needs, but with a favorable crop next year a new building will be begun. Jasper Bogue writes us that there was a good convention and that all departments of the work are doing nicely.

—R. J. Bennett, who began his work at Mitchell, Ind., on Sept. 13, is pursuing studies in the State University at Bloomington. Since going there there have been 15 additions—eight by letter and statement and seven by confession. Harley Jackson, of Seymour, Ind., is conducting a meeting for this church, beginning last Lord's day.

—At Albia, Ia., the effects of a five months pastorless period are gradually disappearing. There have been nine additions since C. V. Allison entered upon his ministry there, July 1. The Bible school has reached an attendance of 273. A special missionary campaign is to be entered upon for 1909, and at a recent morning service $225 was the collection to start this.

—Robert W. Lilley has served the church at Corydon, Ia., for four years, and has done a splendid work there. He has received a call from the First Christian Church at Keokuk, and will remove to that city soon. One of his members writes that "he is a strong preacher, and will succeed in his new field. The prayers of the Corydon church go with him and his family."

—We have received notice of the death of Mrs. Mary L. Woods, of Florida, widow of the late Dr. Woods, of Bowling Green, Fla., and formerly of Versailles, Mo. She was a faithful Christian woman, as her husband was a faithful Christian man, and she has gone to join her beloved in a land more beautiful even than Florida. She departed this life September 29, 1908.

—F. D. Kershner, president of Milligan College, Tenn., writes in very cordial terms of the lectures which John T. Brown, of the Johnson City church, has been delivering to the students of Milligan College. He says these lectures are the outcome of Brother Brown's recent travels in the Orient, containing an extraordinary amount of valuable information, such as one does not usually find in a platform lecture.

—George H. Brown, pastor of the First Christian Church, Charleston, Ill., has entered upon his fourth years' service with the church. During his three years' ministry the church has made remarkable growth in all departments, the church membership having been almost doubled, now numbering over one thousand, the Sunday-school having been doubled and its work improved. Brother Brown begins his fourth year with a splendid prospect for a large work.

—The disaster which has befallen the Southern Christian Institute by fire, as reported by C. C. Smith elsewhere, is one that should appeal to the hearts of our brethren generally, and to their liberality as well, in repairing the damage. The institution is doing a most estimable work under Brother Lehman's wise administration, and it should not be hindered by this calamity which has befallen it. Rather let us make it the occasion of showing our appreciation of the work it is doing for the true education and Christianization of the negro.

—All those who have attended Bethany College, at any time, should send their names and addresses at once to W. T. Moore, Columbia, Mo. It is hoped to effect a strong organization of Bethany students, and make preparations at once for a big reunion at the time of the Centennial.

—The corner stone for the new addition to the Christian Church at Tuxedo, Mo., has been laid, with the Masonic lodge, of Webster Groves, assisting. Local ministers took part, and the occasion was a very happy one. The cost of the addition will be about $8,000, and will enlarge the seating capacity to about 450. The salary of W. F. Hamann, the minister, has been increased $25 a month, and the outlook for a successful work is good. There is a local contest in the Bible school.

—E. B. Bagby, who resigned his work in Cleveland, Ohio, and took a vacation of two months to recuperate his health with his father, Capt. A. F. Bagby, of Virginia, has entered upon the work in his new field at Fort Smith, Ark. He writes: "I am delighted with my new field. I never saw a more promising opportunity. I trust I may have wisdom and strength to meet the demand. The people have received us with great graciousness. Among the many kindnesses they gave us a fruit shower, leaving nearly a hundred jars of the finest of the Ozark products."

—We very much regret to learn of the death of Mrs. Jennie Allen, wife of F. G. Allen, of "Old Path Guide" fame of a quarter of a century ago. She died November 2 at the home of her son-in-law, E. J. Fenstermacher, pastor of the Christian church at Bowling Green, Ky., and was buried at the Moffett cemetery, near Mt. Pyrd church, by the side of her husband. Her son, Frank Waller Allen, of Paris, Mo., and A. W. Kokendoffer, of Sedalia, Mo., attended the burial services. We extend our sympathy to the bereaved ones, and expect to publish some details later.

—A subscriber, in renewing his subscription for The Christian-Evangelist, writes thus: "After having read The Christian-Evangelist we give our copy to a Presbyterian family, and they give it to a Baptist family, and they in turn give it to a Methodist family, each copy making its regular trip to four families. Each family has a kind word for The Christian-Evangelist." Now, that is a kind of missionary work which can be done with our religious papers which is much neglected. Of course, where the parties can afford it, it would be better to subscribe for the paper and send it direct to each one, but where that is impracticable, let this good brother's example be followed.

—The Foreign Christian Missionary Society has arranged for a series of rallies. This year a new element will be introduced. Moving picture scenes, showing life scenes from heathen lands, and stereopticon views of the work around the world will be used at the night service. They will begin on November 16, with rallies at Paris, Ky., and Portsmouth, Ohio. President McLean will be at the first place, and follow at Lexington, Ky., Harrodsburg, Ky., and Chattanooga, Tenn. Secretary Corey goes from Portsmouth to Wilmington, Athens, Columbus and Newark, Ohio. They will be assisted by several of our foreign missionaries. We will publish further dates in our next issue.

—T. W. Bellingham, who is now located at Benton Harbor, Mich., has done work at Fremont, in the same state, for about three years, and has made there a host of friends. Brother Bellingham was born in Scotland, but has received his university work in this country, having graduated from Findlay College, Ohio, studied in Worcester University, after which he took a course in law and graduated from the Chicago Law School. He holds a doctor of philosophy as well as the doctor of laws degree. The local paper of Fremont says: "A man of culture and refinement, he will be missed by the people in general, and the city of Benton Harbor is to be congratulated on securing this talented speaker and scholarly gentleman."

—James McGuire is doing good service for our brethren at Springdale, Ark. About a year ago he went there from Hiawatha, Kan., not intending to preach any more. But he found the church weak, and later the minister resigned. It seemed a necessity that Brother McGuire should do what he could for the Cause. The church had lost its prestige in the town, but there is now peace and some hope of better things. There are many members, however, who take no part in the work, and others who have been members of the Christian church in other places who can not be induced to unite with the congregation at Springdale. Brother McGuire says this is the best part of Arkansas. Any of our people going there will receive a cordial greeting.

—Frank L. VanVoorhis is starting on his third year of ministry at Shawnee, Okla., with a splendid outlook. The coming year gives promise to be by far the most fruitful in the history of the church. Accessions are reported at almost every service, and a revival is being planned to begin Nov. 10, under the direction of King Stark, of Missouri. A reception and banquet is to be held Nov. 9, with a view to organizing a brotherhood. The graduating exercises of the teacher training class were held Nov. 2, with 10 graduates. A new class will be started at once. Brother VanVoorhis was unable to attend the New Orleans convention, having just been in a meeting at Edmond, but he did his part well in working up an interest in New Orleans.

—E. F. Daugherty has entered upon his fifth year with the congregation at Wabash, Ind. The pastor's pride is in the "balance" of his congregation, which observes yearly, beginning with education day, all the special offerings of the brotherhood, with fair contributions. In the four years of his pastorate more than $12,000 has been expended for all purposes, in addition to the purchase of a $10,000 parsonage. More than 350 members have been added to the church, and of the 625 on the roll, 400 are weekly contributors. Brother Daugherty believes that a strong church lies in a Bible studying membership, and his people put this theory in practice. There is a men's association numbering 125, a Bible school of 300, while seven district visiting committees are a feature of great strength to the congregation.

—The Men's League of the Central Church of Christ, Syracuse, N. Y., recently gave a dinner, with members of the Rowland Street Church league and of Auburn as invited guests. Just 100 were present, and the dinner was cooked and served entirely by the men of the Central church. This was the third time these three leagues had met together on such an occasion. Additional entertainment was provided in the way of orchestral music and interesting speeches. C. R. Stauffer, of the Rowland Street Church, delivered the principal address, his theme being, "The Men of New York State for the Man of Galilee." Other speakers were Arthur Braden, of Auburn, and T. F. Burgan, of Brewerton. Dr. A. G. Doust and C. G. Van Wormer, officers of the state league, also made brief addresses. Letters were read from E. A. Olly, secretary of the Men's State league, and Dr. Eli H. Long, president of N. Y. C. M. Society. We hear that the work of the Men's league in the Empire state is growing in interest, and its influence has a bearing upon the progress of the State Missionary Society.

—At the installation service held at the First Christian Church in St. Louis for Earle Wilfley, who has recently become minister of that congregation, the Editor of this paper presided, and made a brief address. Other addresses were made by Dr. J. M. Philputt, of the Union Avenue Christian Church, L. W. McCreary, of the Hamilton Avenue Church, and congratulatory remarks by Brothers Ireland, our city missionary, F. N. Calvin, of the Compton Heights Church, and C. C. Garrigues, of the Hammett Place Church. To all of which Brother Wilfley responded in an appropriate speech, outlining the spirit and purpose of his work. A social with refreshments followed. There was a good attendance present, including representatives from the other churches, and an excellent feeling prevailed. All our churches welcome Brother Wilfley to the First Church and wish him the greatest success in that field.

—J. N. Jessup has been celebrating the tenth anniversary of his pastorate of the First Christian Church of Little Rock, Ark. Speaking upon that occasion from Paul's words, "For ye are our glory and our joy," he said: "These have been beautiful years, because they have been years of positive affection. If love is 'the greatest thing in the world,' and as a motive it certainly is, why should not a record of love be kept and published? We keep a record of other things that are trivial beside it. Nothing can be said of the ten years that are now passing in review before us that is greater or truer than that they have been years of love. You have loved me. I have loved you. And together we have loved our Savior and one another. 'By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye love one another.'" That is a beautiful sort of relationship for a pastor and his church to maintain. Would that there were more illustrations of it!

—A few weeks ago the Editor joined with the Business Manager in a request to a large number of our friends, chiefly ministers, to send us at least four new subscribers, under our offer to send the paper three months on trial subscription for 25 cents. We enclosed a blank to be used for that purpose. We are grateful to very many of these friends for the generous and prompt response which they have made to our appeal to their friendship and interest in The Christian-Evangelist. Many of them have gone far beyond our request, and have sent us a score or more of names under this offer. Thousands of others who have not received any blanks or direct appeal might well join in this extension movement by sending us as many names as they can readily gather of persons who would be willing to give the paper a trial. We are expecting to hear from those whom we directly addressed, who have not yet responded. We have some important things for the paper during the next year, and we are anxious to bring these good things to as many readers as possible.

—J. W. Lowber, writing us from Austin, Texas, says that he will give up the work there next January, having ministered to this church for twelve years. "Since our good friend and brother, M. M. Davis, gave up the work in Dallas, there is no preacher in any of our cities in Texas who is preaching for the same church for which he preached when we came to Austin. The largest Methodist church in Austin has had five pastors since I came here, the University of Texas four presidents, and the state four governors. In that period Austin has added one-third to her population. Our own people have made commendable progress. Our church property, twelve years ago, was not worth more than five or six thousand dollars. We now have one of the most central and beautiful stone buildings. We have four other churches, and Sister M. M. Blankes, of Lockhart, is putting up a $16,000 building for the Bible chair. All departments of the work prosper. Our Christian Endeavor Society is the largest in the state. Mrs. Lowber and I are working hard to make this one of the most prosperous years we have had in Austin. We have already had more than seventy additions in our regular work, and hope to reach one hundred by the close of the year. Since determining to give up the work, we have had opportunity to take the presidency of a well-established college, or the pastorate of a strong, well located church. We must rest from local work, and for a time will make the world our parish. I will hold meetings, deliver social reform, Christian citizenship and educational lectures. We will probably spend most of the coming year in Texas."

The Alexander Campbell Club of Yale University.

In the fall of 1907 the Disciples in Yale University organized the Alexander Campbell Club of Yale University. This was done because there existed a feeling among the Disciples in the university that a closer fellowship might be effected among the men, and incidentally a closer fellowship with the brotherhood at large. The club was in every way a success during the school year. The men became better acquainted, and in the matter of Christian fellowship the bond of union grew much stronger.

At the opening of the academic year 1908-9 the remaining members of the club held a meeting and invited all the Disciples in all the departments of the university to attend. There were only four of the old members present, but there were present eighteen Disciples. Of that number Dr. Hiram VanKirk, who is at present in the chair of systematic theology in Yale divinity school, was one, and our esteemed W. B. Blakemore, of Bridgeport, was another. The remainder were all students in the university. The program for the evening consisted of short but able addresses by Charles E. Underwood, F. E. Lumley, Dr. VanKirk and Brother Blakemore. The schools of the Disciples were represented in numbers as follows: Bethany, 6; Hiram, 5; Transylvania (K. U.), 3; Butler, 2; Cotner, 1; Milligan, 1. The evening passed away very pleasantly.

Campfire of the Bible College of Missouri.

It is the custom of the faculty and students of the Bible College of Missouri to go once a year for an outing in the woods. The time chosen is the early fall, when the brilliant colors first appear on the trees. The purpose is to unite the faculty, its students and friends in a band of sympathetic understanding. Classes and other work aside, all give themselves over to a season of fellowship and good cheer.

We meet late in the evening when the sun strikes across the tree tops of our little hollow and leaves us only enough light to gather in the fire wood and prepare the meal. Then at dusk we gather round the cloth and break the bread of fraternity.

This is only the beginning. Later we gather round the campfire and hear in turn those who are called upon by the crowd. It is no occasion of set speeches; each speaks of the things nearest his heart. The work is discussed; plans are made; stories are told; songs are sung. Later some stand near the fire and read letters from our graduates in the mission field and at home. Letters from different points in Japan, from India, from Mexico, from Cuba, from the East and the West of our own country; all these come annually bringing messages to those still at the old campfire.

And those at the campfire are the faithful faculty, students from Missouri University, from Christian College, from Vassar and from numerous other places throughout the country. The student of laws and letters, the teacher, the farmer, the missionary and the preacher, all stop their work to join in the kind of gathering that can best unite those of the most diversified callings—an assemblage of Christians.

Finally the letters are ended; the speeches are over; the fire burns low; and only the stars light our black little hollow among the trees. We sing the Christians' parting song and file away to our homes, happy in the thought of a cause that reaches so far and strikes so deep,—a cause which, as its leader has said, is drawing all men away from indefinite and aimless searchings and turning them toward himself. Old Bethany College Students, Attention!

It is desirable to have as complete a list of the names and addresses for our Centennial celebration of old Bethany College students as can possibly be obtained. We ought to have a grand rally of these students at that time, and to know something of what they are doing. Indeed, this is absolutely necessary if the Bethany feature of our Centennial shall be what it ought to be.

In order to secure this end, I desire to make the following request:

(1) Let some student of Bethany (whether a graduate or not) take it upon himself to find out the names and addresses of all the old students within his reach, especially in his town or county where he lives. This can be done without much effort, and it will greatly facilitate our work for Bethany, if these names and addresses can be secured as early as possible.

(2) Let every one who undertakes this matter send me a list of the names and addresses secured. No one need wait for some one else to do it. It matters not if a half dozen, or a dozen, are engaged in the same business within the same county. This will make the matter more certain and facilitate the result.

(3) It is not necessary that this matter shall be taken up by an old student of the college. Any one may undertake to supply these names. It may be that some sister of an old student, or some one connected by fleshly ties, will do this. Many women can help in this matter if they will at once go to work. But it would be better still if some Christian woman or man, who recognizes the great work Bethany College has done for our cause, will feel interested enough in the matter to inaugurate this quest. Of course, I expect the old college students to be most interested in the matter, but there are others also who can help. Just so the work is done, it makes little difference about who shall do it.

Now do not put this important work off for a convenient season. It is imperative that I should have these names and addresses at as early a moment as possible. If you have been a student, the moment you see this, send me your name and address, and then add to the list as many more as you can obtain.

Hot Springs, Arkansas, Work.

We believe hard times will pass and we are therefore preparing to open up the Hot Springs work again. It will be the most strenuous effort of our lives, under prevailing conditions, to complete this work during 1909, but we must do it. The lot is excavated, all work up to the present paid for, and we are now waiting for funds sufficient on hand to award the contract for the building. This we can not do until we have considerable money on hand. The task before us is this: we must sell the old building, a thing hard to do, and get its worth under present conditions. We must collect $1,500 of unpaid local subscriptions and raise an additional $2,500 more in Hot Springs. We must raise at large from the churches, Sunday-schools and friends of mission work $7,500, with which to meet the loan of the Board of Church Extension. This must be done during the year 1909. Besides this, I must get up 108 sermons, make about 1,200 calls during the year, give advice and some assistance to about 2,000 visiting brethren, preach funerals and marry people, with many other little details that enter into a busy minister's life. Who was it that said we made such slow progress with the Hot Springs work? If we had no other duties than financing the Hot Springs proposition, I am sure that we could make better progress, but as it is we have done our best.

Many hands make light work; if this is to be accomplished during 1909 I must have your help. I just must go up to Pittsburg with a report that the mission church at Hot Springs has been built and dedicated. If I can not, there will be no Centennial for me. For five long years I have striven to be able to do this. Fires and panics have made it impossible. Now just one year remains, and you see what I have to do by the outline that I have given you. Will you not help?

A Suburbanville Episode.

The stove-warmers at a grocery witnessed a lively explosion of wrath the other evening, when Mr. R. R. Commuter stalked into the store and viciously thrust a package under the nose of the man behind the counter, demanded: "Are you the man who sent this 'infernal machine' to my housekeeper?" Dodging behind a flour barrel, the grocer stammeringly asked: "What d-do you mean?"

"I mean this,—this deadly bottle of stove-blacking, which is just the same fire-brand kind that set my neighbor's house on fire last month," retorted the enraged Commuter, and banging the package on the counter, he shouted: "Don't you know that sane people will not allow this stuff on their premises any more than an open Kerosene Can. Give me a package of X-Ray Stove Polish, and if ever you send any other kind into my family, you'll hear from me, and the neighbors can send the flowers. You understand.—"X-Ray Stove Polish, or none, at our house!"

A CRESCENT CITY ECHO.

On Tuesday morning of the Convention I was hurrying to the Athenæum. The Mission Study Class was assembling and I wanted to get some books and get back before it opened. There were a number of books to carry and I asked a young man on the street to help me take them over. He took an armful and so did I. The Study class seemed to interest him.

As we gathered up the copies of "The Challenge of the City," which had been studied, we talked about the session. "How did you like it?" I asked. "I think it was wonderful, it has helped me so," he said. Then we talked on for nearly an hour. "What Church are you connected with?" I asked. He said, "I belong to the Episcopal Church and had hoped to enter their priesthood, but I have grown away from their positions." "How long since you discovered that your views were different?" "It has been a development with me; each year for the last five I have found myself further and further from their positions, until now I am entirely out of touch with them and am looking for a clearer and simpler religion." Then I said to him, "Do you understand the position of our people who want to be 'Christians' only?" "No, I never heard of the Christian Church until this convention—tell me about it."

Then I tried to tell, and as I did, I found him ready to accept each position. Most of the time he was a few steps ahead of me, waiting for my statements, and as they came he greeted each one with "I have always thought that, it's just how I feel, but I never knew there was a Church so near my own heart's wishes."

Warren Heideman talked on with me, and noting his power and ability and remembering his former idea of entering the ministry in the Episcopal Chruch, I pointed out that it might be his duty to enter it in the Christian Church. He said if the way opened he would go to prepare for it.

I immediately hunted up Brother Ashley Johnson, of Kimberlin Heights, who has helped so many young men with no asset but faith, and told him about Warren. I had them meet, and the result was, Brother Johnson said he would take him back with him. The young man seemed overflowing with joy.

Then the sad part came: the parents would not let Warren go; he was only nineteen and a minor, so their interposition could spoil all the plans. A personal visit was made to the home, and I tried to show that perhaps this was the opportunity of the young man's life, but nothing seemed to move them. Finally, the parents relented a little and permitted the plans to be carried out, but their blessing was withheld, and the young man understood that to leave might mean the end of years of sweet relationship. Brother Johnson said to him, as the ticket was being purchased, 'It means a good deal for a young man to leave his mother and father and go on a course against their wishes; you had better not burn the bridges after you if you ever expect to use them again." Warren looked up into Brother Johnson's face, a tear started, his frame quivered, but his handgrasp was firm and his voice clear when he replied, "I understand what it all means, but I'll go—I'll go!"

He went. I spent the following Sunday at Kimberlin Heights, took Warren's confession and later baptized him in the Tennessee River at the foot of those beautiful hills. As I drove away from the Heights, the last vision I had was that of Warren Heidemann with that smile of happiness, and the last echo I remember is his voice saying, "I have never been so happy before; if I had it all to do over again, it would be the same, I am sure the Lord is guiding my steps in His way." The New Organization for Men—R. A. Long Elected President —Prize Offered for a Name.

One of the most important things done at the New Orleans convention was the definite decision to enter vigorously upon the work of organizing the men of the brotherhood for definite Christian service in an endeavor to realize effectively the aims of the association authorized at the Detroit convention, and to go beyond those aims by as much as our present vision goes beyond that of a few years ago.

A committee was appointed at New Orleans with power to act, being constituted as follows: R. A. Long, Burris A. Jenkins, Fletcher Cowherd, C. M. Chilton, W. Daviess Pittman, J. H. Allen, and one other, whose name has escaped memory at the moment of writing.

The committee met at 2:30 p. m. on Monday, November 2, in Kansas City, with the following present: Fletcher Cowherd (in the chair), C. M. Chilton, B. A. Jenkins, R. A. Long, Dr. George H. Combs, W. F. Richardson and Brother Ridges, all of Kansas City, also joining in the conference.

R. A. Long, of Kansas City, was elected president.

Brother Long was reluctant to add to his already heavy administrative burdens by assuming the direction of a new work of such a vast importance, but the earnest expression of every one present, and his own sympathetic appreciation of the necessities of such an organization, combined in leading him to undertake the responsibility. The significance of this to our whole brotherhood is at once apparent. It means that we are to have at the head of the new movement one of the great captains of industry, whose name is everywhere in the business world synonymous with success. Brother Long accepts the work with expressions of genuine humility and his usual spirit of high consecration; and under his leadership we may confidently seek and expect the richest blessing of the Father upon the enterprise.

The headquarters of the new organization were fixed at Kansas City, and P. C. Macfarlane, of Alameda, Cal., was invited to become secretary. Brother Macfarlane was present and, after full conference, agreed to accept the work as soon as he could be relieved from his charge at Alameda without jeopardizing the local interests. The committee instructed the secretary to enter into communication, by correspondence and otherwise, with the leading men in our brotherhood, and with the leaders in men's work of other communions, and form a plan of definite organization, to be presented for discussion and adoption at the next meeting.

It was further decided to offer a prize of $25 for the best name for the national organization, the name to consist of from two to four words, either alliterating or combining euphoniously, and to be suggestive, if possible, of the scope, spirit and aim of the work; as, for example, "Christian Endeavor" is. Send names proposed to the secretary at 876 Laurel street, Alameda, Cal.

The aim is not a male Christian Endeavor society, nor a masculine C. W. B. M., but an organization of men by men for Christ and the Church, which will come to have just as settled a place in the work of every church and pastor as has the Christian Endeavor society or C. W. B. M. auxiliary.

A study will be made of all existing organizations in the church, including men's clubs of various kinds, men's Bible classes and laymen's missionary movements, with a view to discovering the golden thread of unity that runs through all, and incorporating this in the national organization as the norm of the local fellowship, and allowing the widest latitude for adoption to peculiar needs and conditions of particular fields.

Correspondence or suggestions, with plans of organization and history of success and failures already made in local fields, is earnestly solicited by the secretary, whose address is given above.

Fifty Years for a Michigan Church.

The Church of Christ of Bloomington, Mich., is holding its fiftieth anniversary, and the program is full and rich.

A. E. Cary, the active pastor, has planned well and wisely and the brethren gave him a hearty support. The men's banquet was attended by 76 men. The fellowship was most enjoyable. Dr. Ransom presided and the speeches were most happy and appropriate. Lathrop Cooley was one of the early pastors about fifty years ago, and although now 87 he is well preserved and delivered an address. F. P. Arthur spoke on Sunday.

The second fifty years opens with a fine outlook and we rejoice in the prospect.

Fifty years of church history means much, especially in the state of Michigan.

F. P. Arthur.

There is a faithful little band of disciples at Germania, Ark., who are making an effort to secure a church building. The holidays will soon be here and disciples at Germania propose to furnish Mistletoe and to send it to any postoffice in the United States. Send your orders in early and not be disappointed. They also offer a fine chance to secure Muscadine grape vines—just send the Ladies' Aid Society a quarter and they will send you three nice vines.

Report of the Centennial Committee at New Orleans.

Three years we have been agitating, equipping, drilling, preparing for the crowning year. Three generations we have been growing, multiplying, organizing for the grand achievements contemplated in our Centennial aims. Let no hand or heart fail in the day of harvest!

Not only should there be special Centennial sermons from time to time, but the Centennial note should appear in every sermon. Not only should there be distinctive Centennial meetings but the Centennial purpose should enter every meeting of every department of every church. (The Pittsburg Ministerial Association has a devotional Centennial quarter of an hour at the beginning of every weekly session.) Not only should there be special Centennial issues of all church newspapers and magazines, but every issue ought to bristle with Centennial matter: History, first principles, campaign reports, stories of the pioneers, current records of missionaries, evangelists and teachers, pictures of persons and places of either historic or present interest. Every man who has a stereopticon should not only deliver illustrated Centennial lectures, but introduce a few Centennial pictures into every lecture. In short, every man who is concerned about the advancement of liberty and union in the truth should count himself a Centennial agitator and draw on the Centennial bureau in Pittsburg for literature and assistance.

In every congregation some souls shine out in the modest glory of symmetrical Christian character. Here and there is a church in which these are numerous enough to stamp the body apostolic. Look at Bolenge, with all its members and twice as many more studying God's word constantly, giving from one-tenth to one-half their incomes and supporting every tenth member as a missionary! See Bethany, Nebraska, with a hundred giving beyond the tenth and making Cotner University a dynamo of Christian purpose as well as a magazine of Christian equipment. Behold the same vital and vitalizing faith in every one of our college communities. To call the roll is to thrill the hearts of all who know. See North Tonawanda Tabernacle, Bellefontaine, Alexandria, Cameron, Fourth Akron, Tuxedo, Md., Jubbulpore and most of the foreign churches enrolling every soul of their increasing membership in the study of God's word and enlisting each in the service of love. Mark the influence of representative churches of Christ in all sections of the continent. The ripe fruit of apostolic Christianity will draw all men to the divine tree. Let the leaf of doctrine and the flower of ordinance fulfill their promise!

Improved organization, hand-to-hand effort, Centennial enthusiasm and apostolic consecration have enabled most of the state societies to come through a trying year with substantial gains. All have done noble work. With better financial conditions they may all be depended upon to realize their Centennial aims this year, hold each a fine Centennial convention of its own, and come on to Pittsburg for a grand reunion of thanksgiving.

The Centennial aims are being splendidly realized. Let especial emphasis be placed upon: 1. The primacy of prayer. Our religion rests in divine power or utterly fails. 2. The necessity for having our church papers in every home. He who knows nothing does nothing, is nothing. 3. The Bible school advance. Each state systematically striving to realize its quota of the aims. The Lord's servant of whatever age should be in the Lord's house, on the Lord's day, studying the Lord's word with the rest of the Lord's people. If it is important for the child to learn God's word, it is important that the man should know it. 4. The securing of one thousand recruits to our ministry this year, each state definitely furnishing its share. 5. The realization of the published aims of every institution and organization, to a total of $2,000,000. This is our Centennial.

Heroic sacrifice is not only justified but required.

The Centennial bureau has issued this year 44,000 circular letters, 20,000 copies of the Declaration and Address and 130,000 leaflets. The secretary traveled 33,632 miles (40,545 in the calendar year 1907), and spoke 207 times in 13 colleges, 20 conventions, 45 rallies and 78 churches. The last Centennial teacher's certificate issued was No. 2019.

The provisional program for the Centennial celebration provides for the usual sessions of our annual conventions, beginning Monday evening, October 11, with a Christian Endeavor rally, and culminating Friday evening, October 15, with a Bible school demonstration. The night sessions will occupy three halls with parallel schedules. Saturday, October 16, is to be Centennial day, with addresses on the following themes in four or five halls simultaneously:

1. "The Origin of the Restoration Movement." 2. "Thomas Campbell and the Principles He Promulgated." 3. "Alexander Campbell, Barton W. Stone and Walter Scott: Advocates of Liberty and Union in the Truth." 4. "Isaac Errett's Contribution to the Movement." 5. "Progress and Achievements of a Hundred Years." 6. "Outlook and Appeal." 7. "The Place of the Lord's Supper in the Movement." 8. "The Lordship of Christ."

Interspersed through these sessions will be fraternal addresses from England and Australia and from leading religious bodies of America. Sunday the pulpits of Greater Pittsburg, as well as the convention halls, will be occupied by representative preachers reserved from earlier sessions for the purpose. Every session from Monday to Sunday will be marked by appropriate demonstrations: The presentation of missionaries and representatives from all lands, the review of Bible classes, colleges and college classes attending in a body, the roll call on Centennial aims, etc., etc., etc. The crowning event of the week will be the observance of the Lord's Supper Sunday afternoon, October 17.

Report of the Action of the Committee at Pittsburg.

Only one day's sessions have yet been provided for, and that not completely. Within a short while the Committee hopes to announce a provisional arrangement and list of speakers for the entire convention. Meanwhile the following statement is submitted to the brotherhood.

"By unanimous action of the General Centennial Committee Professor Herbert L. Willett was selected with thirty-nine others to speak on the Centennial Program. After the recent discussion as to his views, by a misunderstanding of conversation and correspondence the report gained currency that in the interest of peace Professor Willett had declined to speak. At New Orleans the Committee learned that he only meant to leave the matter with it for final action. On the 19th of October, after Professor Willett at the Committee's request had met with it in Pittsburg and made a statement of his reasons for not voluntarily withdrawing from the Program, by a vote of eight to three the Committee laid upon the table a motion demanding his resignation. In neither case did the Committee consider itself an ecclesiastical court to pass upon Professor Willett's theological views.

"The following members of the Committee were present: A. McLean, T. W. Phillips, Geo. B. Ranshaw (proxy for W. J. Wright), R. S. Latimer, Mrs. Ida W. Harrison, J. G. Slayter, G. W. Muckley, Wallace Tharp, J. H. Mohorter, O. H. Phillips, W. R. Warren."

TENNESSEE CONVENTION.

The state meeting of the Churches of Christ was held this year with the churches in the city of Chattanooga, Oct. 26-29. The sessions were all held in the Walnut Street Church, but the other churches were all joined with it in caring for the convention. While the convention was not as largely attended as it was last year, there were several reasons for this. The convention was to have met with the church at Rockwood, but the city was quarantined on account of scarlet fever, and at almost the last moment the place had to be changed. Ira Boswell and his church came to the board asking the convention to come to Chattanooga, and no convention which it has been the pleasure of your correspondent to attend was ever better handled or more delightfully entertained.

The meeting was opened Monday night with president J. T. McKissick in the chair, with a good attendance of delegates from all parts of the state. The mayor of the city was represented by Ira M. Boswell in a welcoming address on behalf of the city. Dr. J. A. Baylor, of the Methodist Church, welcomed the delegates on behalf of the Pastors' Union. R. Lin Cave, of Nashville, responded in a happy manner, referring to the first meeting of the Tennessee Society, which met in this city nineteen years ago, when no mayor gave us a welcome, nor did any pastors' association bid us welcome, as we were but a weak and unknown people at that time.

J. J. Castleberry, of Union City, was the speaker of the evening, and delivered a splendid address on "The Overplus Life" (text found in Matt. 5:4 and Luke 10:35). He said that Christ's Sermon on the Mount stamps him as the world's greatest moral Teacher, and the parable of the Good Samaritan characterized him as unique in his method as he was original in his conception.

Tuesday morning was given to Sunday-school work, the session being presided over by J. E. Crouch, of Johnson City. E. C. Wilson told how to organize the work of the Sunday-school in good shape. R. M. Giddens told of some needed changes. J. T. Brown spoke of the Sunday-school as an evangelizing force among our foreign population. He said that there were more Germans in New York City than in any city in the world, outside of Berlin, and that the same city held more Italians than any other save Rome and Naples; hence the need for work among these people. P. Y. Pendleton talked on the co-operation of the officers of the church with the Sunday-school.

The afternoon session was in charge of Dr. F. D. Kerschner, president of Milligan College, and the theme was "The Permanent Value of Education for the Future Welfare of the Church." He went on to say that Mr. Campbell, like other great leaders, was well aware that the period of propaganda would not suffice for the permanent future of the current reformation. He knew that propaganda must be followed by education, and so the concluding years of his life were devoted to founding a newspaper and building a college. While our propaganda has been pushed extensively, and with the most gratifying results, we have entirely failed to keep pace with his ideas of education. Bethany College, for instance, with no criticism whatever upon those who now have, or have had it in charge, has altogether failed to maintain a proportionate pace with the rapid advance of the brotherhood. It is not yet too late for us to heed the warnings of past history and present experience, but we are approaching the danger line. We must educate, and thereby lay the foundation for permanent progress, or God will take the mission he has entrusted to us out of our hands and commit it to others.

At the evening session secretary A. J. Myhr presented the report of the board. It was stated that the year just closed was the most successful in the history of the organization in awakening the people to their responsibilities; in the large number of workers employed; in the number of churches assisted and meetings held, and in the larger number of additions to the churches. At the last convention the board was instructed to work with the end in view of accomplishing certain things, and accordance with these instructions the board has employed a Sunday-school evangelist, has done much toward enlisting the sympathy and co-operation of business in the work of the church, and has increased the permanent fund. During the past year the board has organized new churches at Edison, Gibson county, Mountain City, Memphis and Cranberry, N. C. It has supported ministers at Elizabethtown, Bingampton, in Roane county, and supported work in the border counties of North Carolina. The results of investments of the board for the past year show additions to churches, 1,412; churches organized, six; meetings held, forty-two. The money secured for permanent and current fund was over eleven thousand dollars.

Wednesday morning was given over to a business men's conference, led by J. O. Check, of Nashville, one of the city's leading men. The session was a live one, and good talks were made by a number of business men, and a large committee appointed to work up an interest in next year's meeting, which will be with the church at Murfreesboro. Following Mr. Check's address, short talks were made by Messrs. Harding, of Johnson City; Taylor, of Milligan; J. E. Crouch, of Nashville; Dr. E. T. Jones, of Murfreesboro; Dr. Scott, of Jellico, and P. Y. Pendleton, of Nashville.

R. Lin Cave addressed the convention, taking as his subject, "The Uplifted Christ." Dr. Cave made an entertaining and scholarly talk. The afternoon session was taken up with reports of committees and general business of interest to the convention. Among other business was the reading of obituaries of the members who have died during the past year. Milligan College, at Milligan, Tenn., was placed in charge of the convention. At the night session an eloquent sermon was preached by R. E. Moss, of Johnson City, on "The Universal Creed." He said: "Every organization, whether governmental, political or religious, must have its creed. The constitution of the United States is America's governmental creed and every citizen should be a living embodiment of the constitution. So with the Christian; he must be the human incarnation of the truth of his creed."

Hugh McLellan, of Richmond, Ky., presented our Centennial aims in a beautiful address, and the Church Extension work in Tennessee, showing that we had put $6,000 into Church Extension and had gotten $16,000 back. This speaks well for Church Extension. W. H. Hanna, living link missionary in the Philippine Islands for the church at Washington, Pa., gave us a fine talk on the work in his field.

The last afternoon and evening were taken up by the ladies of the C. W. B. M., and they showed us men how to do things. Reports were read from all the auxiliaries in the state, and all reports showed gains all along the line. Twenty-five hundred dollars was raised from all sources, and there was substantial growth in every part of the work. Mrs. M. E. Harlan, national secretary, was the principal speaker, and she gave us a large vision of world-wide mission work. H. J. Derthick, of Hazel Green, Ky., gave us a great talk on our mountain people and their needs, after which a collection was taken, amounting to about $435. Thus came to an end a very profitable convention, which showed progress along all lines of work.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS.

The Work at Fort Smith.

I spent my vacation supplying the pulpit of the Church of Christ in Fort Smith, Ark. The church enjoyed the helpful ministry of E. T. Edmunds during a pastorate of about fifteen years. Under his ministry a beautiful stone building costing about $30,000, was erected, and the congregation was builded up until it numbers now 500 to 600 members, and many of the leading citizens of the city are among this number.

The congregation lately called to the pastorate E. B. Bagby, formerly of the Franklin Circle Church, in Cleveland, O., and prior to that for over fifteen years the pastor of one of our churches in Washington, D. C. The church in Fort Smith and Brother Bagby are to be congratulated on their new relationship. Under his leadership the church will go on to still greater achievement and at no distant day it should take its place among the strongest and most efficient congregations in the entire brotherhood. During my stay in Fort Smith our services were well attended and six young men and one young woman were baptized and another young woman united with the congregation from the Baptists. The Sunday-school had about 200 in attendance and is a vigorous organization. The Berean class, taught by Brother Gilmore, proposes to be one of 500 to give $2,500 to home missions this year. The Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor is also a very active body, and through them the church recently became a living link in home missions. On my return to Drake three young men, members of the church, came with me, one of them certainly to study for the ministry, and the other two to discover their places in the world of usefulness.

Five Years at Palestine, Texas.

L. D. Anderson has been minister of the First Christian Church at Palestine, Texas, five years. The anniversary service was devoted largely to a roll call of the membership, and reports from the various departments. The Sunday-school, George A. Wright, superintendent, reported an enrollment of over 500, and the largest attendance in its history. The treasurer, A. N. Kane, reported the total receipts for the five years, not including loans, $25,349.36, and total expenditures $25,209.18, with a balance on hand of $140.18. Additional funds raised and expended by departments direct, hence not included in the above, make a total of a little more than $30,000. The material progress consists largely in the comfortable new parsonage, and elegant church building, the latter erected at a cost of about $20,000. The clerk, E. V. Swift, reported a total of 542 additions to the church. Of these 411 were by baptism and 131 by letter, statement, etc. There was a total loss for the five years of 138, leaving a net gain of 404. The present membership, including only those nonresident members whose absence is temporary, is 804. Encouraging and commendable reports were made by all departments. Though the men have been organized only a few months there is a membership of nearly 100, and they reported some most excellent work. Although the offerings for missionary work during the past two or three years have been small, resulting from the expense of building the new church, the members have not lost interest, as is evidenced by the resolution adopted to attempt for the ensuing year to become a living link, under the state, the home and the foreign board, not forgetting to make a creditable offering for education and benevolence. It is confidently expected that this goal will be reached.

Georgia.

From October 19-22 the Northeast district held its annual convention at Watkinsville, with 150 delegates, including 14 preachers, in attendance. This is the largest district in the state, having between 35 and 40 churches and over 4,000 members. In attendance and enthusiasm the annual conventions of this district almost rival our state conventions. This convention was carried to a high pitch in enthusiasm on missions, education and orphanage work by B. P. Smith, our state secretary, J. H. Wood, W. A. Chastain, W. B. Shaw, I. E. Cowling and others. The women came in for their share and the district managers, Sister David Burson and Sister W. Joe Elder, were greatly assisted by Sister H. K. Pendleton, state president of the C. W. B. M., and Sister B. O. Miller, state president of the Woman's Society for Georgia Missions. All in all it was a pleasant and profitable convention. The convention of 1909 will be held at Statham. The annual convention of the Atlanta district will be held at Liberty Church, Coweta County, October 30, 31 and November 1. F. L. Adams, C. R. Miller, H. C. Dodson, B. P. Smith. O. A. Moore, D. A Brindle are the preachers on program The state convention will be held at Fitzgerald, November 9-12. E. E. Hollinworth, Fitzgerald, is the one to write to for any particulars relative to entertainment. I preached at Acworth, October 25. Two additions by letter. E. E. Violett is leading a great meeting for the First Church, Atlanta.

Some Central New York News.

D. H. Bradbury, who, during the past year, has been assistant pastor at One-hundred-sixty-ninth Street Church of New York City, has recently located with the church at Pompey, not far from Syracuse. The Pompey church had been without a pastor for several months, but Brother Bradbury reports a reviving interest in all lines of work. He is also taking studies in Auburn Theological Seminary at Auburn.——Reports come from Auburn that the year's work has opened favorably under the energetic leadership of Arthur Braden. A thriving mission in the southeastern part of the city promises to soon develop into a second church for Auburn. The field is growing and has no church near the mission.——We are sorry to learn that Brother Chamberlain, of Throopsville, "the Grand Old Man" of New York, has not been enjoying good health of late. We pray that he may regain his strength and be spared to us for some time to come, as his great store of experiences is always helpful to the younger men in the New York ministry. ——The Central Church of Syracuse, under the leadership of Brother Serena, is showing a growth in interest in the various departments, especially the Bible school. Miss Lemert will conduct a Bible school campaign during November and the outlook is good for a very profitable year for the mother church of Syracuse.—— The plan of co-operation and ownership of Keuka College jointly by the Disciples and Free Baptists, will no doubt mark a new era in the history of the Disciples in Central New York. The college is beautifully located at Keuka Park, an ideal place for a college of the nature of Keuka.——Work at the Rowland Street Church of Syracuse has been progressing nicely. Two new lots have been purchased and are about paid for. Plans are being formed for the new house of worship to be erected soon. There is a continued interest in all departments of the work. A meeting with home forces will begin November 8.——The writer has been appointed Centennial secretary of the Central District of New York, by order of the New York Christian Missionary Society. It is hoped that every church in the Central District will do its best to attain as many of the Centennial aims as possible. Your secretary will be glad to co-operate with any church in our Centennial campaign. He will be glad to receive any news items that may prove of interest in general. C. R. Stauffer.

Kentucky Missions.

Now that Kentucky is united there will be no reporting from my field as "South Kentucky Missions," but this field will be known as Kentucky Missions, Western Kentucky. The union consummated at the Kentucky Christian Convention at Hopkinsville was a matter that caused great joy. Let it be understood that H. W. Elliott, Sulphur, Ky., is the corresponding secretary and treasurer for the whole state and that all reports of work done, as well as all money received, should be made and sent to him. It will take some little time to get everything in hand under the new arrangement, but it is to be hoped that all reports will be made to Brother Elliott promptly, so that he will have no trouble in making his monthly report to the committee which meets in Lexington on the first Saturday in each month. We are now prepared to do better and greater work in Kentucky than ever, and I hope we will not fail to improve the opportunity. Send all offerings for Kentucky Missions, from Fulton County on the Southwest to the farthest county on the Northeast, East and Southeast to H. W. Elliott, Sulphur, Ky. No more East Kentucky, no more West Kentucky, no more Central Kentucky, no more Pennyroyal nor Blue Grass Kentucky, but "Old Kaintucky," East, West North and South. Let this be our aim, "Kentucky for Christ."

On the Way to Tokyo.

Our first furlough at home began at St. Luke's Hospital, Chicago. It closed at Ansley, Neb., where father and mother dwell. Good health, good cheer, friends at home and others in Japan, beaconing across the great deep, made our closing days in America a song of joy. There are those to whom the assurance that time and space are annihilated in these days, will always seem flippant and unfeeling. They are the parents who part with their children for foreign service. Tender and pathetic were the last moments with the ones who loved us most. A dear little laddie at Valdosta, Ga., wept because we proposed leaving Edith, our eldest, in the United States. I trust he will dry his tears and know that at the last moment we decided to take her on to Tokyo.

On the way to the coast we stopped at Manitou and at Salida, Colo. At the latter place we were entertained by W. B. Crewdson. He showed us through a splendid church building he has just completed, and, better still, told us of a son he has given to the ministry. From Salida we rode over Marshal Pass and through the Black canyon of the Gunnison River. It is a dream, a wonder gorge, magnificent art gallery of verdure and awful rocks chiseled by the sprites of time and flood. At Grand Junction, Colo., we were met by J. H. McCartney, and spent Lord's day with the Disciples of this growing city. Brother McCartney and wife are graduates of Hiram and are serving well a good-sized congregation. At Salt Lake City we arrived too late to speak. Though it was near midnight, Albert Buxton was waiting for us. Th next day, under his good-natured guidance, we visited Fort Douglas and heard the great organ at the Mormon tabernacle. We also sampled the buoyant quality of Great Salt Lake. Salt Lake City, with its wide streets, lying snug against the Wasatch Mountains, is one of the most beautifully located cities in the world. A fine example of what our government is doing for the thirsty yet fertile soil in certain valleys, long enslaved by granite ranges, is at Montrose, Colo. Here there is being constructed, in cement, a six mile underground tunnel, fifteen feet in diameter, which taps the wild waters of the Gunnison. Ultimately it will turn its savage dashings into juicy fruit and fragrant fields of green alfalfa.

San Francisco has changed greatly in sixteen months. The streets are now clean. Sky-scrapers lift their proud heads where once was the tangled debris of fire and earthquake. Here we clasped hands with I. N. McCash; also S. P. Bentley, an old-time friend. We were driven among the hills near the city's reservoir and in and out past the summer homes of multimillionaires. Such a profusion of flowers and artistic gardening would be hard to find, even in Japan. For nearly six months our rooms had been selected on the Manchuria, to sail August 25. It was a bright day of sunshine. Our satchels, our trunks, our children are at last all aboard. Here we find some love letters and postals from acquaintances awaiting us. The gongs soon sound, friends and relatives hastily say their last kind words, the propellers whirl, the bow heads outward through the Golden Gate, and a widening briny gulf soon separates us from native land and many who have promised to pray for us, from Florida to Dakota, from Virginia to California.

At sunset the second day at sea we passed through the armored cruiser fleet, on its way to Honolulu and Samoa. There were seven cruisers. Each had a slate-colored, restless torpedo boat destroyer astern, towed by a ten-inch cable. The Manchuria passed within 200 feet alongside the flagship, the "West Virginia." Both decks were swarming with real Americans. Admiral Swinburne, chief in command, shouted through the megaphone to his wife, who is with us on the bridge, "Mrs. Swinburne is a good sailor." The marine band played gleefully, we shouted and reshouted and waved our hats and handkerchiefs.

That evening, as we left our squadron far behind in the gathering twilight, and one by one the stars came out, it seemed as if our whole earth were but a tiny toy floating in God's unfathomed expanse of creation. How transient things of time become! How vain to oppose the will of him who ruleth in the heavens. A peace and joy inexpressible came over my soul! By his grace—in the new and more precious creation of eternal, Godlike spirits—I was upon a mission equally important with the sweep of every distant sun. And thus I lay me down to sleep content, thinking of dear ones hidden below the eastern horizon.

Fred E. Hagin.

[We are glad to report the safe arrival of Brother Hagin and family in Tokyo. He will send regular letters to The Christian Evangelist about things Japanese.—EDITOR.]

Colorado Mission Field.

I am still in the mission field and the work is growing. I make regular visits to the Christian church near Elbert, on the summit of the divide, where we have a noble band of brethren living on large ranches. From the summit we look away to "Snowy Range," and 75 miles away Gray's Peak lifts its white and glistening dome.

In September I spent twenty days in Limon, and organized the first Christian church in that new field, with twenty-seven charter members. There is also a new Bible school and I visit them monthly. On October 25 I visited Fountain, preaching in Woodman Hall. By phone I was called to La Junta, my former field, to attend a funeral, and next day held a special service and took the confession and baptized the husband of the dear sister I had just buried.

There are calls from the new fields, viz., Arriba, Calhan and Burlington, and I also hope to visit Hugo. This month I will hold a meeting at Burlington, with a view of organizing a church in that county seat. We have many bands of brethren scattered in town and country here in Colorado, and the field is indeed ripe for the harvest.

Dedication at Colchester, Ill.

The new church building at Colchester is completed and was dedicated Sunday, October 25. The day was not the best, but the people were there and they, with their minister, were in fine fettle. The building cost $7,000, and there was $2,000 to raise, but the committee called, the people were willing and the money came. The Stevens brothers of Chicago, silk merchants, came, as it was their old home, and gave $2,800 in memory of their father and mother, and there is a beautiful memorial window with the names of the good old people on it. The house is a modern brick, finished and furnished in gold and antique oak. There are a number of rooms, and it is a comfortable and convenient workshop. The little city is justly proud of it.

Brethren Hale, Shiplett and Cash are the neighboring ministers who came to visit, and Mrs. Sarah McCoy Crank, of Missouri, who held a successful meeting here, was present and very active in the services. She remained to preach a few nights. N. E. Cory, the minister, is a great church builder, and he lived up to his reputation here. Though the oldest active minister of the state, he has the energy of youth and the judgment of a sage, and he knows how to bring things to pass. He and his good wife are choice spirits, and they go to serve the new Second Church, Keokuk, Iowa.

Work Among the Coalies.

The attention of the American Christian Missionary Society has been called to the great need of Christian work in the coal fields of Southern West Virginia and Southwest Virginia. I was employed as Special Coal Field Evangelist for this territory. Beginning work April 1, I have preached and presented the cause at the following places in West Virginia: Bluefield, Bramwell, Godfrey, Vivian, Welch, Berwind, Canebrake, Iaeger, Williamson and Matewan; and in Virginia: Tazewell, Graham, Richlands. Town Hill, Raven, Baptist Valley, St. Paul and Pounding Mill. Congregations were organized at Matewan, Berwind and Raven. That at Berwind is composed of eighteen members, about half of whom are Baptists. A good Sunday-school was also organized at Matewan and placed under the competent superintendence of Thos. Chambers. This congregation has a neat church building, which had not been used for three years. H. A. Bailiss, a Baptist preacher of good character, and very zealous in the cause of the Master, is the pastor of this union congregation at Berwind. Brethren Alley and Burton are elders of the Matewan congregation, both of whom are preachers. J. R. Sparks is the pastor at Raven, Virginia. The Matewan church was organized with twenty-three members and a Sunday-school of fifty scholars, and the Raven church was organized with sixty-one members.

I assisted the pastor in a fifteen days' meeting at Raven, when 34 were added to the church, about half of whom were baptized during the meeting. Our congregation at that place now numbers ninety-five members. H. C. Combs, secretary of the State Mission Board of Virginia, preached for this congregation, at which time he took its first offering for missions.

The three churches organized have now a total membership of about 150. As the Master translated his message into the language of the shepherds, husbandmen, etc., so I am trying to translate it into the language of the coal miner and operator, something like this:

"God is the President and original owner of all the stock of the corporation; Christ is General Manager; and the Holy Spirit, the Superintendent. All workers are stockholders in such amounts as they are willing to invest. The co-operative, instead of the competitive principle, is the working basis. The divine nature is the capital stock, which is communicated through the promises, upon the terms and conditions fixed by the General Manager. A record of all stockholders is kept in the Lamb's book of life, and daily dividends are declared according to services rendered. The coal to be mined represents truths contained in the Bible. The light and warmth contained in the coal is likened unto that contained in the Word. These must be dug out by each miner with his intellect, represented by his pick, guided by the lamp in his cap, the light of which represents the measure of the Holy Spirit in him. The missionary spirit is represented by the loading and sending out of the coal to light and warm up the dark, cold world, etc., etc."

Now this is only a tentative translation, in part. I think it quite likely that this will not bear a very thorough theological test. I should not like for it to fall into the hands of the higher critics, nor be "reviewed" by the extremely orthodox. If I can impress the gospel message upon the coal miner by illustrations taken from his daily occupation better than I can in the language of others, I shall continue to do so, even at the risk of being "untheological." J. N. Harmon.

Texas Missions.

The Central Church at Houston comes into line supporting a missionary under the direction of each the Foreign, Home and state boards. Watch this church grow.—The writer, in company with corresponding secretary W. J. Wright spent a delightful and profitable day with pastor A. F. Sanderson and the Central Church at Houston, Sunday, October 18.—The Second Church at Houston is starting off nicely under the ministry of G. J. Massey, who has lately taken up that work.—The church at Palestine, L. D. Anderson, pastor, has 804 members, after revising the roll. There are 500 enrolled in the Bible school. This church announces its intention to support two missionaries in Texas the coming year.—The First Church, Fort Worth, will support two missionaries in Texas and one in the foreign field. J. J. Morgan is the minister.—The Gainesville Church, Geo. L. Bush, pastor, will support two missionaries in Texas.—The churches at Marfa, T. D. Secrest, minister, and at Sabinal, where E. O. Sharpe has been minister, have both been living links this closing year, and we hope that they will continue.—Our German mission work for the present requires almost entire support. Mrs. M. M. Blanks is giving $600 per annum toward his support, and A. D. Milroy gives to the same work $300 per annum.—J. E. McGuire is the living link support of our missionary at Bay City and Palacios.—The churches at East Dallas, Greenville, Bonham, Houston, First Church, Fort Worth, Sherman and Hillsboro, each support a missionary on the foreign field.—About one hundred and fifty Texans attended the New Orleans convention and all express themselves as having been benefitted and as having enjoyed the convention and the hospitality of the New Orleans people greatly.—We all missed the cheerful, genial company and counsel of our beloved J. H. Garrison, and many a prayer has gone to the throne of grace for the preservation of his life and strength, and that he may continue with us to give his conservative, prudent and spiritual influence to the advancement of the great plea which is winning and must win the world. We need men like Garrison at this period in our history.

Southwest Oregon District Notes.

Splendid progress has been made in the southwest district during the past year. Over 500 have been added to the churches, 250 being by baptism. The aggregate number of Disciples is over 1,500. The gain during the year was remarkable.

A special convention of the churches of this district was held at Grants Pass, October 24 and 25. Among the ministers present were the following: C. F. Swander, state corresponding secretary; Mrs. Ella Humbert, state president of C. W. B. M.; W. L. Mellinger, pastor of church at Ashland; T. P. Reid, of Phoenix; H. K. Sicafoose, of Central Point; A. J. Hollingsworth, of Grants Pass, and M. F. Horn, of Medford. Many strong addresses were made and the rally was helpful to every one in attendance.

Those who have labored as evangelists in the district were J. N. McConnell, W. T. Matlock, E. C. Wigmore and R. L. Dunn. The Whiston and Martin teams are at work in the district at the present time. Whiston and Longman's meeting in Ashland resulted in 63 being added to the congregation. So far they have added 20 at Grants Pass. S. M. Martin is in a great meeting at Roseburg, with 30 added. Whiston and Longman will be at Medford during November. The work for the coming year is full of promise.

South Bend, Oct. 26.—Three baptisms at Indiana Avenue Church yesterday.—J. Randall Farris, minister.

Iowa.

Des Moines, Oct. 28.—The Brandt and Burdett meeting of three weeks at Guthrie, Okla., with the First Christian Church, of which T. L. Noblett is the pastor, closed with 121 additions.

Illinois.

Harristown, Nov. 3.—C. L. Harbord, of Kansas City, Mo., and Elizabeth Baird, of Eureka, Ill., held us a very successful meeting, with 34 additions—23 by baptism and 11 by statement. We heartily recommend these evangelists to any church.—J. H. Bristor, minister.

Harvel, Oct. 31.—In our 14-days meeting there were four accessions—two by statement and two by confession and baptism—these were both 75 years old. Prospects are favorable for a great meeting.—A. O. Hargis, H. J. Hostetler, evangelists.

Fandon, Oct. 31.—The church here closed a meeting October 25 with 28 additions. The meeting was held by its pastor, C. H. Shiplett. Brother Shiplett is with us half time, and is open for revival work.—Frank Burgess, clerk.

Pontiac, Oct. 30.—Just closed a meeting at Armington with 13 additions—12 confessions. Over a hundred additions were gleaned eleven months before, and the field was very limited. John Lappin is doing a good work here and is loved by his people. We have a splendid building, worth about $15,000, and a good membership.—Allen T. Shaw.

DuQuoin, Nov. 4.—I am in a meeting with the Friendship Church. In ten days we have 10 added. I also preached at Tamaroa Sunday, November 1, at 3 p. m., and there were eight confessions and baptisms.—George W. Wise.

Kansas.

Cheney, Oct. 29.—Edward Clutter is in a meeting here with H. W. Myers, minister. The meeting is six days old with 31 added.

Wichita, Oct. 30.—On Wednesday night we closed a meeting of 24 days' duration, at Sharon, Kan., with 104 additions, many of them young men and heads of families, including prominent business men of the town. The Bible school was doubled, and the church membership more than doubled. The pastor, S. E. Hendrickson, was called for full time. He and his consecrated wife have the full confidence and love of the community. It was this and their personal work previous to and during the meeting that made such results possible in a town of less than 500. These people have always had a good Bible school and liberal missionary offerings.—E. A. Newby.

Ashland, Nov. 2.—Our meeting here closed with 17 added—seven baptisms, three from other religious organizations. Brother Haughey and wife are held in high esteem and are just beginning their second year. This is a very difficult field.—C. C. Atwood, general evangelist. Permanent address Holton, Kan.

Jewell, Nov. 2.—We began a meeting at Star Church November 1 with one confession the first night. Others will follow. F. E. Blanchard, the evangelist, is a strong man. The people hear him gladly. The house is crowded.—James Cornish, pastor.

Harper, Nov. 2.—I happened to be at home yesterday and preached last night. One confession—my only son.—M. B. Ingle.

Arkansas City, Nov. 2.—Fourteen additions yesterday—four by letter, nine by statement and one by confession.—Thomas H. Popplewell.

Goodland, Nov. 4.—Our meeting closed suddenly, Brother and Sister Kendall being called away by the death of Brother Kendall's brother. These good people are worthy of all praise. They won a large place in the hearts of the people. Forty-five responded to the invitation. Other churches received quite a number of accessions. During this year we have had 100 accessions.—J. M. Lowe.

Harper, Nov. 5.—I preached here last night with three confessions. Begin a meeting at Great Bend next Lord's day.—M. B. Ingle.

Kentucky.

Princeton, Oct. 29.—Just closed a short meeting at Cross Roads, this county, with 26 additions. The church hopes to have preaching twice a month next year instead of once, as at present. W. H. Moore, of Madisonville, is the very efficient pastor of this church.—Charles W. Barnes.

Michigan.

Vandalia, Oct. 30.—I closed a meeting here with J. P. Wright, the minister. I found him a tireless worker. The immediate results were 13 additions—10 by baptism, four being from other churches, and one by statement. One young man who responded to the invitation has not been baptized because of the strenuous objections on the part of his Quaker parents. Vandalia is a very conservative field, and we encountered opposition. On the last evening I gave a lecture on "The Life of Christ," illustrated by stereopticon views. We count the meeting profitable in every respect.—Frank O. Higgins.

Missouri.

St. Louis, Nov. 16.—Our revival meetings at First Church began yesterday, with 11 additions. At our Bible school rally yesterday morning we had 514 present, with about $35 collection. Our aim was, "Five hundred present and $30 collection." Earle Wilfley is getting a strong hold on the work here. He is preaching during our meetings.—T. C. C.

Foley, Oct. 26.—Our two-weeks' meeting at Corinth closed with 16 additions—11 by confession and baptism, four by letter and one restored. The meeting was a great help to the church in many ways. Elder M. D. Dudley, of Paynesville, Mo., conducted.—Cora Cox, clerk.

Warrensburg, Oct. 20.—There have been 22 additions to the Warrensburg church since May. The revised roll of the church shows 560 members in good standing.—George B. Stewart.

Weston, Oct. 30.—I assisted J. L. Wilkerson in two meetings, resulting in 68 additions—nearly all by confession. We began here last Sunday. I will begin with J. B. Weldon, of Booneville, Mo., November 21. My time is not taken for January, 1909.—V. E. Ridenour, singer.

Galt, Nov. 6.—One union revival meeting of four denominations, conducted by Rev. B. Marvin Harris, of Dearborn, Mo., is in full progress. Our meeting began two weeks ago, and is being held in a tent that will accommodate 700 people and is filled to the fullest capacity almost every evening. Brother Harris is a forcible speaker and is very much in earnest in the work of the Lord. His singer, Mr. Stover, and his large chorus of singers and orchestra, furnish excellent music. Already there have been 77 conversions and much interest is being manifested.—R. L. Barnhill.

Liberal, Oct. 24.—Recently I closed two revivals—one at Liberty (a country church) and the other at Bronaugh, Mo.—with 20 added in each meeting—27 baptisms, 13 by letter and statement, five from the brotherhoods. Mrs. Crank did the preaching at Bronaugh.—J. R. Crank, minister.

Minden Mines, Nov. 2.—Closed a good meeting at Minden Mines, Mo., to-night, with 29 added—a goodly number being men. We have a good church and Bible school and an auxiliary of the C. W. B. M. H. E. Carpenter was my splendid fellow worker.—Joseph Gaylor.

Springfield, Nov. 4.—The First Christian Church of Springfield began a revival last Sunday with N. M. Ragland, the minister, doing the preaching and Charles E. McVay, of Benkelman, Neb., as song leader. The meeting is already drawing large audiences. A large ingathering is not expected, as Scoville held a meeting here last year. Brother McVay has a large chorus.

Canton, Nov. 2.—Just closed a three-weeks' meeting with N. Rollo Davis at Mayetta, Kan. Mayetta is a small town and the congregation is composed mostly of farmers. We generously divided our crowd with a circus three nights the first week, and were almost stormed out the second. There were 13 additions, including two Sunday-school teachers from another brotherhood. Brother Davis is doing a great work for the people of this Western town.—O J Marks, singer.

Kirksville, Nov. 4.—One confession and baptism at our regular meeting at Mount Pleasant, Knox county, Missouri, the first Sunday in November. Also five confessions and baptisms in September.—J. W. Davis.

Nebraska.

Fremont, Nov. 2.—We have had 15 new names added to our membership since October 1; five were baptized, the others had been members elsewhere. We are making a heroic effort to clear ourselves of debt. It is hoped by the help of the trustees of the Maple Creek Church, which has ceased to meet, that we will be able to clear all and then stay out of debt. The debt now requires about $1,000. It is all in sight, and we shall soon report the result.—I. H. Fuller.

New York.

Rochester, Oct. 28.—We had a great victory at the First Church last Sunday—267 in the Bible school, offering $51.76. Miss Lemert is leading us into larger things. It means a new era in our work here.—Robert Stewart.

Oklahoma.

Oklahoma City, Nov. 2.—Five added by letter to-day.—H. S. Gilliam.

Guthrie, Oct. 30.—Three added October 25, making 169 in 1908, about 55 of whom are full grown men.—T. L. Noblitt.

Okmulgee, Oct. 28.—B. F. Hill and son, Harry E., are to begin a meeting at Mounds, Okla., November 1. This is a new field. A house has been dedicated, but there is no Sunday-school and only a few members—truly pioneer work.—B. F. H.

Oklahoma City, Oct. 26.—We had 31 added at Marshall, Okla., up to Friday night, and the pastor was to continue over yesterday. The pastor there is William L. E. Shane, a senior student in Oklahoma Christian University, and he has had a unanimous call to remain another year with the church at an increase in salary of $5 per visit. He is doing excellent work. I preached at the First Christian Church in this city yesterday in the absence of J. H. O. Smith, who was attending the Kansas state convention. I will begin a tabernacle meeting in this city November 5.—Oscar Ingold.

Shawnee, Oct. 27.—The protracted effort at Edmond was, so far as my reception and treatment in all respects were concerned, highly satisfactory. I never worked with a truer, more godly man than is Brother Rosenstein. We have a most noble church at Edmond, and I bespeak a great future for our work there. The brethren seemed unanimous in their approval of what was said and done during the meeting. How inspiring it is to notice the evidences of growth and prosperity from all directions.—Frank L. Van Voorhis.

Oregon.

Portland, Nov. 2.—Seven added by letter to the Woodlawn Church of Christ.—C. W. Comstock.

Texas.

Abilene, Nov. 2.—Two additions to the South Side Christian Church by statement yesterday.—J. H. Shepard.

San Marcos, Nov. 2.—Six additions during October. Our work was never in better condition. The church sent the pastor and his wife to the national convention and the centennial year begins with enlarged offering for state missions and larger aims in general.—A. M. Harral.

Utah.

Salt Lake City, Nov. 3.—One by statement

Sunday, November 1, at regular services, the pastor, Dr. Albert Buxton, preaching.

Washington.

Seattle, Oct. 26.—The activities of the Seattle churches for the last two weeks, as reported to the Ministerial Association, are as follows: First (J. L. Garvin), five by letter; University Place (T. J. Shuey), four by letter, and the church at Montesano, Chehalis county, dedicated October 11, free of debt; Queen Anne (J. L. Greenwell); four by letter.—Freeman Walden, president; J. L. Greenwell, secretary.

Colfax, Nov. 3.—On October 25 the Colfax church rejoiced in 111 at Bible school (the highest yet) and in good audiences both morning and evening, while the day was crowned with two accessions by enrollment and one man from the pastor's Bible class confessing Christ.

Midweek Prayer-Meeting

By Charles Blanchard.

REVELATION OF THE FATHERHOOD OF GOD IN THE SERMON ON THE MOUNT. (Study of the Favorite Idea of Jesus.)

Topic for November 18.—Matt. 5:16, 45, 48; 6:1, 4, 6, 8, 9, 15, 26, 32; 7:11, 21.

Take your Testament and note how many times the word Father is found in this sermon on the mount. I have just counted fifteen times. Go through the fifth, sixth and seventh chapters of Matthew and underline all the places where God is spoken of as Father, and note the teaching of the verses and you will be surprised, as I have been. It is, indeed, a new revelation. The idea of God as our Father is only dimly hinted in the Old Testament. "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him," is the nearest a suggestion of the revelation of the fatherhood of God to be found in the Old Testament. Jesus Christ, as the Son of God, has shown us the Father. For this purpose he was manifest in the flesh. If you seek a reason for his coming into our world and for the incarnation, find it in this purpose to reveal unto us the Father. And in this fact my heart rejoices with a great gladness. And I find myself marveling that all men everywhere do not accept the blessed fact and rejoice in the assurance and rest in the certainty. "I came forth from the Father and the Father sent me," is the declaration of Jesus. And there is no other way of accounting for the marvelous manifestation of the divine life that was in him and which he revealed to the world than to believe that he thus came forth from the Father, and that he is indeed the Son of God, declared to be such by the life that he lived, the death that he died for the sins of the world, and by his resurrection from the dead, as the apostle affirms. Not only is this a new revelation, but it is accompanied by a new and strange teaching of our relations to our fellow men, growing out of the fact of the Fatherhood of God. That we have not begun to recognize the far-reaching meaning of this message is evident when we look at conditions today and contrast them with the ideals that Jesus set forth: "Love your enemies and pray for them that despitefully use you, that ye may be the sons of your Father who is in heaven; for he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and the good, and sendeth rain on the just and the unjust. . . . . Ye shall therefore be perfect as your Father in heaven is perfect." The same lofty ideal is also held before us in his teachings relating to almsgiving, to praying in public and private, to fasting, to the forgiveness of those that trespass against us. "For if ye forgive men their trespasses your heavenly Father will also forgive you. But if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses."

His revelation of the Father's care for his children is one of the tenderest of all the intimacies of the Master's mind. He wanted us to believe that

> "God's in his heaven—> All's well with the world," as Browning sings. But more. He wanted us to understand that our Father is in the world; that he knows us and all about our needs; that even the very hairs of our heads are numbered. Not even a sparrow falleth to the ground without our Father, and the grass and the flowers of the field are a part of his care. That he careth for us is among the very sweetest of all the great Christ's revelations to wayworn and weary men. And being the sons of our heavenly Father we are the brothers of men everywhere, because he hath made of one blood all the nations of the earth that we should seek after him. And Christ is the way and the truth and the life to such as seek the Father. And they that seek him early shall find him. O that men everywhere might find God as their Father!

ADULT BIBLE CLASS MOVEMENT

MARION STEVENSON

Stopping the Leak.

The evangelistic season is upon us. What permanent value is it to bring to our churches? We shall have multitudes of converts, for we have a host of skilled evangelists. How many of them shall we be able to save to the cause of Christ? How many of them will grow to be strong men and women in Christ? How large a per cent of them will be soon lost to the church? These are the questions which give the heart of the church deep concern, for it is everywhere admitted that there is too large a loss, too great a leak. Can we save a larger percentage of our new converts this coming season?

That depends. If we are content to do as we have done in the past, we shall have the same heartache over those we have failed to save to Christian growth and service. But if we will follow the divine plan in caring for converts, we shall have great joy in saving multitudes who otherwise are sure to be lost.

Jesus knew how to care for converts, and instructed the apostles to teach the disciples they made. He knew how to establish the church, and guided the apostles in the care of their converts. The first thing the apostles did for the three thousand converts in Jerusalem was to organize them into a great Bible school. It is written, "they continued steadfastly in the apostles' teaching." (Acts 2:42). Here was a great school indeed, with divinely trained teachers. The church stood and increased in strength and power, as a matter of course. In the apostolic program teaching immediately followed evangelizing. The education of the church in the knowledge of God's will was a primary obligation upon evangelists and elders.

The remedy for the usual weakness of revivalism is evident, and sensible. The close of every revival meeting should find every convert in the Bible school, either in the main school or in the home department. The church should say to every convert, through its minister and elders and evangelist: "You are a new born babe in Christ. The church assumes the obligation of your spiritual nurture and training, and expects you to submit to its provisions for your spiritual welfare. We have assigned you to a certain class in our Bible school, under the care of a qualified teacher. We require of you regular attendance, and careful study of the lesson. If your circumstances forbid your attendance upon the sessions of the main school, we assign you to the home department. In this way we shall be able to save you and develop you to the profit of the church and to your own satisfaction. If you do not care to accept this arrangement we have made for you, we decline to assume the responsibility of your spiritual growth, and refuse to burden our church roll with your name. Under no other arrangements can we feel certain that you will grow in grace and in the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ."

Such a procedure would be in entire harmony with the fact that Jesus placed the teaching of the word to new converts as the first duty of the church. Until we follow this divine plan we shall continue to bewail the great annual loss which follows evangelism.

Bible School Work in District of Columbia, Maryland and Delaware.

It is with gratitude to God and thankfulness to my brethren that I make this, my third annual report as Bible school secretary for this missionary district, and I pray that I may in some measure be worthy of the Father's benediction and the confidence of the brethren, and that I may never betray the trust committed to me.

When I was selected for the place in October, 1905, there were a few schools in the district that were up to the times in organization and equipment, notably the Harlem avenue school at Baltimore. During the period of my services I have tried to get every school in the district to grade and organize home departments and cradle rolls with some measure of success, for of the 29 schools reporting to this convention 15 of them are graded, 13 have home departments and 12 have cradle rolls. All of them have primary departments and the other members of the school are grouped in classes very nearly according to ages and could readily group these classes into junior, intermediate and adult departments, and then select the officers required in each department and thus have partially graded schools, and the further steps toward fully grading could be easily taken. If this were done definite duties would be given to members of the school, many of whom, for lack of them, will drop out, or have already done so, and another point would be gained, and that is the responsibility for the successful carrying on of the work of the school would be put upon the minds and hearts of others than just the superintendent and pastor.

When we know that the people whom we desire to have in the Bible school and who need the school as much or more than the school needs them, are coming in contact every day in the business and educational world with the best of organization and system, and then conduct our schools in a slipshod and unorganized way that might have answered for a school of 50 or 100 years ago, we can not hope to get them into our schools, or if we do, to keep them there. Hence I urge the schools to organize.

Last year we urged the schools to organize the adult and teacher training classes in addition to grading and establishing cradle rolls and home departments. This year we say the same and with added emphasis.

Some of our schools are acting on suggestions or are doing these things in spite of them; any way, we are much gratified that several of our schools report this year that they have organized some of their adult classes and have teacher training classes.

We have some of the very best missionary schools in the brotherhood, we think, and as an evidence of it we call attention to the fact that the 23 schools that gave to foreign missions the past year, gave an average of $53.84 per school to that cause.

According to the standard adopted at the Bethany Park Assembly this summer for honor roll schools we have five (5) out of twenty-nine reporting.

Our future work is to enter such cities as Cumberland, Frederick or Wilmington, where we have no churches and but few Disciples, and, as we have no funds for that purpose, we suggest that the way to do is to get those of the Disciples of Christ that are located at these points to meet for Bible study at first, then advance to the next logical step of having the communion and from that on to the securing of a place in which to hold a meeting. In other words, organize the forces on the field and God will use us if we submit to his will. J. A. Scott, Bible School Field Secretary for the Maryland, Delaware and District of Columbia Missionary Society.

Kansas Teacher Training Graduates.

A fine feature of the Kansas jubilee state convention was the recognition of graduates of the first year's course of study in teacher training. J. H. Engle, state superintendent of the International Sunday-school Association, presided in the absence of Myron C. Settle. The address was delivered by Herbert H. Moninger, whos subject was, "What of the Future?"

A teacher training alumni association was formed with the following officers: President, J. M. Kersey, Parsons; vice-president, C. A. Cole, Abilene; secretary, John L. Rose, Atchison; treasurer, D. H. Shields, Salina.

The following schools reported fine lists of graduates. This is just the beginning of the record of graduates for Kansas. Myron C. Settle has set his heart on having every class graduate which has undertaken the work. The appended list emphasizes the fact that the work is being done principally in small classes. Large classes like Parsons are impossible in many instances. But every school can graduate a small class, and the small class may mean as much to its community as does the great class in Parsons.

The time is come when we may expect to hear every week of classes graduating in the first year's work in teacher training. The graduation of a class is the real test. No one can begin or go through only a part of the course without being helped, but we want trained teachers in every school, and this can only come by having graduates in every school. Let us put the emphasis upon the number who persevere unto the end.

Kansas seems to be in the lead, notwithstanding the fact that Brother Settle is carrying on his work by correspondence at present. Brother DePew is pushing for graduates; so are L. L. Faris, of Ohio; J. H. Hardin, of Missouri; C. L. Organ, of Iowa; H. S. Gilliam, of Oklahoma; Robert M. Hopkins, of Kentucky, and all the band of state Bible school men are alive to the necessity of pushing their classes forward to graduation day.

A One Hundred Per Cent Class.

At the Jacksonville convention in 1908 Mrs. Zeller promised 15 graduates for 1909. I must confess I felt that she had promised too much, but experience has proved that her vision at that time was larger and better than mine, for when we began to agitate the matter 28 enrolled in the class. And best of all I have 28 diplomas from the state lying on my desk ready to deliver next Sunday.

How did we do it? First, by perfecting a good organization of the class; this made the officers responsible with me in getting the members out to the meetings. Second, we found that all could not come one night in the week, so we divided the class and met two nights in the week; this has meant much extra work for me but it has paid a thousandfold, and I think it would be a fine idea to have a training class meet every night in the week. Third, the meetings were made interesting. We did not do as one pastor whom I visited, ask the questions in the book and let the class answer them, parrot fashion. I gave a lecture every meeting on the subject matter and got all the information I could outside of the book. Thus the members had an object to get out for they missed something when they failed to come. It's a great mistake to turn the class over to some person who has had little if any Bible training and expect the class to get real interested. Fourth, when it came to a matter of examination some failed to be present, but I did not let it rest there. I went to their homes and had them take the work. Some were sick and we waited till they got well, and thus by everlastingly keeping at it we graduated all that we enrolled with Mrs. Northrop.

In conclusion, the effect has been splendid; our Bible school has grown. We have four organized adult classes; we are organizing another first-year class in the training course with about 50 members and about 20 of the graduates are going to take up the advanced work.

Mrs. Zeller and I are now making an alphabetical canvass of our membership and we are going to have the whole church in the Bible school, for if they can't or won't come to the Sunday-school we get them on the home department or cradle roll. Yours for a greater Bible school. A. Immanuel Zeller.

Training Class at Moweaqua, Ill.

Moweaqua, Ill., graduated a class of 14 in July, and there was enthusiasm from the start. We organized and were ready for work November 1, 1907, and had our commencement exercises July 24, 1908. In the first place we had fixed our minds upon the goal, viz.: graduation, commencement and the diploma. These things were always mentioned when "the interest would seem to lag, and we would get at it with renewed energy." One thing that helped us along was the fact that the teacher was seeking the same honor as the class. If the teachers of these classes who have not already received a diploma would make the effort, that very fact would inspire any class to do better work. We wrote very little. Mostly all oral work and questions. The teacher seldom referred to his book. He had it at his tongue's end and the pupils knew that he had. Some evenings we would spell, not down, because there were not enough of us, but we meant to learn it. Three of our number lived six miles in the country and were unable to attend class during the winter and spring months, but by means of the telephone they kept in touch with the work of the class and passed the examinations with a high grade. We took three examinations. I believe this is better than to take one at the close of the book. Most all can pass a good examination on parts I, II and III, and that inspires them to do as well on the other parts. The parts on Bible school, teaching and pupils seemed hard at first but the more we studied the more interesting those parts became. I know I could take any class from the start and take it through to graduation. The teacher must be enthusiastic and enjoy the work, and he will succeed. All of our class join in saying they would rather miss any other service hour than the teacher training hour. F. D. Pratz.

The Colorado Convention.

A recent visit to the Colorado state convention was the occasion of renewing acquaintance with the consecrated man, E. M. Cosner. While engaged in secular business to pay expenses, he is really giving his life to promoting the Bible school work of the growing empire of Colorado.

The State Missionary Society paid him the fine compliment of giving him a whole half day of their convention and half the evening session, for the Bible school work. Thus it was possible to give attention to all the interests of the Bible school. No wonder it prospers. A full report of Brother Cosner's work will be given next week.

Filling the Church.

The Bible school at Mexico, Mo., is growing so rapidly that they are compelled to use not only the Bible school room, but also the auditorium of the church. The school aim is for 1,000 pupils by the first of the new year.

The present enrollment is 522, and of this number 205 are enrolled in five adult classes. It happened in Mexico, as it happens everywhere, that the increase of the school begins with the increase of the adult department. It never fails. Forty-two new pupils were added on a single Lord's day. A new piano is the latest addition to the equipment of this growing school. J. W. Dry is the superintendent. He may be Dry, but is a live one.

Graduating Services—Their Value; How to Conduct Them.

REV. W. B. SPILMAN, D. D.

I want to give you a little experience. I received a letter a week or two ago from a man who lived away out in the woods in South Carolina. Five years ago that man attended a graduating exercise, and was so fired that he went back to his church and organized a class, and every year for five years, this year making the sixth, there have been in his church graduating exercises with graduating addresses. The result of that has been that that particular spot in South Carolina now has more students taking our course than any other spot of the same area in the United States.

One of the reasons for this has been that every year special prominence has been given to the graduating exercises, and people generally take to what they see. The nerve which goes from our eyes to our brains is something like twenty times the size of the one which goes from the ear to the brain; and when the scholar receives a diploma, it makes an impression that can not be made by mere telling about the particular course.

I might mention something about the work in the city of Nashville, Tenn. We have had there for a long time graduating exercises in connection with our training school every fall. I want to emphasize the fact that if you want to make an impression for teacher training, you want to make much of this occasion. It is also a good thing to let people know you are in the business. One of the best ways of advertising teacher training work is by the public presentation of diplomas. We always try to make much of that, and more of the success of the teacher training work has come from the public exercises than from any other one thing. If you graduate a class, you will enroll more students than if you scattered a thousand circulars.

Mrs. A. E. Northrop—The graduating exercises in Illinois form one of the principal characteristics of our work, and they add very largely to the interest in our work. We encourage them, and try to publish accounts of them, so far as we can, in our state papers.

Mr. W. C. Pearce—May I suggest that there ought to be a discrimination made between graduating services and recognition services. To me it is very clear that it is far better to have the diplomas given at the graduating exercises held in the local church, wherever it can be done. Then when you come to your county or state conventions you could have a recognition service. If you send your folks off to graduate elsewhere than in the local church, nobody knows they are graduating, and it has no local stimulating effect.

Dr. H. M. Hamill—I think it is a mistake to stop with the graduating exercises in the local Sunday-school. That does not touch the pastor, or the big congregation, and it is the church that is to conserve and care for teacher training. Have an echo service; let it get into the big congregation; let the state secretary request the pastor of the graduating class to recognize these people before the great congregation of worshipers and not in the Sunday-school alone.

Dr. J. M. Frost—I am glad that Brother Pearce made that definition of graduating and recognition services, and I also like Dr. Hamill's suggestion of carrying the graduating exercises into the church. Here is the fundamental principle you are working on—it is the spectacular effect; you want it at the point where it will strike the greatest nerve center. In the local church conventions you get them both. I think there is such a thing as being spectacular for the Lord, and I am for the spectacular when it is for the Lord.

DODSON.

George R. Dodson was born in Wayne county, Kentucky, June 1, 1827. With his parents he removed in 1832 to Randolph county, Missouri, where he lived till 1865, when he removed to Macon county, residing on a farm south of La Plata. Ten years ago he came to La Plata, where he resided until his death, which occurred October 23, 1908, aged 81 years, 4 months and 23 days. In early manhood he confessed faith in Christ and became a member of the Christian Church. He was married to Miss Sarah L. Dameron August 24, 1848, who departed this life September 19, 1877. To this union were born ten children, eight of whom, five sons and three daughters, survive. In 1879, August 22, he was married to Miss A. A. Corlett, who also survives and mourns his loss. The funeral was held from the family residence October 25, 1908, under the charge of N. Jett, of the Christian Church, and Mr. Blackburn, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Interment in Shiloh Cemetery. Brother Dodson was loved by all who knew him for his unswerving fidelity to every good and righteous cause, and sterling Christian character. I. N. J.

FISHER.

Sarah Palmer was born near Carlisle, Ind., January 6, 1827. Her father, "Uncle Henry" Palmer, was a pioneer preacher among the Disciples, and widely known in our churches of a half century ago. The family moved to Illinois when the daughter was about nine years old. She was educated at Mt. Morris, Ill., and on July 25, 1848, was married to Prof. Asa S. Fisher, with whom she lived happily until his death, in February, 1903. Most of these years were spent at Eureka, Ill., where her husband founded Walnut Grove Academy, afterwards becoming Eureka College; of which institution Professor Fisher was a prominent factor for nearly forty years, as instructor, secretary and president. They came to Kansas City in 1887, and became members of the First Christian Church. The latter years of Sister Fisher were years of trial and suffering. The failing health of her honored husband, with her own infirmities, constituted a burden that she could not have borne with resignation but for her faith in God and her spirit of cheerfulness and hope. Her interest in the kingdom of God did not suffer eclipse by reason of her enforced absence from the worship of her church. Especially did she love to recall her early efforts to assist in the establishment of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, she being very closely related to Sisters Pearre and Dickinson in the launching of this. Her death, which occurred on Thursday, October 15, 1908, was peaceful, though preceded by great suffering for a time. She leaves only one daughter, Mrs. Laura Gibson, and grandson, Hallet Gibson, in her immediate family. The devotion of the daughter to her mother was beautiful through all the years of her failing health. The funeral service was conducted by the writer, assisted by her former pastor, T. P. Haley, and an old Eureka student and friend, I. W. Monser. She rests from her labors and her works do follow her. W. F. Richardson.

Kansas City, Mo.

GEPFORD.

Sister Katie Gepford was born in Andrew county, Missouri, October 19, 1873, and died of tuberculosis at the family home in Colorado Springs, October 17, 1908. In 1894 the family removed to Stanberry, Mo., for school privileges, where they remained until 1904, when, on account of Katie's failing health, they removed to Colorado Springs. At 14 years of age Katie gave her life to Christ and followed this consecration with 21 years of beautiful life in his service. She leaves her parents, Mr. and Mrs. D. J. Gepford, and two younger sisters to comfort each other in her loss. Clark Bower, minister.

SAVAGE.

Sarah Frances Ward was born in Scott county, Kentucky, August 8, 1828, and died at her home in Virginia, Ill., October 27, 1908. The deceased accompanied her parents, the late Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Ward, to Illinois when she was one year old, the family settling near Arcadia, into which village they afterwards moved, the father conducting a store and hotel. A few years later, Mr. Ward moved to a farm three miles south of Virginia where the deceased grew to womanhood. On January 10, 1844, she was married to Henry S. Savage, and to them thirteen children were born, eight dying in early childhood, and one, Mrs. Nellie Collins, died in 1897. The husband and father was killed by a fall from a horse on March 29, 1865. Shortly after this sad accident Mrs. Savage moved with her children to Jacksonville, Ill., where she remained until 1882, when she returned to Virginia, Ill., and to the house she has since shared with her youngest son, Henry S., and in which she died. She is survived by four sons, Charles W., Edward E., Louis L., and Henry S., all residents of Cass county, Illinois; seventeen grandchildren, six great-grandchildren and one brother, J. D. Ward, of Virginia, Ill. Sister Savage united with the Church of Christ in Virginia in 1843, and for 65 years was a most faithful, earnest and consistent member. It is but simple justice to say that it is largely through her fidelity, loyal and liberal support that there is a congregation of the Church of Christ in Virginia. Funeral services were conducted in the church on October 29 by Ben N. Mitchell, in the presence of a great congregation of sorrowing relatives and friends, after which the remains were laid to rest in Walnut Ridge Cemetery.

[The Editor of this paper knew Sister Savage for many years and greatly admired her high Christian character and womanly dignity. Her son and her grandchildren have a noble legacy in her life and character. Our Christian sympathy is extended to the bereaved family. She has entered into rest and into fellowship with the redeemed spirits in the life beyond.—Editor.]

SNODDY.

Prof. James Henry Snoddy died suddenly of heart failure at his home in Miller, S. D., October 6, 1908. He was born at Stilesville, Ind., June 8, 1839. He attended the Northwestern Christian University, and afterwards served through the uncivil war. For six years he was superintendent of schools in Jasper county. In 1882 he moved to Hard county, S. D., where he formerly taught school and was county superintendent of schools. In 1891 he was married to Charlotte Drake and to them were born twelve children. Professor Snoddy was well and favorably known throughout the state. While in Indiana he joined the Christian church and was a pillar in the church at Miller.

STEVENS.

Mrs. E. B. Stevens, of Southport, S. C., one of the oldest Disciples of this section, who for fifty years has been a most devoted Christian, has gone to her reward. Sister Stevens was Miss Elizabeth Larmony and was born in Westport, Ireland, coming to this country with her father's family when she was 15 years old. She married E. B. Stevens, one of the leading business men and principal supporters of the Christian Church of Chicago, in the early days of the restoration movement there; and she became a member of the First Christian Church in 1858, since which, with her husband, she has been a steadfast defender of the faith. Brother Stevens furnished the money to build the church of which D. P. Henderson was pastor in Chicago, and was a generous giver to all the work of the church until his fortune was lost. They moved to Southport, N. C., in 1888 and have resided there since; soon after her arrival, there being no Christian church, she organized a ladies' Bible class, which she has held together and taught ever since. Sister Stevens' life was a benediction, and no one came in contact with her gentle, gracious personality without being the better for it. The pure gold of her character shone out brightly amidst the trials of life and loss of fortune; disappointed hopes and all the inevitable sorrows of life she bore with a smiling fortitude and unfailing cheerfulness and a serene trust in God which left its mark on every life that touched hers. One of the last acts of her life was to write a loving letter and enclose a contribution to the Ladies' Aid Society of the Wilmington Church, of which she was a member. Her loyalty to the Church of Christ was one of the evidences of her strong and noble character. The end of her life was in keeping with her sweet serenity, and she gently fell asleep without a struggle on the evening of October 15, leaving her aged companion of fifty years and five sons and two daughters to mourn her loss; she is also survived by a sister, Mrs. L. S. Major, of Chicago. J. A. Erwin.

Wilmington, N. C.

WOODS.

Mrs. Mary Louisa Dale Woods was born in Platt county, Mo., Aug. 10, 1834, and died at Versailes, Mo., Sept. 28, 1908. Her remains arrived at Bowling Green, Fla., October 2, 1908. Inasmuch as it has pleased the Heavenly Father to call from the flesh our beloved sister Woods, whose membership in the Church of Christ remained with us until her death, and inasmuch as it also fell to our lot to receive her remains for interment in the cemetery at Bowling Green, Fla., by the side of her beloved husband, Dr. S. R. Woods, according to her request, it seemed fitting that we should at least attempt to express our feelings towards her and her loved ones. With deep sorrow, commingled with gladness, we laid her body down with tender hands to rest in the sands of Florida until that time when the mists shall have cleared away," sorrowing most of all because we could see her face no more. It was as truly a commingling of sorrow and gladness as we can command words to express. Glad to know that one more loved one had put off the mortal to put on the immortal, had gone out of this life into life eternal, gone to reap the eternal harvest of a faithful life of service here in the Master's name, gone leaving many friends and loved ones to mourn their loss, but to meet many more "over there." Then the sad thought that all but two of the older ones of the once flourishing band of Disciples have gone. How sad and lonely we feel when we think of those glad days and times as all gone into eternity and the past; but the most of us are learning to live more in the future than the past. D. D. McLean.

WRIGHT.

Lucy Ann Eckley, born March 1, 1831, at Mansfield, O., died September 5, 1908, at Hamburg, Ia. The funeral was at the Church of Christ in that city. Miss Eckley was married to Marcus H. Wright in 1852, and first converted in the Congregational Church in girlhood. About forty years ago she united with the Church of Christ at Marshalltown, Ia., and has lived lovingly, loyal and graciously devoted to her Master and his cause ever since. A host of friends feel her loss but he whom she served has called her to reward. Services were conducted by myself. E. V. McCormick, minister.

The Knowledge of Motherhood.

There is nothing so important in the life of a woman as motherhood. Prudery has shrouded this subject in what might be termed "vulgar mystery." Lifelong suffering has been endured, and frail, weakly children have been brought into the world by ten thousands, and perhaps by the millions, simply because of lack of knowledge on the subject of motherhood. The combined details of every subject now on the curriculum of the great woman's colleges, are not one-tenth as important as knowledge of motherhood. In other words, a woman is far better fitted for life if entirely ignorant of all these so-called educational essentials and possessed of full information of her own nature, than if versed in the most minute details in all the studies so emphatically insisted upon in woman's colleges, and yet in the end is afflicted with the ignorance of innocence. The principals of the various woman's colleges who have become so broad-minded as to realize the importance of this subject will turn out graduates who will be prepared to solve successfully the most vital problems presented to them during life. The young women thus instructed will be home-builders. They will make good wives and mothers.—Religious Telescope.

Studying Boys and Girls.

Prof. Wm. A. McKeever, of the Kansas State Agricultural College at Manhattan, has worked out a plan for the assistance of parents in the home training of the young. To all who are interested and will write and have their names placed on the mailing list there will be sent free a series of bulletins or pamphlets, each treating a particular subject. Professor McKeever has a number of able assistants who are aiding him in gathering the materials for these pamphlets. Among other things they will interview many parents who are already succeeding in doing one or more of these particular things with children and get the benefits of their knowledge. Finally all the materials will be summarized and printed as above stated. If a farmer has a horse that balks in the harness or a cow that acts queerly and runs off the reservation, he can write to the nearest government experiment station and secure a printed bulletin or a letter on the subject from a high-salaried expert, but if the refractory creature chances to be his 16-year-old son or his fledgeling daughter he has no recourse other than to fight the case out alone, assisted perhaps only by a despairing wife. This is not a square deal to the parents, nor is it at all fair to the boy and girl. The first bulletin on home training will be issued soon. Some of those now being prepared are entitled:

1. Teaching the Boy to Save—How to Start a Bank Account.
2. Training Boys and Girls to Work in the Home. (One on each.)
3. Cigarette Smoking Among Boys—Cause, Prevention and Cure.
4. The Home Training Best Suited for Developing Moral Reliance.
5. The Problem of the City or Village Boy's Vacation Period.
6. Finding and Preparing for a Vocation. (One on each sex.)
7. Earning One's Way Through College. (One for each sex.)
8. How to Make Rural Life More Attractive to the Young.
9. Training Children in Regard to Their Sex Natures.
10. Problem of the Growing Boy's or Girl's Society. One on each.

[Professor McKeever is working at a most important problem and deserves the co-operation of all who are interested in the training of the young.—Editor.]

Farmer: See here, boy, what yer doin' up that tree?

Boy. One of your pears fell off the tree an' I'm trying to put it back.—Brooklyn Eagle.

That "Bad" Boy.

Don't tell him he is bad. He may believe you. Then there is no hope for him, and but little for you. Dr. Marden tells this story:

"I have brought my boy to see if you can do anything with him," said a parent, when the teacher answered his rap at the schoolhouse door. "Of all stubborn boys I know he is the worst." The boy was seated and lessons were assigned him. Not long afterwards, as the teacher was going to his desk, he put out his hand to lay it kindly on the boy's shoulder, whereupon the little fellow shuddered and shrank away from the touch. "What is the matter?" asked the teacher. "I thought you were going to strike me," replied the pupil. "Why should I strike you?" "Because I am so bad," said the boy.

"Who says you are bad?" "Father, mother, and everybody else say so." "You can be just as good as any boy if you try," said the teacher, kindly. "Can I be a good boy?" asked the little fellow in surprise; "then I will be a good boy." From that time his life changed. He made rapid progress in his studies, was almost faultless in deportment, and was soon a favorite with all. He became governor of one of our largest states.

"The teacher," says Marden, "had simply given the boy a new life and higher ideal, and had inspired him with the confidence and aspiration necessary to attain it; but how it transformed a whole life!"

Obeyed Instructions.—A Southern woman, leaving her home in a hurry, spoke hurriedly to the maid about some apples baking in the oven.

"Watch when the apples burn, Chloe," she called as she was leaving the house.

THE MOTHER WHO SMILED

By Robert C. V. Meyers.

The Boy's Mother was always smiling. Said the mothers of other boys, "She has the same worries that we have, she is as poor as we, and yet she keeps on looking cheerful. Her mind must be weak."

The Boy's Mother heard this. "They may be right, my mind may not be as strong as theirs. All the same, the sky and the earth smile; even when clouds and darkness veil them the brightness is underneath," and she kept on smiling.

After awhile the Boy, who had all of the boy's perplexities in learning life, said to her, peevishly, "I have things that make me unhappy or angry, and you seem never to have them."

"When you weep in unhappiness or frown in anger," she replied, "does it better fit you for doing your best in the world?"

So the Boy became thoughtful, and in time his face was as hers, cheerful, and his school tasks seemed lighter to him in consequence. Friends were annoyed, and for her child's good came to the Mother and asked her if she was doing right in letting the Boy take nothing seriously.

"The most serious thing I know," she made answer, "is to keep up cheerfulness when discouragement clogs our endeavors."

"Suppose death of a dear one came to you," demanded they, "would you smile then?"

And death came. The Boy's father had long been an invalid, requiring much care, and the end came.

"Wife," he said, "you have helped me more than you know. Not only with your hands, but with your cheerful face, you have led me heavenward."

The woman smiled through her tears, in thankfulness for his words. Then came a great plague in the land, and people fled to the country where health was more assured.

The Boy's Mother stayed where she was. "I am needed here," she said.

"You are not strong enough to nurse," was the argument put to her, and care of your husband has weakened you, besides!"

"I can do something," she said. So she stayed and went among the suffering stricken ones, and while she could do only the lesser services the doctors and the nurses and the sick ones said that she encouraged them when they seemed at the end of their resources and gave them renewed hope.

The Boy became ailing. "Have no fear," smiled the mother. "Fear destroys many safeguards. God does not willingly afflict. Try to shake aside the mist that appears—beyond it the sun and stars are bright. Smile!"

So the Boy smiled, pondering over what he heard, and in time he was as he had been. He was now much older than a schoolboy, a youth, and was working at the world's work. It was, moreover, hard work, hard for hands and for brain, and often he thought he could make small headway in it.

At such times the mother said, "The battle is to the brave, and it is not cowardly to smile."

The youth became a man, and the world took note of the work he did. Said many, "He had no better advantages than we, and yet he outstrips us."

The Man's mother was not young now; her hair was whitening; her face had wrinkles in it; and her step was slower than it used to be. But the smile was still hers in spite of all the years.

There came a day when the Man was called to a high office among his fellows.

"Why not?" asked the Mother. "'Greater things than these shall ye do,' said the greatest man who ever trod the earth."

The Man, whom the mother saw was hesitating, accepted the office, and those around him said: "His constant cheerfulness gives us confidence in him."

When the Man was chosen for still higher offices and filled them, and people called him middle-aged, the mother found her bodily powers lessening. She had become a very old woman and had survived many of the mothers of those other boys, those women who had thought her mind must be weak because of her smiling face. Her hands bore the marks of toil and her body was bent with the work of other years. She said to the Man who had been the Boy:

"I tried to do what I could in the heat and labor of the day. I hoped to make those about me see the smiling face of God. If I have succeeded in any wise it is God, not I, who did it."

"You gave yourself to your belief," returned the Man, "and the Lord loves a cheerful giver. I find that I am cheerful all the time, as you ever were. You have done well, and now you enter into your rest, a good and faithful servant—for what is a mother to the world and her child but a servant? It has been your cheeriness that did it all."

"Nay," she said, fondling his hand as though he were still the littlest of children, "not my cheeriness, but the effort to give to all the Love so freely given to me. God sends us his sunshine and his starshine, his clouds and tempest—all of them his smiles, for his care abides in one of them as in another. For God is Love, and Love is ever smiling."

The cheerful look was in her face even as she passed aside from the earth and the Man who had been the Youth and the Boy smiled through his tears, and uttered the word that expresses the ineffable meaning of God and of Love:

"My mother!"—Universalist Leader.

Fred's Story.

Fred Wells smothered a sigh as he looked out of the window at the rain. He felt sure it would be a long day. Rainy days in the country were always long, but he didn't want his Aunt Edith to think he was unhappy, so he said nothing. He got a big picture book and huddled down in the Morris chair to make the best of it.

"Where are you, Fred?" cried his aunt Edith a little later.

"Here, auntie, I am coming," he answered.

"I want you to watch the squirrels. I am sure Mamma Squirrel is planning to move. It is raining hard, and the babies are getting wet in the tree. She was in the wash-house looking around, and I think she decided the wood-box would make a good home. It has a pile of excelsior in it, and will be good and warm," said Mrs. Lacey.

Fred was interested at once, and drew a chair up to the window. Mamma Squirrel spied him and stopped to take a look. She wanted to make sure he was not a bad boy who planned to hurt her children. Being reassured, she sped up the tree, picked up a squirrel in her teeth, and laboriously made her way down and across the yard to the wash-house.

"She is moving, auntie," called Fred. "I didn't know a squirrel ever had its nest in a house."

"They don't, but this squirrel is so tame that it makes a difference." Mrs. Lacey drew up another chair, and they both watched until the five baby squirrels were in the new home warm and dry.

"I never knew squirrels thought so much of their children," said Fred. "She loves her baby squirrels just as people love their children, doesn't she?"

"Hush!" and Mrs. Lacey held up a warning finger as Mamma Squirrel came up on the porch. "I expect she wants something for her babies to eat. You may give her some nuts.

Fred got a handful of nuts and opened the door cautiously. He held out his hand, and the squirrel came eagerly. She scampered away with the nut, and in a little while returned for another.

"What makes her wait so long between trips?" asked Fred.

"You might put on your rain coat and go and see," suggested his aunt.

In a few minutes Fred came running back. "She is cracking the nuts for the little squirrels!" he exclaimed excitedly. "She works for her children and takes care of them just as mamma does of me."

His aunt smiled at the eager face. "Dinner is ready just as soon as your hands are washed."

"Dinner! Already! This has been such a little morning! O auntie, I have my story for school! You know we have to tell a story every Friday after recess about something we have seen. Miss Brown says it is to make us see things around us. I am glad it rained, else I wouldn't have a squirrel story."—Sarah N. McCreery, in Southern Presbyterian.

GLEANINGS FROM MAGAZINES

The Household Fairy.

[The November "St. Nicholas" is full of good things and of promise for the new year, of which this is the first number. Two new serials start, there are several short stories and many articles of a general nature. We quote a poem, "The Household Fairy," by Alice B. Huling.]

Have you heard of the household fairy sweet,
Who keeps the home so bright and neat?
Who enters the rooms of boys and girls,
And finds lost marbles and smooths out curls?
Who mends the rent in a girlie's frock—
Or darns the hole in a Tomboy's sock?
If you don't believe it is true, I say
You may search and find her this very day,
In your home.

You must not look for a maiden fair,
With starry eyes and golden hair;
Her hair may be threaded with silver gray,
But one glance of her eyes drives care away,
And the touch of her hand is so soft and light
When it smooths out a place for your head at night.
If you know of some one just like this,
My household fairy you can not miss—
It's "Mother."

Thomas A. Edison, an Example of Clean Greatness.

[The November "American" is rich in its contents. The leading feature is a character sketch by the Sultan of Turkey, which makes him very black indeed. We make an extract from a remarkable character sketch of Mr. Edison, in which a mass of new and interesting material is introduced.]

"And it is clean greatness—Edison's. He wears by rights the look of a contented man. He has robbed no widows, crushed no competitions, stolen no franchises, taken no rebates. He is rich not because he gambled in the stock market; nor employed children and women at starvation wages, nor awaited, doing nothing himself, for the rise in the price of land or corn or cotton. He is famous not because he manipulated an election, or bribed a legislature. There is nowhere in his career any record of success which came of devious or deceitful ways. His is indeed a clean greatness. He has worked for what he won, and everything that he has done has been in the direction of making this a better world for mankind to dwell in.

"Men who toil all their lives for themselves alone grow tired; they want to stop and 'get something out of life.' Of course they do; but they are tired, not of work, but of their own inadequate and selfish lives. But a man like Edison does not get tired: you see that in the youthful look in his eyes. Money doesn't pay him. His enthusiasms are far otherwise, and external to himself. He has lived with the abstemiousness of a monk, having few personal wants, and the wants he had were gratified with the simplest things. He has never stopped to enjoy earthly honors, though honors have been showered upon him from every part of the world, because he has been so busy all the time with new concerns. There is nothing indeed in this world which keeps a man young, joyous, simple, like the unselfish pursuit of truth.

"Surely there is no better or more hopeful model for struggling, limited youth than this man Edison. Not that he has risen from a poor boyhood to be a rich and famous inventor, but because by steady work through many years he has become a fine, simple-hearted, generous, useful old man."

The Election of a President.

[The November "Forum" is not overburdened with political articles. One of these finds this lesson of the campaign, viz., that the enormous amounts hitherto considered imperative for financing the fight are not required. An election certainly ought to be decided upon its merits. Among the general articles of interest are: "A Plea for Poetic License," "Herculaneum Known and Unknown." We make an extract from J. Hampden Dougherty's "The Election of a President."]

"It is a common opinion that the plebiscite, which is quadrennially held in November on the same day throughout the Union, decides once and for all the succession to the presidency for the ensuing four years. But the most superficial knowledge shows this opinion to be erroneous. The voter who is to take part in the choice of president finds that there has been placed in his hands a ballot containing the names of a number of persons all or mostly unknown to him. Not one voter in a hundred, in this state, could name half of the presidential electors whose names will appear on the ballot under his party's emblem in November. Probably not one in a like number could explain the origin or purpose of the electoral college. The voter understands that by voting under his party emblem, he is casting a ballot for Taft, Bryan, or Debs, as the case may be. His vote will be quite as effective for practical purposes as it would be were he a profound student of constitutional law. The newspapers of the country, within a day or two after this plebiscite, announce the election of the successful candidate, the news is heralded by cable to rmote continents, the election figures are widely analyzed and discussed, and the probable cabinet and policy of the president-elect become the themes of reporters and editors; and yet, constitutionally, only the first act of the three-act drama of a presidential election has been concluded, and from a legal point of view no president has been elected at all."

How the Russian Throne Got Its Heir.

[The November Jubilee issue of the "Woman's Home Companion" has a special interest, because it is the Seven Hundredth Number of the oldest living Woman's Magazine. This issue of 88 pages, illustrated by famous artists, contrasted with the little flimsy 8-page issue of the same magazine which appeared in 1875, is a vivid reminder of the great strides made in periodical publishing. That old issue, popular in its day, is a modest ancestor to the big, influential magazine of to-day. The list of interesting contributions is too long to mention. A curious light on superstition in high places is related in this issue by Kellogg Durland, writing of the Tsarita of All the Russias, as follows:]

"When three children had been born and no heir, the Tsaritsa turned an open ear to various men who claimed supernatural power and control. Before the birth of Anastasie the aid of eminent medical and scientific men had been sought to influence the sex of the child, but all to no avail. And so, when science failed, religion was appealed to.

"The example of their trust in miracle working which history has been called upon to remember, is that of the dead and buried priest who was supposed to have finally brought them a son, and who was canonized by the emperor! The day of St. Seraphim is now one of the holiest days in Russia, and is celebrated throughout the empire.

"Seraphim was an old priest of Saroff, in the interior of Russia, who, according to local tradition, was a kind of soothsayer and local medicine man. His particular power is said to have been in endowing barren women with children.

"Seraphim had been dead seventy years, but the Tsar was now anxious to leave no stone unturned to procure a son, and encouraged by the Tsaritsa, Seraphim was canonized!

"When the remains of the old priest were unearthed, it was found that the body was badly decomposed, and to canonize a man whose body yields to the influence of decomposition is contrary to the traditions and customs of the church. The Orthodox Bishop Dmitry, of Tambof, ventured to call attention to this and protest the canonization to the Tsar, but for his temerity he was deprived of his see and exiled to Viatka. Nicholas held that the preservation of bones hair and teeth sufficient qualification for saintship.

"So Seraphim was canonized with great pomp and ritualistic solemnity, and the next child born to the Tsaritsa was a son! If anything were needed to fasten the belief of the Tsar and Tsaritsa in these extreme forms of religion, it was an answer to their prayers at this time. The boy was called Alexis, and he was born on July 30, 1904, according to the Russian calendar, and ever since the Tsar and Tsaritsa have been given more and more to the pursuit of spiritualistic religion."

Advance Society Letters.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

I am writing this at a time of great uncertainty. It is November 2, and to-morrow is election day. We do not know who will be elected, and yet when these words are printed everybody will know. It seems strange, when we know a thing for certain (for instance, that the world is round like an orange) that it could ever have been unknown; and I imagine that in the next world it will be a puzzle to us why so many were reluctant to go there. In the future state we will wonder that we should have distressed ourselves with unending worry over things that only lasted a few half-seconds, so to speak. Since we expect to last forever, why should we be wrapped up in anything except the lasting things? After all, won't the soul be pretty lonesome when it gets to heaven, to find that all the interests that absorbed its thoughts in the world, are not there? No stock, no farmlands, no mortgages, no gossips (dear me!), no money, no campaign funds, no excuses to stay home of a Sunday morning, not even a difference over the organ question.

Can you imagine a conversation between two spirits in heaven? And can you imagine a more interesting theme discussed than some soul which one of these spirits has aided to reached the country of great joy? Or some orphan reared to usefulness and purity; or some missionary supported in her work of spreading the Gospel? How do you think a person will learn to talk and behave in heaven, unless he begins to practice in the present life? I'll tell you what you and I had better do; we had better fall to work on these letters about Drusie's missionary shower; and we'll take up our second pile of Missouri letters.

Madison: "Find enclosed $1 for our missionary Drusie. God bless her and her work. I hope the dime shower will last."

Laddonia: Cullen Coil and Ben Bob Coil each send a "drop."

C. B. Kibber, Marshall: "We had a rain last week and our newspapers spoke of it as a 'William Dollar Shower.' You ought to get several dollars from Marshall. I enclose one to help swell the Drusie Malott shower."

Ellis Garnett, Clarence: "My name begins where yours ends. I have read the Av. S. letters for some time, and especially enjoyed 'Around the Gulf,' for have not I been through Yellowstone Park? Don't I know how I love to tell about it? If you ever take another trip go through the Park; you will never regret it. But what I came to say is that class No. 2, Christian Sunday-school, Clarence, Mo., attends Drusie's shower with $1.60, and Mrs. J. T. Garnett sends 10 cents. We are sending Drusie some pictures, direct."

A Friend, Boonville: "Dime for Drusie, with best wishes for a long continued 'shower.'"

Birdie Lee Cleeton, Keytesville: "Enclosed find my second quarterly Av. S. report; I am on the sixth week of my third. We have just organized a teachers' training class, of which I am a member. Ten cents for Drusie. Best wishes to the Av. S."

Agnes Duncan, New Hampton: "I am not a member of the Av. S., but enjoy reading the letters. I send a dime for Drusie's shower."

Mrs. S. and B. and M., Marshall: "We want to add 30 drops to the shower. May God bless the grand work of the Av. S."

Mrs. W. H. Ewin, Butler: "I want to add a few dimes to the shower for our missionary; trust it may be a real downpour."

Eskin: Ten cents from Harvey W. Lollar.

Mrs. May McFarland, Lathrop: "Twenty-five cents for the shower from my mother, Mrs. J. H. Chenoweth, and myself. I have seen you many times in Plattsburg, but never met you personally. We are interested in the Av. S. work. Trust a copious 'shower' may fall."

Plattsburg: Twenty-five cents from Mrs. Maude Riley Smith.

Wellsville: A few drops for the shower from the family of Mrs. W. B. Penn, who "hope the shower has not ceased falling." (Fifty cents.)

Francis Ritchey, Buckner: "Here is a dime for the shower. It will be a little late—just a tardy drop."

Minnie Gist, Eldorado Springs: "One dollar for Drusie in China. May much good be done in Jesus' name."

Stewartsville: Fifty cents from Mrs. Jaquith.

Madison: "Enclosed find a few drops for Drusie's shower from M. R. P. Better late than never, I trust. My prayer for God's blessing on Drusie goes with each drop. May he sustain and keep her from all evil, and give her a long life in which to serve him."

Mrs. Eliza Grimes, Lathrop: "I send 50 cents for our missionary. I have wanted to send something for a long time and will not put it off any longer. I wanted to send before August 12, but was going to the Plattsburg Chautauqua and was so busy. The Chautauqua was good, I know you would have enjoyed it—not only the good things from the platform, but seeing old friends. There were good crowds every day. I will try to send something again soon. I know orphan Charlie. We had him with us when he spent his vacation with Mrs. Besse Ryman. I hope he will make a success of life."

Liberty: Here is a colored postcard from that very same Mrs. Bessie Tracy Ryman, just referred to: "I've found this pretty yellow cat," she says. "So it certainly resembles Felix," she goes on, just as if a yellow cat was a yellow cat! "Wish I could have seen you when you made your Missouri trip. I am your friend," etc I had always thought Mrs. Ryman my friend. I have known her in adversity, when she couldn't answer the questions in astronomy and literature and general history. I have known her at rare moments of joy when she did know the answers to the teacher's questions. I have sung with her in quartettes and looked at stars with her in the old school days. I thought her my friend. I did not think she would ever send me the picture of a meaching, insipid, characterless, red-nosed yellow kitten, and write over its head, "Felix!" The picture represents a schoolroom, and a teacher stands at the blackboard showing the class a pink blur where the artist's imagination evidently gave out. It would have been a good idea if the teacher-cat had been represented as teaching a class in physiology; on the board should have been the diagram of a mouse, with arrows pointing to the choice places; but the artist did not have this idea, and I wasn't there to give it to him. The kitten who is put forth as "Felix" sits at one side, not looking at the board, not paying attention to the teacher, apparently thinking of nothing, or (which amounts to the same thing) thinking only of his own miserable namby-pamby self. Contrast with this picture the real Felix, the Felix down in Arkansas, formerly of Plattsburg, Mo.—the Felix who combs his whiskers on top of the refrigerator and rubs his hairs on any gentleman's leg that is not swiftly withdrawn from reach!

Fayette: A dime for Drusie's shower from Mrs. E. F. C., and a "hope that it will be a shower indeed."

Mrs. J. S. Harris, Fulton: "Fifty cents for which please send me five drops of water and use the money for Charlie or Drusie, or both. May the good Lord bless the Av. S. in its effort."

Mrs. J. G. Hull, Joplin: "Though a little tardy, three friends of Joplin wish to contribute to Drusie's shower."

Shelbyville: "Husband and I want to be included in Drusie's shower and send 25 cents in stamps, and the same for orphan Charlie, with best wishes for the Av. S."

Mrs. F. W. Gatewood, Mexico: "Ten drops for Drusie's shower. I do not belong to the Av. S., but often read of the good work. If I were younger, would take pleasure in being a member, but can't memorize as I once could. Hope this enterprise will prove a deluge."

Mrs. J. P. Callaway, Marshfield: "I send 10 cents for Drusie's shower and another 10 cents for being late. I do hope you will have a large sum for her."

Martha Nickerson, Ethel: "Please find

The Wonderful Blood of Man

Dies And is Born Again With Every Breath of the Lungs.

Human blood contains red and white corpuscles. The little red soldiers carry food, strength and vitality to all parts of the body and the little white warriors fight the battles of the body.

When through poor eating, wrong digestion, disease or whatever the cause may be, the blood becomes filled with poisons and impurities the little red and white soldiers cannot do their work properly and hence they become a menace rather than an aid to the rest of the body.

20 000,000 corpuscles die with every breath of the lungs. To rid their ranks of enemies they throw them into the cells of the skin or down deep in the tissues and man has to suffer pimples, boils, blackheads and eruptions.

Stuart's Calcium Wafers are scientifically prepared under the highest of expert supervision and give to the blood through its regular nourishing channels—the stomach and digestive canal—a purifying food and invigorator.

Calcium Sulphide is one ingredient—the greatest blood purifier known to chemistry: Quassia, Golden Seal and Eucalyptus are other component parts, each having a particular office for the elimination of impurity and the upbuilding of the blood.

The remarkable feature about Stuart's Calcium Wafers, is that they act so speedily and so efficiently that they tone up the whole system from the standpoint of perfect blood almost beyond conception.

Their peculiar charm lies in the method of manufacture which insures the fullest strength of the ingredients beyond all other manner of preparation. One does not purchase an untried blood cleanser in Stuart's Calcium Wafers but a blood builder and purifier backed by thousands of men and women whose use of it is its greatest testimonial tribute. Ask your druggist. He sells them for 50c, or send us your name and address and we will send you a trial package by mail free. Address F. A. Stuart Co., 175 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

enclosed $1 in currency, which I wish sent to Drusie in connection with my prayers and best wishes, that this little mite may be the means of at least helping to bring some poor soul to the knowledge of the Lord, our Savior, Jesus Christ. I am a widow of 78 and my income is small, yet I have a good home and I desire to help all I can."

If any one is still bothered about that 27 cents with which our sum total for Drusie ended, some weeks ago—you may remember, I urged you to make that 27 an even number—the following from Mrs. V. L. Galleher, of Danville, Ill., will set all minds at rest: "Here are three pennies. Get rid of that 27 quick, and make it 30. I do hate odd numbers." Our page this week is devoted to letters from Missouri, but we are obliged to admit the foregoing over that odd number.

Orphan Charlie writes from St. Louis: "The draft (from the Av. S.) of $25 has been received, of which I will keep account, and send report of same to you when exhausted. Mrs. Hansbrough has just returned from New Orleans with lots of news from the convention. She had a pleasant time there. I thank you very much for the $25, because I don't like for my debts to grow too big on me. I am glad Felix is all right, and wish he were up here to enjoy the nice, pleasant weather we are having." (The idea of leaving Arkansas for Missouri in order to enjoy any sort of weather is, of course, a touch of humor. I have just received a letter from Drusie saying she has notice from the dead letter office that a package is held there for her; I hope it is the dress, etc., that the Av. S. sent her so long ago.)

GOOD RULES.

We think every boy and girl will find helpful the following rules, which have been adopted by the Children's Guild of Courtesy in connection with the London County Council schools. Many of the other schools in London and vicinity have followed the example of this guild, with good results:

COURTESY TO YOURSELF.

Be honest, truthful, and pure.

Do not use bad language.

Keep your face and hands clean, and your clothes and boots brushed and neat.

Keep out of bad company.

COURTESY AT HOME.

Help your parents as much as you can.

Be kind to your brothers and sisters.

Do not be selfish, but share all your good things.

Do your best to please your parents.

COURTESY AT SCHOOL.

Be respectful to your teachers, and help them as much as you can.

Observe the school rules.

Do not copy.

Do not cut the desks or write in the reading books.

Never let another be punished in mistake for yourself; that is cowardly.

COURTESY AT PLAY.

Do not cheat at games.

Do not bully.

Be pleasant and not quarrelsome.

Do not jeer at or call your schoolmates by names which they do not like.

Salute your ministers, teachers, and acquaintances when you meet them, who will salute you in return.

COURTESY IN THE STREET.

Do not push or run against people.

Do not chalk on walls, doors or gates.

Do not annoy shopkeepers by loitering at their shop doors or gates.

Do not throw stones or destroy property.

Do not throw orange peels or make slides on the pavement; this often results in dangerous accidents.

Do not make fun of old or crippled people.

Be particularly courteous to strangers or foreigners.

COURTESY EVERYWHERE.

Remember to say "Please" and "Thank you."

Always mind your own business.

Before entering a room it is often courteous to knock at the door; do not forget to close it after you.

Always show care, pity and consideration for animals and birds.

Never be rude to anybody, whether older or younger, richer or poorer than yourself.

Always show attention to older people and strangers, by opening the door for them, bringing them what they require (hat, chair, etc.), giving up your seat for them if necessary.

Never interrupt when a person is speaking.

Be tidy.

Be punctual.—Selected.

The Dishwashing Game.

On Monday, before I go to school,
I wash the dishes—it's mother's rule—
So Bridget can sort the clo'es.
To help me get them quickly done,
I've made up a game that's lots of fun,
And here is the way it goes:

The forks are voyagers, and their wives
Are the tablespoons and the silver knives;
The teaspoons are babies wee;
Each platter, saucer and cup's a boat
In which from the dishpan port they float.—
They're shipwrecked when out at sea.

The soap-suds breakers dash fierce and high,
But all hands are saved and rubbed till dry;
The wrecks are towed in to shore.
In closest harbor they safely stay
Till sailing date on another day,
They bravely embark once more.

And washing dishes in this way
Is nothing but fun. And I always say—
And mother always agrees with me—
"If work's on hand it's a splendid plan
To do it the jolliest way you can."
Just try it yourself and see.

The Corn Song

John Greenleaf Whittier

Heap high the farmer's wintry board!
Heap high the golden corn!
No richer gift has autumn poured
From out her lavish horn!

Let other lands, exulting, glean
The apple from the pine,
The orange from its glossy green,
The cluster from the vine.

We better love the hardy gift
Our rugged vales bestow,
To cheer us when the storm shall drift
Our harvest fields with snow.

Through vales of grass and meads of flowers,
Our ploughs their furrows made,
While on the hills the sun and showers
Of changeful April played.

We dropped the seed o'er hill and plain
Beneath the sun of May,
And frightened from our sprouting grain
The robber crows away.

All through the long, bright days of June,
Its leaves grew green and fair,
And waved in hot mid-summer's noon
Its soft and yellow hair.

And now, with autumn's moonlit eves,
Its harvest time has come;
We pluck away the frosted leaves,
And bear the treasure home.

WHAT WE STAND FOR.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

To Our Subscribers,
Dear Friends:--

The season of the year has now arrived, when one begins to think about Christmas presents, and that reminds me that we carry in stock a number of articles suitable for this purpose; for instance, we have almost an unlimited assortment of Bibles, New Testaments, books of many titles, including some special holiday editions, to be sold at various prices, and wall mottoes, Christmas cards, Christian Endeavor and Sunday-school pins and many other novelties.

We are just preparing a post card, having on it splendid half-tone pictures of four of our great pioneers, Thomas Campbell, Alexander Campbell, Barton W. Stone, and Walter Scott. These would be very suitable for small gifts to children in the Sunday-school, and the price will be from 15c to 20c a dozen, according to quantity ordered. These will be especially appropriate, on account of this being our Centennial year.

Our friends and readers, who are desirous of purchasing Christmas presents from us, are respectfully requested to write to us, letting us know what they have in mind, and we will take great pleasure in attending to their wants.

Sincerely yours,
W. Daviess Pittman
Business Manager.

A Methodist Editor.

Not Methodists alone, but members of every denomination and people not at all interested in church work were surprised and pained by the death of Dr. David D. Thompson, who died in St. Louis last week a short time after having been struck by an automobile. He had been attending the meeting of the General Committee of the Foreign Missions of his church, of which he was a most distinguished member. Dr. Thompson had for many years been Editor of the Northwestern Christian Advocate, and was about fifty years of age. He rose from the ranks and had, we believe, never been engaged in the work of the ministry, but recognized himself as a layman. In early days in Cincinnati he read proofs of W. T. Moore's Christian Quarterly. He was a most affable gentleman, and an editor of conspicuous ability. He was a personal friend of many men prominent in politics, and it was this fact, perhaps, that led to the introduction of political questions into his newspaper more than almost any other religious publication in the country. He wielded a wide influence, and was an unfailing champion of the forces which make for better things.

The Situation in China.

It is difficult to forecast what is going to happen in the great empire of the Orient. Rapidly in succession have come messages announcing the death of the Emperor of China and the Dowager Empress. There was a great deal of mystery about both events. It was reported that the Emperor died on Friday afternoon, while on Sunday came the news that the Dowager Empress had died that afternoon. The close proximity of these two deaths naturally leads to suspicion that they were not natural, but due to poison or some act on the part of others. But the Emperor has been ill for sometime and his death may have been perfectly natural, though the doubt will remain as to whether the Empress has not been put out of the way. The young Emperor was a weakling and has played little part other than as a puppet. Hsi Tsi An, however, was, perhaps, the most remarkable woman ever known to the Orient. Born in 1834 of poor parents, she was as a girl sold to be a slave. Becoming the property of a famous general, her beauty led to her being presented to the reigning Emperor who, charmed by her physical attractions and intelligence, made her his secondary wife, and on her bearing him a son, the future Emperor Tung Chih, raised her to the first rank. She became the regent of the empire at his death, and ever since then has ruled the country with a will of iron. She has controlled the succession to the throne, and though efforts have been made to break her power, she has, in the end, nearly always come out on top. She was a Manchu, and, therefore, under the ban of Chinese patriots, who have for long had aspirations to overturn the existing order of things. In the eyes of a very large number of the people she was regarded as a tyrant. Reformers have suffered largely at her hands, and there was a time when she set about slaughtering all Christians. She is supposed to have personally championed the Boxer War, yet put down three rebellions aimed at the existing regime. Only a few months ago, however, she was compelled, or recognized the wisdom, of some concession to modern ideas, and made the opening way for the beginning of constitutional government.

Carmack and Heney.

The bullet may kill the man, but it does not always stop the cause for which he stood. Twice last week the revolver played its part in the desperate effort to bolster up unworthy causes. Senator Carmack was shot down in Tennessee because of his zeal in the interests of state-wide prohibition. This, of course, was not the alleged reason for the assault upon him, but that he had used vitriolic language in some of his editorials. We prefer, however, to accept the declaration of Bishop Hoss that "he was killed for what they knew he would say," rather than for what he had said. The other effort of the forces for evil to destroy a man who was striking at the roots of their system of graft, was the shooting of Assistant District Attorney Heney, who has been in charge of the prosecution for the past two years of the San Francisco bribery and graft gang. It is a satisfaction to know that the chances for the recovery of this servant of the people are good. It is another satisfaction to know that the President of the United States, and many of its leading officials, have been outspoken in their admiration for the man who has thus risked his life for the sake of righteousness in civic affairs. While the act of the assassin is to be deplored, good will come out of the evil. We have every belief that the cause of temperance will be served not only in Tennessee, but in a wider region by Senator Carmack's death and that the shot at Mr. Heney will be turned into another blow at bribery and corruption.

Lighting the Prophet's Tomb.

Electric lights in the tomb of the prophet! If that old gentleman himself could have looked upon the recent celebration in the mosque at Medina, Arabia, he surely must have been surprised. For the first time this tomb of Mohammed was illuminated by hundreds of electric lamps. Thus does the slow-going Oriental yield to the progress of the age, and with the physical improvements coming from the West there is an increasing opportunity for the entry of Christian ideas. Thousands of pilgrims were brought to the sacred city by means of the new railroad, which, though built by the contributions of the faithful, is nevertheless a Western idea.

Sentenced to Church.

A Chicago judge recently pronounced a novel sentence upon a young criminal, compelling him to attend church regularly for six months and sign a pledge not to drink intoxicating liquors during the rest of his life. This sentence was decided upon after the judge had learned that the prisoner had spurned the prayers of a faithful mother and persistently refused to go to church or lead a better life. This judge's sentence is of the kind we would expect from Judge Estelle. Here is a part of his charge. "I am sure church attendance will do you much good. Then, too, I want you to pray for your redemption. Your prayers should be earnest; let them not be merely of the short variety. Your good, long and persistent prayers will probably make a man of you."

Child Suicide.

The "Song of the Shirt" has been applicable to many a woman, and many a man has dared to rend the veil in a desire to escape from life. But when a child of eleven has nothing for which she is willing to live, there is a new step in the depths of human woe. But there are more Elsie Lenhardts than she who took her life in Chicago. This one's father died five years ago, forcing the mother to struggle as best she could to maintain herself and child. The latter was consequently left much to her own devices and the path downward was easy. In five years she became, just at the period of what ought to be a beautiful blossoming to fair womanhood, tired of her life. For her there was no bringing up in the "nurture and admonition of the Lord." There are other cases after this pattern of sadness, but [illegible] sadness in the thought that hundreds of young girls, who have much that this girl lacked are neglecting themselves, though they be not neglected.

The Grace of Gratitude.

On the return of this annual Thanksgiving day, our attention is called to the obligations which we are under to give thanks to Almighty God for the abundant mercies with which he has crowned the year. It is well that our national and state executives enumerate the blessings which our nation and people have enjoyed as reasons why we should pause for awhile in the busy rush of life to offer thanks unto the gracious Giver of all these gifts. We can not be too often reminded of our debt of gratitude, for we are prone to forgetfulness in this respect.

No people on earth have more reasons for thanksgiving than do the American people. We have recently passed through an exciting election, but how readily the people have accepted the results, and how little, after all, has been disturbed the machinery of government in state and nation! It is something to be grateful for to be a citizen of a country where there is such stability of government.

We have been greatly blessed, too, with the abundant products of the soil, and with freedom from devastating pestilence and war. For these we should give grateful acknowledgement to God. For civil and religious liberty; for the growth of every righteous cause; for the quickened conscience of the people concerning many evils long endured; for growing moral ideals, for the advance of temperance sentiment, for the progress of education and the general advancement of the kingdom of God, let us give thanks to God on our annual Thanksgiving day.

For our homes—our shelter from the world's rude blasts and its temptations—for the sweet and tender relationships of the family; for the sacred ties of kinship and friendship, let us give thanks to the Heavenly Father, after whom every family in heaven and on earth is named.

For our churches, with all the great and sacred truths for which they stand, and for the holy memories that cluster about them, and the fond hopes which they foster within us of the life eternal, let us give thanks to Him who said: "On this rock I will build my church, and the gates of Hades shall not prevail against it." For a church that can not be destroyed; for a faith that links us with God and eternity and spiritual realities; a hope that bridges the chasm of time and every gulf of sorrow; for the love which glorifies human life and makes us one with God, let us be grateful to Him who sent His Son into the world, not to condemn it, but that through Him it might be saved. In a word, let us cultivate the grace of gratitude until we shall be able to sing with the Psalmist:

"Make a joyful noise unto Jehovah, all ye lands.
Serve Jehovah with gladness:
Come before his presence with singing.
Know ye that Jehovah, he is God:
It is he that hath made us, and we are his;
We are his people, and the sheep of his pasture.
Enter into his gates with thanksgiving.
And into his courts with praise:
Give thanks unto him, and bless his name.
For Jehovah is good; his lovingkindness endureth forever,
And his faithfulness unto all generations."

"Offer a sacrifice of thanksgiving with leaven, and proclaim and publish the free offerings: for this liketh you, O ye children of Israel. saith the Lord God."—Amos 4:5.

Two Kinds of Apostasy.

It is possible for Christians to fall away from the true faith and practice of Christianity in two seemingly opposite directions. There is an apostasy from the liberty which we have in Christ as well as from the loyalty which we owe to Christ. We shall allow another, whose name holds an honored place in our annals and in our literature, to describe the first of these two kinds of apostasy:

"The germs of apostasy from Christ are found in the presumptuous spirit that seeks to dictate where Christ has not dictated. Division and its bitter fruits may come as readily through the attempt to forbid that which Christ has not forbidden, as through an attempt to impose that which Christ has not imposed. . . . Two things, it strikes us, must be carefully kept in mind, if we would legitimately work out the spiritual emancipation contemplated in the reformation which we plead.

1. The necessity for free and unembarrassed research with a view to grow in grace and knowledge. It is fatal to assume that we have certainly learned all that the Bible teaches. This has been the silly and baneful conceit of all that have gone before us. Shall we repeat the folly, and superinduce a necessity for another people to be raised up to sound a new battle-cry of reformation? Must every man be branded with heresy or apostasy whose ripe investigations lead him out of our ruts? Must free investigation be smothered by a timid conservatism or a presumptuous bigotry, that takes alarm at every step of progress? Grant that errors may sometimes be thrust on us. Free and kind discussion will soon correct them. There is not a hundredth part of the danger from an occasional outcropping of error as the result of free investigation that must accrue from the murderous stiflings of free thought and free speech. An attempt to preserve union on such conditions not only renders union worthless by the sacrifice of liberty, but will defeat its own purpose, and compel, in time, new revolutionary movements.

2. The absence of all right to control our brethren where Christ has left them free. Such freedom may sometimes alarm us. Creed-bound communities may lift their hands in holy horror at the "latitudinarianism" that we allow. But it is not worth while to accept principles unless we are willing to follow them to their legitimate results; and we insist that Romans 14 allows a very large liberty, which we have no right to trench on except with the plea of the demands of Christian love.

Any attempt to introduce and enforce anything as a matter of faith or duty, which the Apostles did not enforce in the name of our Lord, would be a step in apostasy. And any attempt to compel uniformity in thinking or in practice, where the Apostles have left us free, is virtual apostasy."—Isaac Errett, in Christian Standard. Quoted from Lamar's "Memoirs of Isaac Errett," Vol. II, pp. 8, 9.

The above teaching is familiar to our readers, as it is the identical position which THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has occupied throughout its history. Isaac Errett and the Editor of this paper, during the time that his active life was contemporaneous with our own, occupied precisely the same attitude toward this question of liberty. In our judgment, to depart from it is, indeed, "virtual apostasy."

But there is another form of apostasy to which we can not close our eyes. There is a false liberalism abroad in the land, and how far it has invaded our own ranks we do not stop now to consider, that manifests slight reverence for the authority of Christ and his apostles, and that claims the right from its vantage ground of superior attainments, to modify or dispense with divine ordinances, and with such Biblical facts as it is unable to harmonize with its false philosophy. That this spirit has invaded many of the universities of the Old World, and some of the New, will not be questioned by those familiar with the history of current religious thought. That we are exposed to the influence of this false liberalism which finds its way into current literature and into many modern pulpits, and is often clothed in finest literary form, is enough to put us on our guard against its pernicious tendency, even though it may have made as yet but slight inroads among us.

Is it possible for a religious movement seeking to restore the Christianity of Christ, and with it the unity for which he prayed, to avoid both these extremes, and while maintaining the liberty which we have in Christ, still be loyal to him and to the teaching of those whom he commissioned and qualified to communicate his will to the world? We have cherished the belief that this is possible, and we have stood for more than a generation pleading with the brethren of both extremes to maintain this high ideal of manifesting to the world the liberty of Christ's freemen, and the loyalty of Christ's disciples and servants. We have held, too, that this is only possible as we share the Spirit of Christ and come into possession of that love which he himself taught is the fulfillment of the law and of the prophets. In other words, those who through faith in Christ have been transformed in character are most likely to avoid both these forms of apostasy, and to illustrate that teaching and life which alone make possible the unity for which Christ prayed and for which we plead.

The Union Congress.

It was our privilege to be in attendance during two days of the congress held in Chicago on the 10th, 11th and 12th instant, by the Baptists, Free Baptists and Disciples of Christ. This was the first meeting of the kind in the history of these religious bodies, and was a most significant occasion. A number of vital topics were discussed, and all of them in a thoroughly reverent and evangelical spirit. Both the Baptists and Free Baptists had some of the ablest men on the program, and we were not in the least ashamed of our own representatives, who acquitted themselves, and the Cause they represented, nobly. Such men as I. J. Spencer, of Lexington; William Bayard Craig, of Denver; A. W. Fortune, of Cincinnati; B. A. Jenkins, of Kansas City; Allan B. Philputt, of Indianapolis, and Vernon Stauffer, of Angola, Ind., are able to represent our Cause in any assembly.

The sessions of deepest interest were the two devoted to the subject of Christian union. The first of these sessions was devoted to the subject of "What Definite Steps Should Be Immediately Taken in the Organic Union of Baptists, Free Baptists and Disciples of Christ?" Bro. I. J. Spencer represented the Disciples, while Dr. Carter Cate represented the Free Baptists and Dr. L. A. Crandall represented the Baptists. It is difficult to say which one of these brethren made the strongest plea for Christian union. The voluntary discussion which followed was on the same line. The practical steps suggested were such union congresses as this one, frequent interchange of pulpits, co-operation with each other wherever and whenever practicable, with a view to better acquaintanceship and mutual understanding of each other. Another point urged was carefulness in avoiding misrepresentations of each other's position—a fruitful cause of misunderstanding in the past.

"The Doctrine of Atonement in Terms of Modern Thought" was ably discussed by the speakers assigned to that topic, Brother Jenkins representing the Disciples, and there was considerable unanimity of thought in the papers, though we were not permitted to hear the voluntary discussion. One of the liveliest sessions was on the question, "Is Psycho-Therapeutics a Function of the Church?" This was one of the subjects which had two sides, and both sides were ably presented, there being wide difference of opinion. That there was some virtue in suggestion and auto-suggestion, in the healing of certain forms of diseases, was freely admitted by all, but the difference arose on the advisability of the church, as such, making this work a part of its mission.

The closing, and perhaps the tenderest session of the congress, was on "Christ's Prayer for Unity." Seldom does one hear three such papers on that subject as were read by Rev. A. W. Jefferson (Free Baptist), Portland, Me.; Rev. Vernon Stauffer (Disciple), Angola, Ind., and Rev. Henry M. Sanders, D. D., Baptist, of New York. These were followed by three extempore speeches of ten minutes each by a representative from each of the three bodies. The feeling was deep and tender throughout this session, and the spirit of unity dominated all minds and hearts.

While listening to these addresses we could not but think how the fathers of this Reformation would have rejoiced to witness a meeting like this, and to hear such sentiments expressed as were presented in these able addresses. Surely the Spirit of God, which is the spirit of unity, is moving upon the hearts of the people, and the prayer of our divine Lord for the unity of His followers seems to be approaching nearer every day. The union congress was a great success, whether considered as an intellectual or spiritual feast, and it is not strange that provision was made for such congresses to be held in the future.

The sessions were held in the Memorial Church of Christ, formed by the recent union of the Memorial Baptist Church and the First Christian Church of that city, and of which Prof. H. L. Willett and Dr. Van Doren are the ministers. The union seems to be working harmoniously so far.

Notes and Comments

The brethren in Australasia propose to have a Centennial celebration April 9-17 in Sydney, N. S. W. They request a few brethren to go out from this country at their own charges, to rejoice with them and to participate in their services. As they propose to send delegates to Pittsburg, it would be a graceful thing if some of our brethren could plan to make this journey to bear our fraternal greetings to the brethren in Australasia, and to bring back to us the inspiration which they will gather from participation in such a meeting.

The difference between knowledge and love, according to Paul, is, that knowledge (without love) puffs up, while love builds up. There is a danger from knowledge without love, as there is a danger from ignorance without modesty. The latter may be superstitious and domineering, while the former may be arrogant and proud, looking down with disdain upon those whom it charges with ignorance. It is better to be built up than to be puffed up; it is better to know little with love and humility, than to know much with arrogance and pride. If we grow in knowledge, let us, also, grow in the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, who was the companion of the lowly and the ignorant, and who sought, in the true spirit of comradeship, to lift them up to higher levels.

Any attempt to hold the missionary societies responsible for what some regard as a mistake of the Centennial committee is wholly unjust and indefensible. The Foreign Christian Missionary Society, for instance, did not appoint A. McLean a member of the Centennial committee, nor did any of the other missionary or benevolent organizations, as such, appoint the member of the committee that happens to be officially related to such society. These organizations, therefore, ought not to be criticised for any mistakes which the Centennial committee may have made. If such mistakes have been made, the members of the committee are of age, and are individually responsible to the brotherhood, and they have no objection to bearing the responsibility of their action.

As to whether the committee is to blame, and to what extent, will appear more fully when its full report is published, and we hope to be able to lay this before our readers soon. Until then, it is the part of simple justice for the brethren to withhold their judgment. The character of the men composing this committee is sufficient guarantee to the brotherhood that they have acted after the most careful deliberation on the whole subject, for the best interest, as they believe, of the cause we represent. Not, therefore, until after a thorough investigation and knowledge of all facts should the committee be blamed. All expressions of rash opinion and criticism prior to a full knowledge of the facts are not only premature, but are likely to result in great harm.

A favorite motto, as well as a cardinal principle of our plea for unity, has been, "In faith, unity; in opinion, liberty." Isn't it time we had reached a common understanding of the meaning of the motto? Some of us understand it to mean that if one have faith in Jesus Christ as the only begotten Son of God, who is both Savior and Lord, and is obedient to him in his requirements, maintaining a Christian character, he is not to be disturbed in his fellowship because of differences of opinion with his brethren in matters which do not affect his Christian faith and character. Others appear to understand that the faith in which there must be unity includes what might be regarded as the conclusions concerning questions of Biblical criticism and interpretation, which were generally held in the beginning of the Reformation, or which generally prevail to-day. It is easy to see how these widely different views could not get on together peaceably in the same house, and under the same ecclesiastical roof. The moment a concrete case arises in which the principle is to be applied, the crash must inevitably begin. This difference, it will be seen, involves the question of Christian liberty. According to one view, one may differ from his brethren concerning questions of historical criticism, in the exercise of Christian liberty, without forfeiting fellowship with his brethren, provided only he holds these views without surrendering his faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. According to the other view, he has no liberty to differ from his brethren on such questions, for instance, as the composite character of the book of Genesis, the authorship of the Pentateuch, and dates and authorship of certain other books of the Bible. Which is the correct view? Our own view of the question is, of course, well known, but we are open to conviction if sufficient reason can be given for a different view. To make uniformity of opinion on questions of historical criticism of the Bible a condition of union among ourselves or with others, would mean the absolute failure of our movement as a Christian union movement.

Editor's Easy Chair.

The Easy Chair would enter into the spirit of the Thanksgiving season and express its gratitude to Him "who healeth all our diseases, and who forgiveth all our iniquities." We trust the season will be a happy one among our readers. It is sure to be if real gratitude for God's mercies fills all hearts. It is when we appreciate our blessings most that we are happiest. Let there be the blessed feature of home-coming, which, from the beginning, has been one of the characteristics of Thanksgiving day. It is a beautiful thing for the boys and girls who have married and left the old home, or who may have wandered away in single blessedness to return to the parental roof on Thanksgiving day. Nothing could make the hearts of the "old folks at home" more grateful than the presence of these grown-up children. And surely nothing could make these young folks happier or more grateful than to witness the peace and joy which their presence has brought to their parents, and to recall, amid the familiar scenes, the sweet memories of childhood and youth. It is pleasant to call up out of the misty past those scenes and events which brought happiness to our young hearts, and to live over again those halcyon days of youth, never to return. Many there will be, however, who will be hindered by distance, or other causes, from returning to the old home, whose thoughts will wander thither, and who, we trust, will send loving messages to the loved ones who linger there. The old home is the one spot on earth which must ever hold its place in our affections and memory. Though one may wander far in foreign lands, yet memory recalls the home of his youth and childhood and he can sing, with John Howard Payne:

> "'Mid pleasures and palaces though we may roam,
> Be it ever so humble there's no place like home."

Speaking of the bright memories which come out of our childhood and youth, ought there not to be in this fact a hint to parents and teachers, and all who have to do with the young, to make as many of these bright spots as possible on the fair pages of childhood and youth? It ought to be a hint to the young themselves who are now sowing the seeds of the harvest that is to be. It is theirs to perform such deeds and to live such lives as that memory will be a fountain of joy and inspiration to them through all the coming years. May we not go further? Is there not more than a hint, aye, an admonition, to those of us who are now living our earth-lives, to form such characters, to make such enduring friendships, to live so largely for the welfare of others, and to so fill these passing years with deeds of kindness and helpfulness, as that when we look back from the heights above, through memory, to the lives we have here lived, they will add even to the joys of the heavenly life? This, of course, assumes what we believe to be true, that in the world beyond we shall retain the memory of the struggles joys and sorrows of our lives here on earth. This will be the background on which the joys of heaven will appear all the brighter and more beautiful. But if memory be a source of joy to the righteous, what a source of pain and infinite regret it must be to those who have wasted the opportunities of this life and have failed to live for the things that are eternal! No penal fires that we can think of will furnish keener anguish of soul than this recollection of mercies scorned, of duties neglected, and of opportunities unappreciated and passed by.

If one wishes for a manifest token of the presence of God in modern history, he will perhaps find nothing more convincing than the marvelous growth in Christian union. The Easy Chair has been mingling for a few days, during the past week, in a Congress composed of representative men of three religious bodies who hold alike to the "one Lord, one faith, and one baptism." In the days gone by, each of these bodies was at war with the others, and the theological conflict was waged relentlessly. They had no fellowship with each other, and no co-operation. Now they mingle together as brethren, ignoring their little differences of opinion, and rejoicing together in the great truths they hold in common, and in the love which joins them together. What has brought about this remarkable change? Under the tuition of the Holy Spirit, who abides in the Church to guide us into a fuller apprehension of truth, and especially of a better knowledge of Christ, men have come to see the relative unimportance of the things on which they differ, and the infinite value of the things on which they agree. We are coming, too, to see the necessity of union in order to the conversion of the world, and to realize, not simply the desirableness of union, but the sinfulness of division. Who can doubt that, under the continued leadership of Christ's spirit we shall come into a still more perfect unity, even as He prayed? It widens one's vision and strengthens one's faith to meet and mingle with these princely men of other religious bodies, and realize, when we get close to them, that their hearts beat as ours, and that they love and serve the same Lord as we. Let union congresses and other forms of union service continue until the forces of righteousness shall be massed against the forces of iniquity in a great and final conflict which shall usher in the Golden Age.

One of the most frequent admonitions in the Bible, scattered all through its pages, is the heartening phrase, "fear not." To nearly every great leader in Israel and in the Church of Jesus Christ in New Testament times, God gave this exhortation. When lawgiver, prophet, priest, king or apostle faced danger or opposition in the path of duty, he received this word of strength and of good courage. In every case the source of their confidence was not their own strength or wisdom, but God, whose work they were seeking to do, and whose cause they were striving to advance. It is an admonition we need to hear to-day. Many are of fearful hearts. They see lions in the path, but do not see the chains by which they are bound. Every conflict for religious liberty since the world began has been opposed in the name of religion itself. Of none has this been truer than of our own movement. It began in a marvelous declaration of liberty which alarmed the defenders of existing systems. But the men in the lead were courageous men who heard God's voice saying to them, "Fear not!" Every religious movement has had the battle of religious liberty to fight out in its own ranks. We have had many such a conflict over different questions. But when the liberty contended for has been within the limits of loyalty to Jesus Christ, it has always won the day. If our Cause seems to be threatened by those who would undermine the faith, or by those who would make uniformity of opinion on questions about which Bible scholars differ, a condition of fellowship, we need not fear the result. Whatever antagonizes fundamental truth must perish; and whatever infringes on the liberty which we have in Christ must, also, perish. These conflicts are inevitable. But let us see that we wage our battle in the name and in the spirit of our Lord and Master, and we shall hear his reassuring voice, saying again, "Fear not!"

A good illustration of how not to do it was given the Easy Chair by one of the brethren in attendance at the Union Congress. When he went to a certain city to accept the pastorate of one of our churches, the Baptist ministers and our own had been holding union meetings for some time, but a few weeks previous to his arrival they had agreed to have two papers, in which a representative from the Baptists was to point out the errors of the Disciples, and in turn a Disciple was to point out the errors of the Baptist position. These two papers set the ministers and churches of the two bodies in the city in battle array, and the union meeting adjourned sine die! How much better it would have been if each of these writers had been assigned to the task of pointing out the things which he admired and approved in the other religious body! One of the Baptist speakers at the congress said that while Baptists and Disciples held ninety-five per cent in common, and differed only five per cent, yet the five per cent had received more emphasis than the ninety-five per cent of the truths held in common. He suggested that we cease emphasizing the five per cent for awhile and lay stress on the ninety-five per cent of common truths. This would afford ample standing room for adjusting the small per cent of difference. This is a good principle to go by in our relations with each other. If the men among us known as progressives and conservatives would stop to consider how much they hold in common, including the great facts of our faith and the plea we are making for the unity of a divided Christendom, and compare the value of these things with the matters in which they differ, they would realize the folly of spending their time in criticizing each other instead of joining hearts and hands to push on to success the principles and truths which they hold in common. It is a good time, just now, facing our Centennial, to try this experiment.

We Thank Thee By James Mudge

All hail, Thanksgiving day, from of old, beauteous, beneficent and beloved! Thrice welcome its recurrence. Very precious are the hallowed memories that attend the ancient custom. May it long abide with us, a benediction and a dedication. It speaks tenderly yet powerfully of the past, a memento of days gone by when the circle round the hearthstone was larger, when some now scattered or ascended were with us, when merriment and enjoyment ruled the hour. It speaks of the far-away time in the early days of the country when the scattered settlements along these rocky coasts and sandy shores were summoned by their governors to rejoice over their plentiful harvests so big with meaning in their poverty. It has a little connection, by suggestion at least, with other lands and centuries remote, when the Israelites held their fast or ingathering, when the Romans had their autumn festival in honor of Ceres, the goddess of grain, when the Saxons kept harvest home. So this day comes down to us freighted with memories, loaded with love and trust. Praises be to God for his goodness and for his wonderful works to the children of men!

It is a day for gaiety and good cheer. Religion, however earnest, is no foe to fun in its proper place. It bids us put on the garment of praise, a most comfortable and comely robe, warm and winsome, serviceable, seasonable and resplendent, exceedingly becoming to all. It says, "Rejoice always, and in everything give thanks." "A merry heart is a good medicine," declares the Holy Book. Laughter and leanness are proverbially opposite. The sky laughs, the morning laughs, the fertile fields laugh, the children laugh. Why should they not? Very suitable just now, as Milton's tercentenary draws so near, would be the public and private reading of that great poet's L'Allegro whose lively lines begin,

"Hence, loathed Melancholy," and go on to say,

"Come, heart-easing Mirth?
And with thy right hand lead with thee
The mountain nymph, sweet liberty."

It is a day of patriotism. "Sweet Liberty" has connections here. One is vividly reminded that the struggle for freedom on this continent has entailed hardships and led through war's desolations. One of the earliest Thanksgivings came to celebrate the joyful deliverance from a starvation season when five kernels of corn a day were all that could be distributed for a good while. There was a general thanksgiving for peace in 1784, another for the adoption of the Constitution in 1789, still another in 1815 for the conclusion of war with England. President Lincoln in 1865 recommended a special thanksgiving for victories; so in 1863 and 1864, from which time proclamations have been issued annually by the several Presidents as well as the governors of the states. So our land is indissolubly linked with the day. We owe praises to the ruler of the nations who has given us our lot in this favored republic, and a portion of the day may suitably be set apart for considering how fully we are discharging our national duties.

It is emphatically the family day, when the wanderers return and all the loved ones take pains to assemble. There has come to be of late years an "old home week" in the summer, which brings back the dispersed to native towns and villages. But it can not take the place of the old home day so long and so firmly established. The literal hearth fires may have come, in the march of modern improvement, to be only a figure of speech, but the heart fires still burn as of old and give forth their long-ago greetings. We may well thank God for American home life, the strong stay of the republic, the source of influences the sweetest and best, fountain of lasting health and happiness. How good to turn this day to large account in making the old folks happy and the young folks glad, in cementing yet more closely the ties that bind together parents and children, brothers and sisters, uncles and aunts and cousins.

It is a day for piety. God is too frequently left out of our festivals. Earthly friends are remembered, but the best Friend is forgotten. Our close dependence on him is one of the lessons taught by the returning autumn. He has promised that "seed time and harvest shall not cease." We rarely realize that once a year starvation is within a month of all the human family. The supply of food is never much ahead of the demand. The year's food, as a rule, is grown within the year, and the wolf is never far from the door. God has given us this year our daily bread. He has proved himself the rewarder of those who diligently work with him and for him. The ever-recurring miracle of the ages has been again performed. Ought we not to return thanks? But not for material mercies only or chiefly should we be grateful. There have been great victories in the mission countries, and the spiritual harvests are going on in many whitening fields. The reapers are busy; also the sowers. There is increasing harmony, unity, love and good will among the people of God. As Christians no less than as patriots we have abundant cause for thankfulness. Let the day be consecrated to faith, and marked by an increase of spiritual vision. Back of the gift is the Giver. Behind the denial is the unalterable love divine. We should be able at least to parallel the song of Habakkuk, who maintained that even though the fields should yield no food, the field no flock, the stalls no herd, the vine no fruit, yet he would rejoice in Jehovah, would joy in the God of his salvation. His challenge to an invincible hope and trust we may well take up. How better can the day be spent than in cultivating the spirit which will give thanks for all things and be everywhere not only contented but more than conqueror?

"We thank Thee, O Father, for all that is bright—
The gleam of the day and the stars of the night,
The flower of our youth and the fruits of our prime,
The blessings that march down the pathway of time.

"We thank thee, O Father, for all that is dear—
The sob of the tempest, the flow of the tear;
For never in blindness and never in vain,
Thy mercy permitted the sorrows of pain.

"We thank Thee, O Father of all, for the power
Of aiding each other in life's darkest hour;
The generous heart and the bountiful hand,
And all the soul-help that sad souls understand.

"We thank Thee, O Father, for days yet to be—
For hopes that our father will call us to Thee;
That all our eternity form, through thy love,
One Thanksgiving day in the mansions above."

A HYMN OF THANKSGIVING.

By Thomas Curtis Clark.

For the sunshine and the rain,
For the garnered golden grain,
For the timely gifts that pour
From the fields' and orchards' store
For our blessing;
For the glory of the days,
For the nights, with stars ablaze,
With their matchless songs of praise,
Him confessing.

For the kindly word of cheer,
Making glad our sojourn here,
For the faith that life is good,
For the bond of brotherhood,
Growing ever;
For the hopes that pierce the night,
Pointing us a pathway bright
Upward to th' eternal Light,
Fading never.

St. Louis.

PRAYER OF CONSECRATION.

O God, our Heavenly Father, whose gift is length of days, help us to make the noblest use of mind and body in our advancing years.

According to our strength apportion thou our work.

As thou hast pardoned our transgressions, sift the ingatherings of our memory, that evil may grow dim and good shine forth clearly.

We bless thee for thy gifts, especially for thy presence, and the love of friends in heaven and earth.

Grant us new ties of friendship, new opportunities of service, joy in the growth and happiness of children, and sympathy with those who bear the burdens of the world, clear thought and quiet faith.

Teach us to bear infirmities with cheerful patience.

Keep us from narrow pride in outgrown ways, blind eyes that will not see the good of change, impatient judgments of the methods and experiments of others.

Let thy peace rule our spirits through all the trials of our waning powers.

Take from us all fear of death and all despair or undue love of life, that with glad hearts at rest in thee we may await thy will concerning us, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Christian Conquest of America

The Second Part of an address delivered at the New Orleans Convention.

By F. M. Dowling

Loyalty to "Our Plea" demands the Christian conquest of America.

Of all the religious bodies in America, the people who desire to be known simply as Christians, or the Disciples of Christ, ought to be foremost in the home missionary zeal and activities. The large denominations give from $500,000 to $1,000,000 a year for home missions. From every consideration that moves them we ought to match their gifts, and then add a liberal sum to be applied to the massing of all the religious forces of America for a united effort to preach the Gospel to every creature in our own and in all lands. In addition to the common message which all believers have to proclaim to the unsaved, the Disciples of Christ have been commissioned with a message to the churches.

I am not a stickler for the expression, "Our Plea," but I believe with all my soul that we still have a message for our brethren of all communions. If the Disciples of Christ do not stand for something, I move that we stand adjourned.

If we do not stand for something vital and imperative, I am ready to launch my bark on the current of a "disappearing brotherhood." Before God, if we have no needed, present day message for the religious world, this convention ought to memorialize some other religious body, asking them to receive us into their communion, thus reducing by one the number of divisions in the family of God.

Brethren, hear this—the foremost men in all the Christian denominations are coming to recognize the absolute necessity of a united effort on the part of all believers in order that the church may accomplish her divine mission in America and in all the earth.

The Committee on Invitation asking the great religious bodies of the United States to participate in an Inter-Church Conference on Federation, stated this as the object of the movement: "We believe that the great Christian bodies of our country should stand together, should lead in the discussion of, and give impulse to, all great movements that make for righteousness. We believe that questions like those of marriage and divorce, Sabbath desecration, social evils, child labor, the relation of labor to capital, problems that are created by foreign immigration, the bettering of the conditions of the laboring classes, and the moral and religious training of the young—concern Christians of every name, and demand their united and concerted action if the church is to lead effectively in the conquest of the world for Christ.

In the address of welcome delivered by Charles L. Thompson, Secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions, are these words: "The waste of power in churches, applying themselves individually to problems, social, civic, missionary, is tremendous. A score of little rills have each far less than one-twentieth of the power they would have if shot through a single mill race."

Friends, when the history of Christian Union is fully written, it will contain these six great chapters: Union, Division, Hostility, Comity, Federation, Unity. We are now writing the chapter on Federation. Some men, with larger vision and more prophetic minds, are sketching out the chapter on Unity.

The greatest words on the subject of Christian Union spoken at the Conference were spoken by that Major Prophet, Robert E. Speer, speaking for the young people. Hear him: "However great the difficulties which stand in the way of an actual realization of oneness among believers in Jesus Christ may appear to others, those difficulties do not appear to be great to us. The atmosphere in which we live is distinctly inhospitable to thoughts of division or separation among us. * * * We are working now so closely for common ends and purposes that here this afternoon, as we look about us and recognize the faces of friends, we feel that there could not be, that it is morally impossible that there could be, any prolongation of division among us. I say we live in an atmosphere which makes these ideals of federation and—I will say with perfect frankness—of Church union entirely common and congenial ideas to us. We know here to-day that just in proportion as we submit ourselves to Him shall we be drawn away from the unholiness of our dissensions, the unChristlikeness of our separations, into the one great body which bears his name and of which Christ our Lord shall be the head. To some generation this privilege is to be given; some day the Church will come that shall realize at last in itself the blessed vision of our Lord, when all his people shall be one. Oh, that it might be in our day that at last the expectant Christ should see of the desire of his soul and be satisfied, that in our day at last, for the conviction of the world, for the full setting forth of the divine unity of the Son with his Father, those who call him their Master might in him be one. My friends,—I mean you of the generation for which I am speaking now,—why should we not begin now, even now, that real unity which shall bring us in our day—shall we not dare to hope for that for which Christ prayed?—that shall bring us in our day altogether, as we are in one Lord and one faith, and also into one Church."

Brethren, Dr. Coyle is right. Toward the port of Christian union our scattered fleets are converging. As vessels near a harbor pilots are sent aboard to guide them safely through the channel. My brethren of the Disciples of Christ—God forgive me if I speak boastingly or presumptuously or ignorantly—I can not escape the conviction that a people whose life study and daily prayer and unceasing activity have all been to the end that all who believe in Jesus Christ should be one that the world might believe, should be used of God, in the present auspicious moment, in the crisis that is upon us, in piloting the incoming fleets of our divided Christendom into the port of such a union as that for which Christ prayed the night on which he was betrayed, and into such a union as will be effective in coping with conditions—alarming conditions—in our own country and in establishing the Kingdom of God in all the earth.

I am sure you have caught the force of these things and are ready to join with me in saying that loyalty to "Our Plea" demands—O how urgently it demands!—that the Disciples of Christ be in the forefront of the forces charged with the Christian conquest of America.

IV. Loyalty to the enterprise of the Christian conquest of the world demands the Christian conquest of America, not only because America is a part of the world, but because the Christian conquest of America is a necessary antecedent to the Christian conquest of the world.

Brethren, for reasons of order, convenience and administration, you may do well to divide this convention into sections, but you can not confine within any sectional limits the interests of any man who has caught the vision of God's purpose through the ages. Home missions and foreign missions have been called the two wings of the angel flying through the whole heavens, preaching the everlasting gospel. This is good, and yet the distinction is almost too great. My vision standing here to-night is that foreign missions and home missions are one, and that foreign missions are that one and home missions are that one and that they twain constitute a fabric as seamless as the robe of Christ. The cleavage between foreign missions and home missions is artificial and must vanish as a line drawn by a ship at sea. Brethren, it is for the sake of the whole world that I am pleading for the Christian conquest of America. I do not know that the importance of the Christian conquest of America in relation to the Christian conquest of the world has been expressed more tersely and strikingly than in the words of Austin Phelps: "If I were a missionary in Canton, China, my first prayer in the morning would be for the success of American home missions, for the sake of Canton, China."

Can Professor Park be right when he exclaims: "Should America fail the world will fail?"

Joseph Ernest McAfee, secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions, says in his great book, "Missions Striking Home": "The heaven-sent call of the homeland is the appeal of world-capturing spiritual strategy. This vast spiritual organism is masterful, and is designed to be used masterfully of the divine strategist. A saved America holds

A FAT BABY

Usually Evidence of Proper Feeding.

Babies grow very rapidly and if they do not get the right kind of food they grow backwards instead of forwards; that is, when their food is not nourishing they grow thin and cross and some of them die from the lack of the right kind of food. A girl writes:

"My aunt's baby was very delicate and was always ill. She was not able to nurse it and took it to one doctor after another, but none of them did the child any good.

"One day mother told my aunt to try Grape-Nuts for the baby, but she laughed and said if the doctors couldn't do the baby any good, how could Grape-Nuts? But mother said 'try it anyway.'

"So my aunt put one tablespoonful of Grape-Nuts in a quarter cup of hot water and when the food was soft she added as much milk as water and gave that to the baby.

"In a month and a half you would hardly have known that baby, it was so fat and thrived so fast. A neighbor asked my aunt what made the baby so healthy and fat when only six weeks before it was so thin. She said 'Grape-Nuts.' The neighbor got Grape-Nuts for her baby and it was soon as fat as my aunt's child."

the key to the world's saving. Right here, from this organism of moral and social forces projects the mightiest spiritual leverage at the hand of God or man for the uplift of the human race toward God and heaven."

And it is a truism of the schools and the market place, of the stock exchange and of the streets, that the forces of our American life will shape the destinies of the world's civilization. It will be a dull-witted church indeed, which does not comprehend her proper place and her incomparable mission in contributing to those forces."

William Jennings Bryan, speaking of what he considered the paramount political issue, said: "The United States can do more for this cause than any other nation on earth. We are fighting this battle on the hilltop and the world is looking on." This saying, my friends, of the Christian statesman, is true of the paramount religious issue as well.

For one thing, brethren, the missionary authorities agree that, while eventually the heathen lands must be evangelized by native churches, Christian lands must continue for many years to serve as bases of supply for aggressive work in the non-Christian lands, and that a fast increasing demand is to be made on the church in America both for men and money. No one sees these truths more clearly than the foreign missionaries and those who are charged with the conduct of the world-wide evangelistic campaign.

The most thrilling and encouraging feature of the modern missionary crusade is the students' volunteer movement for foreign missions. The last convention in the interest of the movement was held in Nashville. Many pronounce it in many respects the greatest missionary convention ever held. Hear this: The subject of one section of the program was, "The Success of the Foreign Missionary Campaign Dependent upon the Strength and Loyalty of the Home Base."

I do not know that any man sees this truth as clearly as that man of great soul and illimitable vision, the president of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society. Speaking of churches planted by the American Christian Missionary Society, Pres. McLean says: "Churches thus planted and fostered are related to the work in the non-Christian world as the roots of a tree are related to the branches. Without vigorous roots the tree will wither and die. These churches must furnish the men for the preaching of the gospel in the regions beyond. There is no other source of supply. The men needed for Africa, for China, for Japan, for India and for the islands of the sea, must come from the churches in this land, if they come at all.

The churches should keep pace with our marvelous increase in population. To this end the offerings for home missions should be on a scale of unprecedented liberality. They should be worthy of a people who hold that they have a message for all men everywhere."

The foreign mission boards of the United States and Canada hold regular conferences. The fifteenth conference was held last January in New York City. One of the most important committees to report was the committee on forces needed to compass the work of the world's evangelization. This committee had been instructed to secure "a complete and accurate estimate of the number of new missionaries required each year to cover the field occupied, so that the gospel of Jesus Christ may be within a reasonable time adequately preached to every creature." The committee received replies from 30 boards. There was a general agreement that the time was ripe for a general aggressive movement in non-Christian lands. With the exception of representatives of missions in Turkey and Arabia, not a few are optimistic enough to believe in the possibility of giving every creature in their territory in this generation an adequate opportunity to accept Jesus Christ as a personal Savior. But mark you, friends, this glorious achievement is conditioned on an immense and immediate increase in the supply of men and means for the campaign. The needed increase in the number of missionaries is estimated as from two to six fold. The Foreign Christian Missionary Society said: "We need 10,000 natives to build up a permanent Church. Given the missionaries from home we shall have no trouble in getting the native evangelists."

But, brethren, the churches of America must supply for the "far flung battle line" not only men but money for their sending, their support, and their equipment—and hear it, ye followers of Jesus Christ, though ye hear it to your shame, money is harder to find than men! You will give your sons and your daughters, but your money you will not give. The saddest word that has come from the office of the Foreign Society this year is, that the fifty new missionaries whom the convention a year ago resolved to send to the foreign field could have been found, if the necessary money could have been secured.

Here in small compass is the task and the call, the wealth of American Christians must be consecrated and the wealth of all Americans must be captured; the masters of trade must be brought under the mastery of the Man of Galilee; our captains of industry must be enlisted under the Captain of our salvation; our kings of high finance must acknowledge allegiance to the King of kings; even "tainted money" must be washed, sanctified and justified in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, and in the spirit of our God the widows may continue to give their mites, but the rich must give their mightiers. Then will there be opened in America a fountain from which healing streams will flow to the ends of the earth. Brethren, if the Christianizing of American wealth and culture is the most gigantic undertaking of the age, it is the most magnificent and the most pressing; for here in America are chained the forces which must be released for the Christian conquest of the world.

I shall speak but one other word, but it is a great word. America must be Christianized in order to make effective the message of our missionaries in other lands. As it is—God save the work—American Christianity, as it is represented abroad too often by travelers and officials and as it is observed at home by visitors from other lands, gives the lie to the word of the missionary. You are right, Brother McAfee. "Unsaved America must remain at best a lame foreign missionary agency." If "we are fighting this battle on the hill top and the world is looking on," America must become the world's example of a Christian nation. Nothing in this day can be done in a corner, American missionaries can not preach one thing in foreign lands, and the American people live another thing in the homeland without the whole world being aware of the contradiction. Distances and difficulties of travel have been well nigh annihilated. Visitors, official and unofficial, from all lands, even the remotest, are coming to our shores in immense numbers. Justice Brewer may find reason for pronouncing the United States a Christian nation, but the world knows just how Christian we really are. The world cares nothing for pronouncements in official documents. The world goes back to Christ's rule of judgment—"By their fruits ye shall know them"—Mr. McAfee is right again: "The American Church of Christ preaches its final doctrine in the demonstrations of American civilization and American life. The world is judging us and our doctrine by what it sees of an applied gospel. And it will be our applied gospel which will carry the finally convicting missionary message of the American people and the American Church of Christ.

Hear me, my brethren, let American missionaries succeed in evangelizing and enrolling in churches the heathen world today, and to-morrow their work will be largely undone by the reports of returning visitors of iniquities flourishing in the midst, and—God save us—seemingly constituting a part of our boasted Christian civilization. Into our teeth the heathen world is flinging the old taunt: "Physician, heal thyself!" How can the Christian conquest of the world proceed in the face of the report that the gospel is insufficient and ineffective in the land where it has been tried on the fairest field, and from which its heralds come. It seems to me that if this report leaves a ray of hope of success for the Christian campaign among the nations, that light would be extinguished when it is reported that in America the principles of the teaching of Jesus Christ in regard to many matters involving personal, domestic, social and political righteousness, are disregarded and even repudiated.

Christianity is on trial here in America as nowhere else in the world. If we fail, the world will fail. By all the marks of providence America has been reserved as the field for the development of a Christian civilization that may serve

UPWARD START

After Changing from Coffee to Postum.

Many a talented person is kept back because of the interference of coffee with the nourishment of the body.

This is especially so with those whose nerves are very sensitive, as is often the case with talented persons. There is a simple, easy way to get rid of coffee evils and a Tenn. lady's experience along these lines is worth considering. She says:

"Almost from the beginning of the use of coffee it hurt my stomach. By the time I was fifteen I was almost a nervous wreck, nerves all unstrung, no strength to endure the most trivial thing, either work or fun.

"There was scarcely anything I could eat that would agree with me. The little I did eat seemed to give me more trouble than it was worth. I finally quit coffee and drank hot water, but there was so little food I could digest, I was literally starving; was so weak I could not sit up long at a time.

"It was then a friend brought me a hot cup of Postum. I drank part of it and after an hour I felt as though I had had something to eat—felt strengthened. That was about five years ago and, after continuing Postum in place of coffee and gradually getting stronger, today I can eat and digest anything I want, walk as much as I want. My nerves are steady.

"I believe the first thing that did me any good and gave me an upward start, was Postum, and I use it altogether now instead of coffee." "There's a Reason."

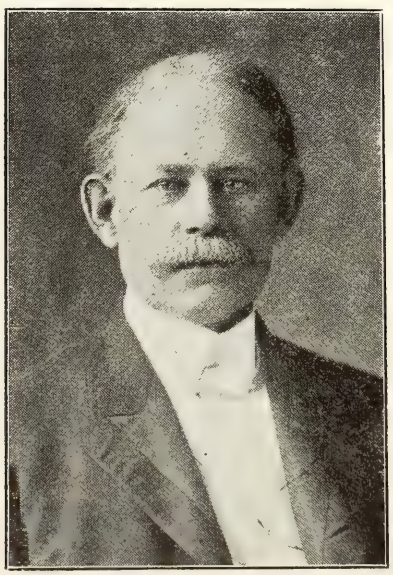
Colorado.

By William Bayard Craig.
Chairman of the State Board.

Colorado is to the United States of today what Pennsylvania was to the thirteen colonies—the Keystone state. It crowns the arch of continent between the Atlantic and the Pacific. It is on the great highway between the East and the West. It is one of the largest states of the Union, being exceeded by but four others, and is one of the richest and most varied in its resources.

The population comes largely from the East, where men have sufficient capital and brains to grapple with the big problems of mining and irrigation. England has contributed large capital in men and money to Colorado. The future of the state dazzles the imagination. The state is becoming as famous for sugar and fruit as it has long been for the precious metals and coal.

Our people are but a handful as yet. Many of the Mississippi states have single counties containing as many Disciples as all Colorado. Iowa has as many Disciples in Des Moines as we have in Colorado. Our churches have made a good record, thanks to the timely help of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions and the Board of Church Extension, added to our own relentless efforts.



J. T. Sharrard.
First evangelist. Served from 1883 to 1887.

Three-fourths of the state are yet without organization of the Christian Church. Despite all our efforts combined with the help of our national mission boards we will not be able to keep up with the growth of the state in its wonderful development. We have whole empires yet untouched or barely entered. We have a church in Craig, Routt County. It stands alone in the midst of a territory comprising 25,000 square miles in Colorado, and as much more in Utah and Wyoming. In Durango we have a newly organized church,—a feeble band. It stands alone in the midst of a territory of similar extent; yet Northwest and Southwest Colorado are conceded to be the richest parts of the state. We have other sections of large extent to plan for.

Our recent convention thrilled all who attended with enthusiasm, because the nature of the territory is so vast and so eloquent in its appeal for missionary effort. A national character who was present writes us: "I have never attended so great a convention. I never before felt that I was present when new empires were being planned." Our twenty-fifth anniversary was celebrated by much the largest and best convention we ever held, and the reports were indeed inspiring.

We will do more than we have yet done in the coming year to evangelize this great field, but we could with the greatest advantage use twice over all that we can raise added to all we will get from the Christian Woman's Board of Missions and the American Christian Missionary Society.

Young men ambitious to do work for the Master on a truly heroic scale, and in fields demanding as much sacrifice as a foreign field, might better turn their eyes to the whitening fields of Colorado.

Our great movement as it advances its lines westward must make itself strong in this Rocky Mountain region, and tie the churches of California with the churches of the Mississippi valley. The past twenty-five years have seen wonderful growth in Colorado, but the next twenty-five years will be still more wonderful in the progress recorded. We are just getting well under way.

Some Colorado History.

By Leonard G. Thompson

The student of our work in Colorado discovers at least four distinct periods in its history.

First, the pioneer period. As far as known the first Disciple who came to Colorado was Thomas Pomeroy. He was a native of Cornwall, England, and came to Colorado from Canada in 1864. He searched for a year before he found another Disciple.

The church at Golden was the first organization in the state. In 1870 we find W. H. Williams (afterwards the first missionary of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions in Jamaica), preaching there. He held a meeting in Denver in a school house. More than five hundred people witnessed the first baptisms which were performed in a mill race in west Denver. Two of those baptized were the wife and daughter of Thomas Pomeroy.

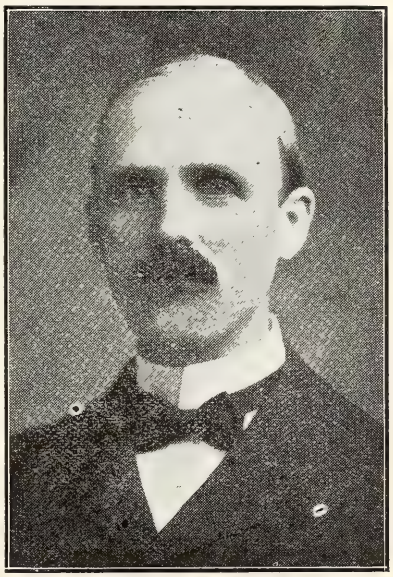
In 1873 "The Church at Denver" was organized. Among the charter members were Bertie Stover, the "Boy Preacher," and Chaplain Geo. G. Mullins, who made the "Boy Preacher" famous in his volume, "My Life Is An Open Book."

In the same year the first house of worship owned by the Disciples in Colorado was erected at Golden. Bertie Stover led in this movement, and was the pioneer church builder in Colorado.

The baptism of John Beard, at Denver, in 1874, is worthy of mention, as he walked twenty miles to reach Colorado Springs that he might take the train to Denver, as he had heard there was a preacher there who would baptize him. James H. Stover, brother of Bertie Stover, was the preacher.

The first regularly employed minister in Denver was J. H. McCollough, now of California. Five conventions were held prior to the organization of the present state missionary society. These were at Golden, 1873; Denver, 1874; Golden, 1875; Denver, 1877; Boulder, 1879.



Leonard G. Thompson.
Corresponding Secretary, 1898. Has resided in the state 21 years.

In the autumn of 1881 Wm. Bayard Craig, then of Iowa City, Iowa, made his first visit to Denver, and in January, 1882, he became pastor of the church, which was re-corporated as the Central Christian Church. In March 1882 J. T. Sharrard, a young preacher from Kentucky, came to Colorado.

Second, the period of organization. Under the leadership of Brother Craig, large contributions were made toward building a suitable house of worship, and the first building of the Central Christian Church in the capital city, costing $30,000, was dedicated March 25, 1883. Isaac Errett, editor of the Christian Standard, preached upon this occasion. On Monday, March 26, a missionary meeting was held in the new building, at which Brother Errett presided, and the Colorado Christian Missionary Society was organized. Wm. Bayard Craig was elected the first president.

The American Christian Missionary Society began at once to make annual appropriations to the Colorado work, and J. T. Sharrard, now pastor at Flemingsburg, Ky., was employed as the first state evangelist. He served until the close of 1887. His was a rugged, pioneer work, and he endured much hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ.

From 1888 to 1891 the principal evangelists were W. H. Mevers, a young minister who came from Kentucky, and Charles A. Stevens, who had been minister at Trinidad, Colo.

Third, the period of enlargement. The American Christian Missionary Society continued to give aid until 1891. In this year, by mutual agreement between all parties concerned, Colorado as a mission field was transferred to the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. In the same year M. L. Streator, evangelist in Montana for the C. W. B. M. was given oversight also of Colorado, and removed from Helena to Denver.

The period from 1883 to 1891 in which the American Christian Missionary Society aided Colorado, was the day of small things with that organization, and the transfer to the Christian Woman's Board of Missions was made that larger appropriations might be given to the great Colorado field.

Brother Streator did some of the hardest campaigning during his term of service from 1891 to 1897. Day and night, in season and out of season, in Colorado and Montana, he labored with great zeal and consecration to establish the work in the great West.

When the Christian Woman's Board of Missions found it necessary to retrench in numerous fields because of an overdraft in their general fund, Colorado was without an evangelist during 1898, as Brother Streator had been supported wholly by them in addition to their appropriations to the state board. During this year Leonard G. Thompson served as corresponding secretary in connection with his ministry at the East Side Church of Denver.

Fourth, the period of greater self-development. This began with the convention of 1898 at Pueblo. The committee on future work recommended that we raise $600, but the convention set the financial motto at $1,000, and resolved to put a corresponding secretary in the field as nearly as possible at their own charges. The amount raised the following year was $1.191. In no year since have the receipts fallen below $1,400, and for the year just closed they were $2,544. Twenty-five years ago the amount raised was $260; twelve years ago it was $842; and now it is three times the latter sum. The convention just closed at Denver named $4,000 as the financial mark in the Centennial year.

Leonard G. Thompson was chosen corresponding secretary in 1898, and still occupies that position. M. M. Nelson served as state evangelist in 1907, and Charles G. Stout a part of 1908.

Speaking in round terms the moneys expended in state mission work in twenty-five years are as follows: Received from the state, $23,150; received from national mission boards, $38,425; a grand total of $61,675. Out of a total of 60 churches 45 have received missionary aid. Of the 51 which have houses of worship 25 have been aided by loans from the Board of Church Extension, and three have received a second loan, making a total of 28 loans.

Perhaps the chief events in twenty-five years may be summarized thus: The gift of $12,000 by Gov. and Mrs. John L. Routt, which mode possible the erection of the first house of worship of the Central Church of Denver; the organization of the state missionary society, so closely connected with the entrance of the Central into its new building; the organization of the Colorado Christian Woman's Board of Missions; the gift of $28.000 by John C. Sutton, which led to the erection of the South Broadway building in Denver, followed by four years of labor without salary by Wm. Bayard Craig and his wife Emma P. Craig; the gift to the National Benevolent Association of land near Loveland, valued at $10,000, and now worth twice that amount, by J. W. Warren and wife, which established the Colorado Christian Home, first at that place, but now located at Denver; the establishment of the Colorado Christian Herald, now in its sixth year, and the establishment of the Colorado Summer Assembly at Pinecliffe, which, also, has passed into the sixth year of its history, and is destined some day, we believe, to attract national attention.

Some Things Accomplished in Ten Years.

By B. B. Tyler.

The recent convention of Disciples of Christ in Colorado was certainly the most satisfactory and encouraging in ten years, During this period of time substantial progress in every respect has been made. Churches have been organized. Houses of worship have been erected. Debts have been paid. Our general organization has been perfected. Our visions have been enlarged. Our sympathies have grown.

In 1898 the annual convention was held in Pueblo. The attendance was small as compared with the last convention held in Denver. In the Pueblo convention there was a lack of enthusiasm. The recent meeting was full of an intelligent and courageous enthusiasm. Every person present was filled to overflowing with courage and confidence as to our future in Colorado. The reports of the mission pastors were full of facts—such facts as furnish fuel for inspiration. Enticing opportunities for fruitful service were presented from every part of the state. In many places there are pressing needs as well as thrilling opportunities. Those who had prejudices when they left their eastern homes, lost them in coming across the plains. There is not a more open-minded, not a more independent, people on earth than are the men and women of the Centennial state. They are unusually intelligent. They see points when points are made in sermons. They desire the best in religion, in social life, in things intellectual, and in matters pertaining to government. Colorado is an ideal field for the Disciples of Christ.

It is a great thing to be in so near to the beginning in the building of a great empire. As I think of Colorado as it was, as it is, and as it is to be, I am thrilled with a joyous enthusiasm.

The program of our last convention was excellent, the best that has been in the last ten years. The addresses were of a high order. They were first-class without a single exception! Brethren from outside our state, representative of our great organized interests, spoke to us words of edification and enthusiasm. They came to us freighted with the best things, and full of the Spirit of Christ.

Ten years ago, in the Pueblo convention, the committee on future work proposed that, for the next year, we attempt to raise $600! The recent Denver convention said, in ringing tones: God helping us, we will raise this year for mission work in Colorado, $4,000!

The Pueblo convention put Leonard G. Thompson in the field as corresponding secretary and state evangelist. He has been in the field ever since. The beginning of his service was the beginning of our gratifying progress. To him more than to any other one person are we indebted for the advancement that the Disciples of Christ have made in Colorado during the last ten years.

Colorado's Debt to the Christian Woman's Board of Missions.

By Mrs. L. S. Brown

The first auxiliary in Colorado was organized in the Central Church of Denver at a meeting called by Mrs. Priscilla Craig, at the home of Mrs. Bessie Craig, in February, 1884.

A state organization was effected in 1887, with Mrs. Emma P. Craig as president. There were but three auxiliaries in the state at the time, Denver, Colorado Springs and Pueblo. In 1889, through the labors of W. K. Azbill, general agent of the national board, the number of auxiliaries had been increased to seven. During this year, at the solicitation of Mrs. I. E. Barnum, of Denver, the national board made their first appropriation to Colorado, in the sum of $500.

In 1891, by mutual agreement, Colorado became a special field of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, and from that time to the present, seventeen years, they have made an annual appropriation to our state, ranging from $1.000 to $4,000. In all we have received from this source, not as a loan to be returned with interest, but as a gift outright, the sum of $35.275, which has passed through the treasury of the Colorado State Board, in aid of weak churches or in organizing weak churches. A large majority of the churches in this state owe their existence to this fund.

In gratitude for this liberality of the national board the auxiliaries of Colorado have tried to contribute a fair share of their means to the treasury from which Colorado has drawn her support. The past year was the best in our history. We have been able to contribute $2,215 for all national objects during the year, while we have received an appropriation of $2,000 in aid of Colorado work. All honor to the noble women who compose the Christian Woman's Board of Missions.

The Field is Responsive.

By J. E Pickett

I am besought for a brief message for the readers of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST concerning our work in Colorado. It shall be this: A ministry of thirteen years in the state has demonstrated that this field is as fruitful and responsive to the gospel as other states. The remark is current that the West is a hard field. The remark is true, as it would be true of the East, the South or the Central states. That the West is more difficult and hopeless is not true. No state has churches more loyal to the Christ, or a people more willing to hear his message.

The most cheering feature of our recent state convention was the group of splendid young preachers present—preachers who are at this time leading the churches of the state. They are not only young and enthusiastic, but intelligent, consecrated, sane, free from fads and fancies, given to the preaching of the gospel of the Son of God. One thing remains between us and a mighty advance in the work throughout the state—that they stick. A shifting ministry is a blight to the work in any state and a bar to good progress anywhere. If the young men now filling our pulpits will stay without unnecessary changing, our strength five years from to-day, barring general disaster to the country, will be double what it is now.

Beginning at Jerusalem.

By A. E. Pierce

"And that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name unto all the nations, beginning from Jerusalem."—Luke 24:47.

If we would evangelize the world we must "begin at Jerusalem." Colorado is our Jerusalem. America is the American's Jerusalem.

The New Orleans convention was the first of our national conventions that I have attended. I was greatly impressed with the missionary spirit which prevailed. It was inspiring and encouraging. Too much can not be said or done in favor of foreign missions. I am in favor of world-wide evangelism. But it is a plain, mathematical fact that the stronger our cause is made at home the greater will be our ability to carry the word into heathen lands.

Every church established at once becomes a feeder for foreign as well as home missions. The more grain and cotton raised in America the more America has for export. The wider our work is extended at home the greater must be our ability to extend it abroad.

In Colorado there is a vast and rapidly growing field, even now ready for harvest and awaiting the coming of the reaper. If this field is well harvested it will furnish not only righteousness for "home consumption," but will help swell the supply for heathen lands.

I have seen the church in Colorado grow from "grass roots." Have seen the day—fifty years ago—when there was not a house of worship nearer than the Missouri river, 600 miles distant. The first preaching was in the open air, and within sound of the hammer, the sluice box and the gambler's "layout;" and all on the Lord's day.

Had no evangelist ever come to this Rocky Mountain region it might have so remained to this day. But he came, and there has never been a time from that day to this when there has not been an open field for his work. And there will continue to be for years to come, until our population, so rapidly increasing, reaches a point commensurate with its great extent of territory, and warranted by its unmeasurable and undeveloped resources.

Every dollar spent in Colorado for the extension of the gospel will continue to be in the future, as it has ever been in the past, seed sown upon good soil, bringing forth an hundred fold.

As a member and treasurer of our State Board of Evangelization for many years past, I desire to bear personal testimony to the great benefit that has come to our cause in this state through the generous aid of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, the Board of Church Extension and the American Christian Missionary Society. And I am certain that the opportunities for advancing our cause in this Rocky Mountain region are even greater to-day than ever before, because of our rapid growth in population and the development along all lines of commercialism and industry.

COLORADO'S SILVER JUBILEE CONVENTION

It was the twenty-sixth annual meeting, celebrating the twenty-fifth anniversary of organized work in the Centennial state. It was held October 27-30, with the Central Church, of Denver, where the state society was organized twenty-five years ago. By a happy coincidence, William Bayard Craig, who was pastor of the Central Church twenty-five years ago and president of the state society, occupied both positions again in the recent convention.

On every hand the verdict of those who attended is that it was by far the greatest convention in our history. One hundred were enrolled from points outside of Denver. If this number seems small to those who dwell in the more populous centers of the brotherhood, let it be remembered that Colorado is a state of magnificent distances, and is large enough to embrace the states of Ohio and Indiana. Some of our Colorado workers who attended the recent convention traveled as far as from St. Louis to Cincinnati and return to reach Denver and return to their homes.

Of the sessions of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, which occupied the afternoon and evening of Tuesday, the state secretary of that organization has written; but we wish to add our appreciation of the presence and addresses of Mrs. Ida W. Harrison, vice-president of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions.

The report of the State Board of Evangelization, given by the corresponding secretary at the first session of the society whose quarter-centennial was celebrated Wednesday morning, October 28, showed that 21 pastors and five evangelists had labored a part or all of the year in 21 fields. M. M. Nelson organized the church at Durango; Charles G. Stout those at Fruita and Montrose, also holding meetings at Rifle, Delta and Paonia; A. L. Ferguson organized the church at Limon, also held a meeting at Elbert; W. H. Kindred held meetings at Palisades and Golden; Victor L. Goodrich at Sterling and Grand Valley.

The following named men were aided in the mission fields named, viz: John C. Hay, Durango; M. M. Nelson, Monte Vista; S. J. Vance, E. M. Miller and A. N. Glover, Delta; J. K. Hester, Paonia; W. A. Webster, Rifle; Walter Carter, Florence; R. H. Newton, Ordway; S. J. Mathieson, H. E. Knott, and A. Carroll Shaw, Las Animas; Clark Bower, Colorado City; Jesse B. Haston, East Side Church, Denver; J. W. Maddux and W. F. McCormick, Golden; A. L. Ferguson, Elbert County Church; Zuinglius Moore, Fort Morgan; E. F. Harris and Elmer R. Child, Sterling and Atwood; R. H. Lampkin, Windsor; R. C. Leonard and P. W. Walthall, Wray.

Some of the chief things may be noted: The territory, of which Durango is the center, including portions of Colorado, New Mexico and Utah, is as large as Massachusetts, Connecticut and Rhode Island combined, or about one-third as large as Pennsylvania. Brother Hay, who understands Colorado conditions from pastorates at Colorado Springs and Pueblo, covering a period of about fourteen years, has explored a large territory surrounding Durango, which will become tributary to our work in that important city.

The new church at Fruita starts with 100 members. Jasper Bogue, one of Colorado's own sons, is the enterprising minister. Montrose starts with 36 members. It took a hard struggle to get a start there; but it is a very important center. It is one of the chief places which will be benefited by the great government irrigation project, by which 150,000 acres of land will be reclaimed.

Before Clark Bower had been with the Colorado City church a year a beautiful pressed brick house, costing $8,000, had been dedicated. This church is now spoken of as one of the leading forces of the community. J. K. Hester is leading the church at Paonia steadily forward toward the completion of their modern house of worship. It is built of native stone, and will cost about $15,000. It is nearing completion and will be dedicated during the winter. The East Side Church of Denver entered the basement section of its proposed splendid house last February. It is commodious and comfortable. Its cost was $3,500. Work will soon be taken up on the lecture room superstructure. Jesse B. Haston has led this church in planning a building that will be a credit to the eastern part of the city. M. M. Nelson is just beginning a building enterprise at Monte Vista, in the great San Luis valley, and the cost of their proposed structure will be about $10,000.

By request of the program committee, the address of the president, William Bayard Craig, consisted largely of personal reminiscences of twenty-five years in the Colorado work, as he was with it in the beginning, and has resided in the state the greater portion of the time since. Brother Craig emphasized some of the original sources of our present prosperity. His address was stenographically reported for future reference.

Representatives of various sections of the state delivered short addresses on the opportunities in their respective fields. Thus, John C. Hay spoke for the southwestern portion; J. K. Hester for the western slope; J. F. Findley and Charles L. Dean for the northern part, and Charles G. Stout told of his meeting just closed at Montrose and the organization of that congregation. All hearts were touched at the recital of the struggles that had been encountered in that work.

C. C. Dobbs, president of the Northern District, and Charles William Dean, president of the Southern District, discussed the relations of state and district work. B. B. Tyler delivered an address on "Our Plea and Missions," pointing out the breadth of the position we occupy, and its vital relation to evangelization.

One of the most interesting and profitable portions of the entire convention was that in which messages from the mission fields were given by the mission pastors. These stirred all hearts, and gave us a new conception of the wonderful possibilities before us in this state. In addition to the mission pastors named above, J. L. Ellis, whose field of labor includes a portion of Northern Colorado and Southern Wyoming, where he works under the direction of the American Christian Missionary Society, gave a thrilling report of that field, and of Routt county as a field for promising missionary effort.

All of Wednesday afternoon and evening was given to the interests of the Bible school, and the efficient state superintendent, E. M. Cosner, of Trinidad, used every moment with good things. The presence and addresses of Marion Stevenson were an inspiration to Bible school workers. There was also a strong program by Colorado workers. That session and the report of the superintendent, are to be reported by another pen.

It was a great disappointment that H. P. Williams could not be present to speak for the Foreign Christian Missionary Society. His time in part was used by J. H. Mohorter, who gave a heart-searching message on the work of Christian benevolence. He was followed by G. W. Muckley, who kindled anew our devotion to Church Extension, which has done so much for Colorado and is still doing so.

At the close of this address President Craig, in his enthusiastic manner, spoke of the great need of a house of worship at Durango, and that we must buy a building lot quickly if our work shall be made permanent. He had visited the field during the year. He proposed that we raise a special fund immediately. G. W. Muckley made the first pledge during his address and when Brother Craig took the matter up it was but a few moments until almost $600 was pledged. It was a stirring period in the sessions of the convention.

The final session Friday morning was one of the best. After an excellent business session, in which were given reports of committees, "Echoes from the National Convention," were given by our delegates, A. E. Pierce, M. P. Givens and Mrs. L. S. Brown. All were pointed and interesting, but we are sure all will agree that the report by Brother Pierce was one of the happiest ever heard. G. W. Muckley says it was the most unique report of his experience. No one who heard it can fail to understand why Brother Pierce grows old gracefully, for one who can bring as much sunshine and laughter into a few moments' report as he did on this occasion, must keep young in spirit.

The climax of the convention came when the last item on the Friday morning program was called, and the president of the Colorado Christian Home, Mrs. Katherine Feldhauser, of Denver, with Mrs. L. M. Julian, the matron of the Home, accompanied eight of the children from the Home to the platform, where they sat while J. H. Mohorter delivered another of his tender appeals in behalf of the orphan. It was an hour that will not be forgotten.

B. B. Tyler is the president of the next convention; A. L. Ward, pastor of the Boulder Church, which will entertain the convention in the Centennial year, is the vice-president; C. M. Morris, of Denver, is recording secretary; Leonard G. Thompson, corresponding secretary; A. E. Pierce, treasurer. The other members of the state board are: William Bayard Craig, chairman of the board; David C. Peters, Trinidad; Charles William Dean, Pueblo; Clark Bower, Colorado City, and

B. P. Smith, of Delta. E. M. Cosner was re-elected superintendent of Bible school work and Charles L. Mason, of Denver, was elected superintendent of Christian Endeavor. Brother Mason delivered an able address on "Christian Endeavor Lever" during the Christian Endeavor session.

The committee on plan of work recommended that a state evangelist be kept in the field, and two if possible; that every church, Bible school and society of Christian Endeavor be urged to make a liberal offering to state work; that special attention be given to the development of the work in the Durango district and the Routt county country; that each church be urged to give liberal support to our state paper, the Colorado Christian Herald; that each preacher in the state hold one meeting during the year in some church other than the one where he is minister; that the Central and Western Districts be organized and conventions held therein; that every Bible school organize training and adult classes, and that Colorado send a large delegation to Pittsburg.

The centennial committee recommended $4,000 as the financial motto, and that we strive to add not less than 1,000 souls to the membership of our churches this year; that the hour from 8 to 9 a. m. every Lord's day be an hour of prayer for state work; that the societies of Christian Endeavor, under the direction of the minister and church board, create a named loan fund for the Board of Church Extension; also that an earnest effort be made to secure a better fulfillment of the Christian Endeavor pledge; that "ministers assist and encourage in every way possible the work of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions in their churches."

The management of the Colorado Christian Home was heartily commended, and it was recommended that the Home be supported by generous and systematic offerings. This institution has just purchased one of the best sites in the city on which, shortly, the erection of the first of the permanent buildings will be begun. While credit is due to each member of the advisory committee, special credit belongs to J. E. Pickett, chairman, and Dallas J. Osborne, treasurer, of the committee, for their abundant labors in behalf of this worthy institution.

The convention adopted the report of the committee on summer assembly which recorded its "ever enlarging conviction of the value and importance of this institution to our Colorado work," and expressed the conviction "that with wise and enterprising management the foundations are here laid on which will one day rest a great national assembly of our people." Leonard G. Thompson.

The C. W. B. M. Convention and Year's Work.

The year's work accomplished by the auxiliaries to the Christian Woman's Board of Missions in Colorado, as reported in the recent state convention, showed an appreciable gain in nearly every department over any previous year. The aim for the year in special offerings was $700, $300 of which was to be used for Dr. Martha Smith's hospital work, and the remainder for evangelistic work in Colorado. This object was more than realized. The thirty auxiliaries raised in total $2,215.06. The membership numbers 921, Tidings subscriptions, 629. Nine life memberships were taken out by the auxiliaries during the year. All but two auxiliaries observed C. W. B. M. day. Thirteen auxiliaries were placed on the roll of honor for meeting the following conditions: Observing C. W. B. M. day, observing the week of prayer and self-denial, sending in four quarterly reports to the state secretary, paying not less than 15 cents per member per month for state and national dues, and by increasing the membership of the auxiliary. Colorado has one life line auxiliary—Canon City.

The recommendations of the plan of work committee which were adopted by the convention ask that the points for the roll of honor be amended by requiring the reports to be sent to the secretary by the end of each quarter; that our auxiliaries be encouraged to become Living Links, Life Lines and Farther Lights: that each auxiliary be urged to introduce a mission study into its regular program; that we double our Centennial apportionment, making our offering $600 for the four years; that we have an organizer in the field for four months of the year; that we take as our watchword 1,200 members, 1,200 Tidings, $3,000.

The united mission study course was presented by Mrs. Lena Treloar, who emphasized its value. Mrs. Ida W. Harrison, of Lexington, Ky., national vice-president, delighted the convention with two addresses upon the Centennial aims before the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, and the larger outlook of our Christian womanhood.

The state constitution as recommended by the national board was adopted by the convention and the following officers elected: President, Mrs. L. S. Brown; vice-president, Mrs. Olive E. Sanford; recording secretary, Miss Dorah Logan; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Mary Wadsworth Jones; treasurer, Mrs. Mary L. Parks; superintendent junior work, Miss Lena G. Lambdin.

Mrs. Sudie E. Flint was appointed Centennial secretary and Mrs. Arthur Pond superintendent of the home department.

"Thanksgiving and the voice of melody, joy and gladness shall be found in Zion. The Lord will comfort her waste places; and he will make her wilderness like Eden, and her waste places like the garden of the Lord."—Isa. 51:3.

November for State Missions.

The month of basket and barrel and bin; of cellar and granary and crib; the month of Thanksgiving and harvest home. Well may it be devoted to missions within our own state.

Now is the time when Deacon Grace has a barrel of apples and two of potatoes set into Widow Sparse's cellar—as if my mistake. And Elder Blessing's wagon, coming along a little later, suddenly stops and unloads its ton of coal—just to keep the apples and potatoes from getting lonesome.

With the same compassion we are moved for those near by who lack the gospel. It is the time of family reunions; the relighted fireside; the neighborly evening call. But what about the neighborhoods without a church and the houses that are no homes because they lack the Christ? This is the problem of state missions.

Counting up our blessings this Centennial year we can not make a practical Thanksgiving without sharing in an epoch-marking offering for state missions.

W. R. Warren,
Centennial Secretary.

The Christian Conquest of America.

as a type for the whole world. Is it too much to say with Emerson, "Our whole history seems like a last effort of divine providence in behalf of the human race?" Shall we fail? The fate of the nations hangs, brethren, on our answer.

Brethren of the international Christian missionary convention of the Churches of Christ, in this solemn presence and before God, for these reasons—loyalty to the fathers of our country, loyalty to "Our Plea," loyalty to the cause of world-wide evangelization—I have declared the Christian conquest of America to be the paramount duty of the hour.

And I utter a final note of encouragement. I say again, it can be done. And I say it is being done. One June morning a father took his little boy and climbed a high hill to see the sun rise. They saw the blackness changing into gray, the gray into gold, the gold into glory. The lad was enraptured with the ravishing vision. When the great orb of day stood clear above the horizon and the glory and the wonder of the sunrise were over, the boy said, pathetically, and with a manifest feeling of irreparable loss: "Well, that's the end of the sunrise." "But," said the father, "it is only the beginning of day."

Brethren, in the enterprise of the Christian conquest of America the sunrise is over, the sky is full of light, the day is growing.

Prof. Langley, of the Smithsonian Institute, discovered a short time ago by means of a very interesting experiment, that the wind was not a solid movement of air, but a movement in eddies, in currents, and counter currents, the most of the movement being forward. So, while the forces engaged in the Christianization of America have met with reverses, while the cause of the redemption of the homeland has in places come to a halt and stood still, praise God, the most of the movement has been forward.

And I charge you, brethren, forgetting those things that are behind to press forward toward the things that are before—forward—forward, until our land becomes Immanuel's land, and the kingdoms of the world become the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ.

My urgent exhortation finds more fitting expression than I can give it in some lines quoted by a distinguished president of this convention a few years ago in his message to his people. They are from Joaquin Miller's great poem entitled, "Columbus."

"Behind him lay the gray Azores;
Behind the Gates of Hercules.
Before him not a ghost of shores;
Before him only shoreless seas.
The good mate said, 'Now is the time to pray,
For lo! the very stars are gone.
Speak, good Admiral, what shall I say?'
And he said, 'Why, say, "Sail on, sail on."'

"All that night he paced the deck
And peered into the darkness—O that night
Of all dark nights! And then a speck,
A light, a light, a light. It grew
A starlit flag unfurled. It grew
To be the burst of time's new dawn.
He gained a world, and gave that world
Its grandest lesson: On! sail on and on!"

Readers should always state where the paper has been going as well as where they wish it to be addressed, then there will be the least possible delay in having the change made.

—We give much space this week to the work in Colorado, where the silver jubilee convention has just been held. Our brethren there have labored faithfully, and there is a field now ripe for the plea of the Disciples of Christ. What is needed is more men who will "stay by the stuff" and more money to develop opportunities. Leonard G. Thompson has been a most efficient worker in the general field.

—In our report of the Baptist congress we have given largest space to the sessions on Christian union, as this was the particular feature that has differentiated this congress from preceding ones.

—Disciples of Christ may, for their own guidance, get some hints from the conduct of the Baptist congress. We have never seen a more orderly congress. No one was permitted to speak twice on the same topic, and those desiring to speak were required to send their card to the platform. The speakers and writers were held strictly to the time allotted them.

—It is probable that we will hold our own congress next spring and participate in a union congress the following year. Committees were appointed to determine this.

—The University of Chicago was host to the congress, entertaining at luncheon all the congress members. Dr. Shailer Mathews presided, and after the repast every man present rose in turn, making known his name, religious amliation and home. This was a good plan to further acquaintance between the members of the three participating bodies.

—A. L. Drummond, of Norton, Kan., holds a meeting at Smith Center, Kan., this week.

—R. V. Black has closed his work at Mankato, and entered upon his new field at Duluth, Minn.

—R. V. Hope, recently of Eutaw, Ala., has entered upon his pastorate with the congregation at Columbus, Miss.

—J. M. McConnell, of Eugene, Ore., is now able to re-enter the evangelistic work, and is open to calls from any church.

—J. M. Lowe is in a second meeting at Agra, Kan., where B. Gilpin is in his third year's pastorate. The work at Goodland grows.

—A minister is needed at Tamaroa, Ill., where there is a good church and a splendid building. George W. Wise, of Du Quoin, has just held a meeting there.

—J. W. Holsapple, of Hillsboro, Tex., has been appointed by the Pastors' Association of that city to preach the sermon for the union Thanksgiving service, which is to be held in the First Baptist Church.

—L. L. Carpenter, of Wabash, Ind., will dedicate at Atlanta, Mo., Nov. 22, and a cordial invitation is extended to surrounding congregations to be present.

—W. L. Burner, with his church at Enon, Va., has just been in a series of union services with the Baptist minister and his congregation. It was a delightful fellowship.

—A. J. Edmondson has removed from Davis, Okla., to take the work at Queen City, Mo., where the outlook is good, with one accession on his first Lord's day there.

—N. E. Corey, one of our old, but still vigorous preachers, leaves Colchester, Ill., on the completion of the new church there, to take the work at Keokuk, Ia.

—Mrs. E. O. Beaton informs us that the Christian Church at Warsaw, Ind., with a membership of 250, has twenty-two tithers. This should be added to the list we published recently.

—Lewis Hotaling has been unanimously re-employed for an indefinite length of time at Hoopeston, Ill. So far this year there have been 339 additions, and the membership now numbers 839.

—Geo. A. Maldoon is to hold a meeting at Big Run, Pa., with home forces next February, and desires to secure a good singer. The interest there increases. The training class numbers 74, and is working to make it a century class.

—Richard Dobson, who came from England about a year ago, and has been preaching at Pleasant Grove, Minn., is now to take up the work of establishing a church at St. Cloud under the direction of the Minnesota Christian Missionary Society.

—Edward Owers, who has been pastor of the church at Farmington, Mo., for the past three and a half years, has resigned to take charge of the work at Anson, Tex. The Farmington church is in a good condition and needs a minister to take up the work at once.

—J. Q. Biggs is to remain at Golden City, Mo., where a call for a third year has just been extended him. The record of Bible school attendance was broken last Lord's day, and J. H. Hardin delivered the graduating address to the teacher training class Nov. 6.

—The new Christian Church at Aurora, Mo., is almost complete. It will be a fine structure, costing nearly $20,000. George E. Prewitt is the minister, and the dedication is to be conducted by H. O. Breeden, on the last Lord's day in November. E. I. Bagby writes us that it is hoped to go right on with a revival meeting.

—It is gratifying to know that the receipts of the Church Extension Board for October show a gain of nearly $3,000, and sixty-six contributing churches. In this Centennial year there should be a great increase of gifts for this permanent cause. Remittances should be sent to G. W. Muckley, Corresponding Sec., 500 Waterworks Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

—We very much regret to learn of the death of W. O. Rice, who has been a member of the Central Church, Des Moines, Ia., since 1884. He had been a reader of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for a great many years, and during the last days of his sickness, we are told, took great pleasure in having someone read to him from its pages. We hope to publish further particulars at the first opportunity.

—Sixty men, representing over nineteen churches, were present at the annual meeting of elders and deacons of Monroe Co., held at Paris, Mo. "Missions" was the topic that had attention, and many good plans were discussed. H. W. Hunter, County Evangelist, writes that the aim is to make every church in the county keenly alive on this theme, and secure unanimity in every offering.

—J. A. Overstreet has just closed his work at Tonkawa, Okla., where he has been for the past three years. The appreciation of the congregation for him is shown in the invasion of his home a few nights ago by some hundred of the members who brought their tokens of love with them. The congregation has been in a meeting with Clay T. Runyon, who is to continue with the church until Dec. 15.

—Dr. W. E. Garrison, president of the New Mexico College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts, spent a couple of days visiting his parents and friends in St. Louis while on his way to Washington, D. C., to attend a meeting of the presidents of agricultural colleges in the United States. He occupied the pulpit of Dr. J. M. Philputt on Lord's day morning. He will return to St. Louis in a week on his way back to the university, from which he will have been absent two weeks. His friends will be glad to know that he is looking well and seems in vigorous health.

—H. W. Hunter, State Superintendent of Christian Endeavor for Missouri, has sent out a Thanksgiving letter in which he states that the work so far cost nearly $150, while the societies have sent in $13.50. We do not see how Brother Hunter can feel very thankful nor how he can do very much to have 300 mission study classes in the state by next June if our young people do not support the work with more promptness and determination. Let the societies take this matter up at once and send money order to Brother Hunter at Paris, Mo.; then all of us will be thankful, for some of the sinews of war will be provided that are absolutely necessary to carry on aggressive work.

The plan insures an income to this faithful preacher in his declining years. This is a hint to other preachers.

About 300 people have tried the plan with perfect satisfaction in every case.

Annuity gifts are especially popular with the devoted women of our churches.

What would you think of making a Centennial Gift for Foreign Missions on our Annuity Plan?

THE UNITED CONGRESS AT CHICAGO

The formal opening of the first congress held between Baptists, Free Baptists and Disciples of Christ occurred on Tuesday evening after the first session of the afternoon. At this evening session Dr. Harry Pratt Judson, president of the University of Chicago gave the address of welcome on behalf of the municipality, and Bishop Fallows, representing the Methodist church, on behalf of the Christian community. The response was by Dr. Jackson, pastor of the Hyde Park Baptist Church.

The afternoon session was devoted to the subject, "Does the New Testament Contemplate the Church as an Institution?" The first writer, Prof. J. H. Logan (Baptist), of Hamilton, N. Y., said Ecclesia in the classics and the Septuagint referred to the public assembly or gathering. So far as Jesus was concerned, he neither founded the church nor intended to. He came to establish the Kingdom of God. He did not give a definite idea of what he meant by this Kingdom. He rather likened it to several things. He announced certain laws of the kingdom, but these were the laws of cause and effect, and they were two—love and service.

Jesus did not found an institution, but a brotherhood that sought to realize those things which he taught them to pray for in the Lord's prayer. But while he did not found an institution, his teachings made such inevitable; but he left its character and the details of its organization to the free spirit of those imbued with his teachings. They needed no other authority for the establishment of such an institution, save the mind of Jesus in them and the evident need and wisdom of the church.

A. W. Fortune (Disciple), of Cincinnati, who followed Prof. Logan, followed his same general idea. He treated the subject of the church in the teachings of Jesus, the church in the Acts and the church in the Epistles. In the teachings of Jesus the word occurs twice: the first time it refers to something in the future, and the second to certain local conditions and how to handle them. Jesus did not found the church, but left that to the life of the disciples to formulate. In the Acts and Epistles the church is a local communion, but these local communions are thought of as comprising the church universal. Paul did more than any other man to give form to the church, but with him it was shaped in an easy fashion, after the pattern of things in the Jewish synagogues.

Rev. W. B. Wallace (Baptist), of Cleveland, said the marks of the institution were three, viz.: organization, localization and specialization, and that these were all present in the New Testament societies.

Prof. Shirley Case (Free Baptist), of the University of Chicago, said that the idea of an institution was implicit in the New Testament, but not worked out.

The evening session was devoted to the subject, "The Legitimate Limits of Free Speech in a Republic." The dominant note of all the addresses was that free speech should be limited not by legislation, so much as by public sentiment.

"The Doctrine of Atonement in Terms of Modern Thought" was the theme for consideration on Wednesday afternoon. The general trend of the papers was in support of the moral adjustment theory. Statement was made of the views entertained during the early centuries, the modification by Anselm, the governmental theory and others of more modern conception. Burris Jenkins, a Disciple of Christ, said one danger to-day is that we shall be left without any view other than that Christ's life is like that of any other great life. Dr. Frederick Lent (Baptist), of New Haven, Conn., said it is the thought of God as Father that shapes the modern view of the atonement. Even if there had been no sin, only the cross could fully reveal God, he said. Prof. Waterman, of the Free Baptists asked, What does the church gain by insisting on any further statement than that Jesus brings an at-one-ment between man and God? Prof. Hoben, of Chicago, a Baptist, spoke of the relationship of historical criticism, psychology and sociology to the subject. Some interest was added to the discussion by the presence of Prof. Foster and former Prof. Johnson, of Chicago University. Prof. Foster said that not until we get down close to humanity will we understand the atonement. God suffers in the atonement, was a thought he emphasized. Prof. Johnson said it takes a vast amount of learning to put the fact of the atonement out of the New Testament. Other speakers were W. L. Hayden and Samuel Batten.

So far as the other two bodies—Free Baptists and Disciples—uniting in this Baptist congress was concerned, the theme of chief interest was on the Wednesday evening program. The first speaker, after prayer by Parker Stockdale, to answer the question "What Definite Steps Should be Immediately Taken in the Organic Union of Baptists, Free Baptists and Disciples of Christ?" was I. J. Spencer, representing the last named body. His paper was received well by the Baptists, while, of course, the Disciples greatly enjoyed some of his "hits." The spirit of the paper was admirable; indeed, this was the character of the whole program. Mr. Spencer's paper and that of Dr. Crandall, who followed him, will be published in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Mr. Spencer is an advocate of organic cooperation, though he believes the forcing process should be applied inwardly rather than outwardly. The subject must be approached, he said, in the spirit of prayer. The next step he suggested was to create a profound feeling of the sin of division. Another step is the religious education of the masses. It took a hundred years to get and keep us apart, and it will take at least ten to get us together again. He spoke of the misconceptions about the beliefs of the Disciples, and quoted Dr. Dodd's illustration about the strangers in the coach who discovered they were brothers. Other steps to union must be lowliness, love of God, superlative loyalty to Christ,—"You cannot serve God and denominations," he said, and "if any man's principles get in the way of Christian union, the sooner he adopts a new set of principles the better"—and Christian liberty. In conclusion Mr. Spencer made a number of recommendations.

Rev. Carter E. Cate, who was to have represented the Free Baptists, was not able to be present. The Rev. L. A. Crandall, D. D., represented the Baptists. He was formerly pastor of the Baptist part of the congregation entertaining the Congress and had seen the walls of the building rise brick by brick. He expressed his great pleasure at the recent union of Baptists and Disciples, and said if a sore throat or a swollen bank account ever led him to give up his present pastorate, and he had to move to Chicago, he would take delight in putting his letter in that church. Coming directly to his subject, he said desirability was one thing, possibility of union another. A cold, passionless consideration of facts there must be, and he contrasted a vital and a mechanical union. Growth can not be found within, and the majority must be convinced that we are substantially one. A consolidation of Free Baptists and Baptist missionary operations is now in view. At but two points have denominations ever disagreed, and the original cause of division exists only as a memory. Time has done the work also in the matter of communion. Turning to Baptists and Disciples, Dr. Crandall said we find serious difficulty in trying to determine the belief of each. Both claim to follow the Bible and we have to trust to individual expressions and seek the most representative literature. He spoke at some length of the Minnesota convention and its resolutions which looked to organic union between Baptists and Free Baptists as a condition of the near future, and of the steps taken toward union by Baptists and Disciples. The program recently drawn up and adopted by their conventions in Minnesota he thought was a very practical one. The two bodies are so much alike, he said, that each is wondering at the obtuseness or obstinacy of the other. We must be kinder in our judgments, he urged, for we are brethren, not ecclesiastical Irishmen armed with shillalahs.

Names had been sent the chairman of brethren who would take part in the discussion. The first speaker was Joseph William Mott, a Free Baptist leader, who suggested that the "next steps" should be more of the same kind—another congress, for instance, like this, personal acquaintance being essential. He believed in the name Baptist congress now, but as to the ultimate future he was indifferent. As a result of a conference representing three great Baptist societies and the general conference of Free Baptists, a basis of union in missionary work had been proposed, and the vote is now in progress. The next step would be, he said, to "take in the Disciples of Christ if they do not take us in." Dr. Willett set forth the process of evolution that resulted in the Memorial Church of Christ, the beginning being a union service. The chief matters for consideration had been one point of administration, i. e., the missionary offerings, and three points of doctrine: (1) name, (2) admission of members, (3) communion service. Dr. A. T. Lawson said he was a Baptist, a member of the "Memorial Church of Christ" in New York, which observed the communion service every Lord's day. He made an eloquent speech. If filled with the spirit of God, he said, we would boldly face the difficulties and pass on. Cantankerous men are on both sides. What we need, he said, is a clear vision that Christ is leading. It is a sad shame that, in the presence of a heathen world, we should not be one, whatever the name. Henry M. Ford, corresponding secretary of the general conference of Free Baptists, supposed that they were ahead in union sentiment, but he now thought it possible that the Baptists and Disciples were a little ahead. J. H. Garrison admitted Baptist parentage, but said that, like Paul, when he was a child he spake as a child. He suggested that we ought to come down this side of the war period when we quoted. What won him to the Disciples was their plea for union. Two forces, he said, are making for unity: (1) internal—we are growing more alike; (2) external—the needs of the world. Rev. J. Stanley Durkee, D. D., a Free Baptist, said that Massachusetts is leading Minnesota, for there union is already assured between Baptists and Free Baptists. Behold, now, he said, is the day of consolidation.

"Is Psycho Therapeutics a Function of the Church?" The discussion on this subject on Thursday afternoon made the breeziest session of the Congress. Three of the programmed speakers were, in general terms, in the affirmative, while the last one poured scorn and ridicule at the suggestion. Dr. Robert MacDonald, of Brooklyn (Baptist), whose investigations are well known, answered the question by saying the church thinks so. He spoke on the way it increases the efficiency of the church and ministers, but said it must be incidental lest religion degenerate into a health cult. Dr. Durkee (Free Baptist), of Boston, dwelt on the importance attached in the New Testament to the healing ministry, which went side by side with that of preaching. The real significance of the question, he said, was whether the church shall establish clinics. He recommended the teaching of the subject in colleges and grouping of churches for treatment of functional disorders. A. B. Philputt and Rev. R. P. Johnston (Baptist) were the other programmed speakers. We hope to give more space to Brother Philputt's views at another time. Dr. Johnston poured hot shot at the whole idea. Would not more sick men be made? Look at the danger of quacks and fakirs. These, and many other objections, he raised. The discussion was carried further by a number of speakers.

A most helpful and spiritual session was the last, when Christ's prayer for unity was under consideration. Dr. A. W. Jefferson (Free Baptist) asked whether it is not high time to take the Master's way, close ranks and win the kingdom. Vernon Stauffer, in a fine address, spoke of the humanistic concern in Christ's prayer, the nature of the unity and the office of prayer. Dr. Sanders' interesting address we hope to print.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS.

Nebraska.

Secretary Rose, of District No. 5, held a short meeting at Burchard, and revived that work somewhat. There were ten added, five being reclaimed. We hope to make this a supply point.——J. R. Radcliff, pastor at Maywood, recently held a meeting and organized a little band of twenty one at Lamar. He also raised $800 for a new house of worship. Lamar is near the Colorado line. Seventeen have been added to the church at Maywood since he went there and the house painted.——South Omaha, F. T. Ray, pastor, has started work on their new house. It will cost $6,780 in addition to the stone, which they already have on hand. They now meet in the Y. M. C. A.——One added at Peru, L. A. Hussong, minister.——Samuel Gregg is in a meeting at Indianola, L. B. Cox, pastor. Prof. Calvin and wife, formerly of Beatrice, are leading the music. We are glad to note this, as it assures the best possible meeting. A good evangelist and good song leaders.——North Bend, J. E. Chase, pastor, has realized one of its Centennial aims already in the extinguishment of its parsonage debt, which at the same time releases the church from all debts. The amount was $375. Brother Chase will hold a meeting with home forces, beginning the last week in November.——H. M. Mitchell is in a meeting at Bloomington. His next will be at Ash Grove, some miles in the country north of Bloomington. He is the living link in state missions for District No. 8. This district has suffered severely from drouth conditions, and it is a heroic struggle for them to undertake this work.——Our Bible school evangelist was prevented from going to Sterling by weather conditions.——The state secretary spent October 25 at Holdrege, in consultation with the brethren there.——As I write we are at the beginning of the offering for state missions. The treasury is depleted and we are behind with our workers. It is imperative that we have prompt response. It is not always possible to look after it on the first Lord's day, but it should have the right of way very soon thereafter. Nor should we permit other things to precede it so as to make a generous offering impossible. No matter what other interests may press, this is so vital that churches will be justified in declining to let them in until after the offering has been taken. Nor will this be in any way showing discourtesy to the other interests. This is the time when all the states are asking for money to carry on their work. It has been agreed that this shall be sacred to this work, and because it is deeply important to every other work that our churches should be built up and increased, so it is really the right thing to say that all other matters shall be subordinated at this season. We have now several unanswered appeals for assistance that are as worthy as any we have answered. Some are very pressing. But it is plain that the board can not enlarge unless there is evidence of enlarged giving. This can only come from actual results from the offerings. It is to be rejoiced over that only one church has thus far asked to have its apportionment reduced. On the other hand, we have not received notice from a single church that it means to take the offering on November 1, and we are in receipt of several notices that it will be postponed. Apparently this is "Blue Monday" in Nebraska missions. Is there a brighter day coming?

Once more and finally, there are unpaid pledges at the state convention on ground improvements, amounting to $22. This is nearly one-fourth of the pledges made. It will save the office some unnecessary trouble if these are forwarded without further notice. The items are small.

Bethany, Neb. W. A. Baldwin.

Northeast Georgia.

The thirty-first annual session of the Northeast District convention met with the church at Watkinsville. This was our greatest district meeting. There were 148 delegates enrolled, including fifteen preachers. There was about $900 raised for all purposes. This included over $500 for district missions, $200 for benevolences, $135 for education, and smaller amounts for other purposes. The state work was represented by B. P. Smith; benevolences by William Shaw; C. W. B. M. by Mrs. H. King Pendleton and the Woman's Georgia Missionary Society by Mrs. B. O. Miller.

The very best spirit prevailed through all the sessions and the enthusiasm ran high. We have greatly enlarged our plans for 1909. The influence of the New Orleans convention has already made a wonderful impression on our cause in Georgia. Our state convention meets with the church at Fitzgerald, November 9-12. We look forward to a great meeting.

Winder, Ga. John H. Wood.

Dedication in New England.

The pretty new house of worship which is now the home of the West Side Church of Christ, Bridgeport, Conn., was dedicated, October 18, by President T. E. Cramblet. Besides preaching two splendid sermons, he made an earnest and dignified appeal for money. The response was hearty and liberal. More than twelve hundred dollars were raised in cash and pledges, more than twice as much as the members expected to secure. With a membership of only twenty-eight this little band has been struggling against great odds for twelve years. They have met in halls and warehouses and have been driven from pillar to post, all of the time losing in numbers and influence. Their experience has been enough to discourage the stoutest-hearted, but somehow they seem to possess the old Puritan spirit of perseverance and a faith in God which could not be killed.

In 1905 M. L. Streator came to minister to this people. Through his energy and wisdom a splendid location was selected in a growing section of the city and a lot was purchased by the aid of the Board of Church Extension. In July, 1907, the writer came from the College of the Bible to try his pluck in conservative New England. The outlook was anything but rosy-hued. But friends were raised up and the hope of having a permanent church home was an inspiration for work. Danbury, where E. Jay Teagarden ministers for the oldest Church of Christ in New England, stood ready to put one thousand dollars into the building. Others signified their intention to help, many sent contributions from distant states, and the result is a beautiful house of worship dedicated to the cause of simple New Testament Christianity.

The day of dedication was a high day for us. A delegation of forty, including Brother Teagarden, came from Danbury, several disciples from Yale were present, and J. L. Darsie brought greetings from the 56th Street Church of New York. One of the most pleasant features of the day was the afternoon session at which Fanny Crosby, the famous hymn writer, was present and took part on the program. Although she has passed her eighty-eighth year, she is still vigorous in body and mind and says that she expects to live to be one hundred and three. She remained to the communion service and expressed herself as being highly pleased and edified. On Tuesday evening there was a fellowship service in which representative pastors of the city gave greetings and wished the work Godspeed. G. A. Reinl, of Springfield, preached Wednesday evening, and Brother Teagarden on Thursday evening. At the latter service three took membership. On Friday evening we began a series of meetings, conducted by a band of disciples from Yale Divinity School. We have a number of strong men in Yale this year, and they have entered upon this work with enthusiasm. Such men as Thos. P. Ullom, Chas. E. Underwood, M. M. Amunson, T. E. Lumley, E. N. Duty, W. R. Howell and others will assist. Already the movement has attracted attention at Yale. Dean Curtis is in hearty sympathy with it and is watching the outcome with interest. Some who wonder, "can any good thing come out of Yale," would be surprised to hear these men sing and preach "the old Jerusalem Gospel" in its simplicity and power. The movement is an experiment for us, and while we can not look for any large ingathering, we do believe that it will be a time of sowing and also a most effective way to place ourselves in a favorable light before this city, where we are practically an unknown people.

Puyallup's Revival.

One of the most successful meetings ever held in Puyallup, Wash., and perhaps on the West coast, ran five weeks—six Sundays—and resulted in 200 being added—138 baptisms, 23 by statement and 36 from other bodies. The evangelists who led in this meeting were D. E. Olson, C. C. Curtis and Mrs. Nellie Callison, all of Eugene, Ore. Brother Olson is a power for good. Large congregations listened with rapt attention throughout the entire five weeks. The house being too small for the crowds, a large tent was secured and added as an annex to the building, making room for about 1,200 people. We believe Brother Olson is an all around consecrated Christian man and a great personal worker. The gospel was not only given in word from the pulpit, but in song by Sister Callison's sweet and inspiring solos. Brother Curtis is a splendid song leader and musical director. He led a chorus of eighty voices, including the children's chorus, and an orchestra of ten pieces. He is also a successful minister of the gospel. These brethren place great emphasis on Bible school work. There was an increase of from 135 to 256 in the Bible school while they were here. All departments of the work have taken on great activity. Most of the young people who came into the church have also enlisted in the Endeavor work. One meeting of the Endeavorers which I must mention is called "Telegram Service." Eighty young people took hold, most of whom had just become Christians, and fifty offered prayers. A young ladies' missionary circle was organized with 33 members. Twenty-seven of our young people volunteered to consecrate their lives to the ministry—17 ladies and 10 men. Some have already gone to Eugene Divinity School to prepare for the work. Brother Olson established a Swedish mission. A number of Scandinavians have taken the stand for primitive Christianity. This will be led by Brother Holsten, a Swedish minister who lives here. There is a bright future for the Church of Christ in Puyallup. There are now almost four hundred members and, with J. T. Eshelmann as our minister and leader, we look for greater work than ever before. Plans are already on foot to enlarge the church building. At a reception given the new members, Brother Olson got pledges amounting to $1,000 toward the building. All expenses for the meeting were met with free-will offerings. Everybody is happy.

Ohio.

The defeat of Governor Harris was a sore disappointment to the moral forces of Ohio. He made his fight on the temperance issue and confined it to the country districts. The Personal Liberty League championed the cause of Mr. Harmon and made their campaign in the cities. Hamilton county alone gave Mr. Harmon enough majority to elect him. It is hardly possible that our county option bill will be repealed, though an effort will be made to do it. This will but arouse the temperance forces to greater activity.——The Central Church at Warren observed its 105th anniversary Sunday, November 8. The Second church and the Central joined in the service. Professor Wakefield was the only imported speaker. Local Baptist and Presbyterian ministers made addresses. ——Gary L. Cook began a meeting at Greenville, November 16. Brother Cook held a meeting at this place last year. They must like him down at Greenville. In this they are to be commended.——Gipsy Smith is leading the churches in Cleveland in a two-weeks' meeting. Gray's Armory is being used for night meetings and the old stone church for the noonday. Much interest is being aroused. ——O. P. McMahon, of the Wilson Avenue Church, Columbus, is assisting the church at Croton in a revival. J. E. Stone, of Columbus, preaches regularly for the Croton saints.——C. R. Oakley began a meeting at North Baltimore November. He has just closed a successful pastorate at Wauseon.——W. P. Murray has lessened the number of our bachelor preachers by taking unto himself a wife. October 31 was the eventful day and Miss Belle Anthony, of Southington, the happy bride. The new benedict is now preacher at Vermillion.——D. H. Harris has recently come from Harrisburg, Pa., to Leipsic. He is open for an evangelistic meeting.——L. L. Carpenter dedicated a new meeting house at Jackson Center November 8. This is a new church organized only two years ago by Clarence Mitchell. It is the only congregation we have in Shelby County.——C. G. Huffer has located with the church at Deerfield.——M. G. Buckner has resigned at Mansfield and will go to Owensboro, Ky. He has not been in Ohio long enough for us to get well acquainted with him. The longing "for the ol' Kentucky home" was quite strong, no doubt.——President Bates rededicated the remodeled church house at Sparta, November 1. He also preached at Canton, Sunday night, November 8, at the overflow meeting. Of course, you read the telegrams of Welshimer and Kendall's great meeting, so we will not tell of it. ——Mitchell and Bilby are with A. F. Stahl and the Wabash Avenue people of Akron. There is promise of a fine meeting.

The Situation at the Southern Christian Institute.

From recent letters we gain a better idea of conditions at the Southern Christian Institute after the fire which destroyed the girls' dormitory. The destruction of the contents of the building was even more complete than at first supposed. It took a brave fight to save the other buildings. The fire spread in the dry grass so rapidly that it took a large force to control it. The wood-house, with the winter's supply of wood, was burned. Only enough canned fruit for one meal was left from the large quantity "put up" for winter use.

The negroes of the community rendered every possible aid. The white people showed great sympathy and kindness. The scholars were obedient, helpful and uncomplaining.

How about the loss? Most of the commissary supplies were burned, excepting potatoes. There must be a cash outlay to replace these. Most of the furniture, bedding, linen and general equipment were lost. Money is needed to replace this loss. They have converted the shop into a temporary dormitory and dining-hall. The printing press is moved into a shed, and the machinery moved over behind the barn, and some temporary building had to be done. All these things and many more will take money. All will add expense. Then, we can not now put the building back for anything like the sum which put it there in the first place. All building materials are almost twice as expensive as then.

Clothing for the girls is not needed, as enough is now on the way to supply all their needs; but quilts, table and bed linen and tea towels, and the like will be very acceptable. These should be packed in strong boxes or barrels and shipped to J. B. Lehman, Edwards, Hinds county, Miss.

But the great need is for money gifts. President Lehman thinks that $3,000 will hardly replace the loss—outside of the insurance. Will not the churches and the brethren of our brotherhood send gifts to cover this loss?

The Best Way to Learn the Jewelry Business.

S. M. Strain, Ex-President of the Illinois Retail Jewelers' Association, and who was one of the organizers of the American National Retail Jewelers' Association, and served as Vice-President during the first year of its existence, teaches young men the jewelry business. He does not conduct a school, but takes the boys into his store and teaches them all the business; how to buy, how to sell, how to keep records, how to engrave, repair, keep stock, in fact, how to conduct a jewelry store with profit. Two at a time are all that Mr. Strain takes, and these two are thoroughly taught. Want one or both German? If you want to learn the business thoroughly address

Dedication of Eugene Bible University.

The fourteenth year of this school opened with the most encouraging outlook for a brilliant, progressive future. More new students than in any preceding year, and many yet to enroll. The old building, so far as the interior is concerned, has become a new structure. A number of young ladies have secured rooms in the dormitory and, with other students, will take their meals in the dining hall. The latter is under charge of Brother and Sister A. E. Hervey.——Sister L. E. Rhem, recently from Helix, Ore., now resides in the so-called "old building." She is a benefactor of the school by deeding to it property valued at some $10,000. By further recognizing her Christian act and Christlike spirit, the apartments in which she resides are henceforth to be known as "Rehm Hall."——All told, the total amount of improvements this year on the Eugene Bible University premises is about $40,000. The dedication of the new $35,000 stone building took place October 18, in the presence of about 600 people. Morton L. Rose, of North Yakima, Wash., delivered the message of the day in a most effective manner, and won the hearts of all. Pres. E. C. Sanderson offered a few appropriate remarks, the immediate result of which brought about pledges for $800. Many made the most of the opportunity to view the various departments of the buildings. W. A. Gressman.

Victory at Corona, Calif.

A great victory has been achieved for the little church in Corona, Calif., through a five weeks' meeting conducted by John T. Stivers, of Los Angeles. The victory lay not so much in the number added as in the deepening of the spirituality of the members, the drawing them together in a closer bond of sympathy, love and fellowship, and revealing in them a latent strength they never dreamed of possessing.

The congregation's sixteen years of history have been years of continuous struggle against adversity of nearly every sort. Victimized by foes without; frequently rent asunder by dissensions within; poverty stricken; no standing in the community; held in derision by the other religious bodies of the town; frequent change of ministers, with long periods of no regular preaching; these and many other adverse circumstances combined to make its life one of hardship and struggle for existence.

With the coming of W. T. Adams as minister two years ago began the agitation for a new church building, which was badly needed. This was dedicated last June with all indebtedness provided for. Brother Adams closed his ministry September 1 and departed for Washington. We were happy in the possession of our new building, but our happiness was clouded by the prospects before us. Few in number, our resources exhausted, were we, when Brother Stivers began the meeting. He came without any preparation worthy of note having been made, because the time was short; and he came without our guaranteeing him a dollar, assuming all risks. Under these conditions, sufficient to discourage the stoutest heart, he began in full confidence of a great victory, assuring us that results were with God, who always rewarded the faithful. Brother Stivers preached in a way that delighted every true disciple's heart. He "determined to know nothing save Jesus Christ and Him crucified." The meeting closed with 28 additions in all—16 by confession, 9 by letter and statement and 3 were reclaimed.

Among the blessings brought us through this meeting were a number of happy surprises. One of these was the ease with which the expenses, amounting to more than $260, were met. Another was the locating of a splendid young man, E. J. Harlow, of Downey, Calif., as our minister during the last week of the meeting. Brother Harlow came on an indefinite promise. But when pledges were called for for the year's work, the handsome sum of $1[illegible] was secured in less than fifteen minutes. The value of this meeting to the cause in Corona can not be overestimated. To our faithful State Board we owe a debt of gratitude we can never repay. They arranged this meeting for us and secured Brother Stivers for the occasion; and they also influenced Brother Harlow to come as our minister.

I have written thus at length to show what the old gospel, when preached as it was intended to be preached, will do for any community, however hard the conditions. I write, too, in the hope that the publishing of this report may bear fruit in the renewing of hope, courage and activity in other despairing churches.

Corona, Cal. J. E. Myers, clerk.

Great Meeting in Los Angeles.

A year ago S. M. Martin held a meeting, resulting in 185 additions, and was called to hold another meeting. Owing to an opening that occurred in his dates, we were able to secure him sooner than expected. Just exactly one year to the day from our first meeting the second was started, the meetings also running the same length of time.

Brother Martin had associated with him two singers, Hersell Hoggatt, who conducted the great chorus, and his daughter, Nina Martin-Hatcher, soloist. The meeting started off with additions and thus continued until 177 had responded to the invitations. Of this number 112 came by confession of faith, all but eight being baptized before the meeting closed. There were 65 by letter and statement. There were 50 heads of families and 75 young men and women.

Brother Martin is certainly one of the greatest evangelists. He is a great teacher, and his work remains after he has gone. We were very much pleased with the singers, whose work was of the highest order. The church has been greatly strengthened. This meeting was a great undertaking in a financial way, owing to the present stringency. But we are several hundred dollars ahead, and have reached many of the most influential people in our part of the city.

I have entered upon my fifth year of ministry with this congregation. During this time 662 have been added to the church, the membership having increased from 487 to 616, making a net increase of 429. The Bible school has grown from an attendance of 85 to more than 400, with a proportionate increase shown in all the various departments of the church. One other result of the meeting that should receive mention is the organization of a "Teacher Training Class," which numbers 141, with bright prospects of reaching the 200 mark.

The church is prospered as never before, and all our people rejoice and thank God for the evangelists and the great victory.

Willis S. Myers, minister.

Franz Liszt, the great composer, wrote long ago as follows about

Mason & Hamlin ORGANS

"What a magnificent organ for which I have to thank you! It is a marvel and truly praiseworthy."

Many of the great musicians of to-day have written in like praise. For quality, of tone and variety and power of expression they have never been approached.

Oregon.

Roseburg, Nov. 2.—Closed the best meeting in the history of the Roseburg Christian Church. S. M. Martin and C. Hersell Hoggatt labored hard and earnestly for four weeks, preaching every night and three times on Sunday. The efforts of these two men greatly strengthened the church. There were 40 added—22 by confession, 16 by statement, two by letter. There were 63 pledged tithers. Two classes in Sunday-school will meet this week to organize. This will make four organized classes in this department. The meeting paid for itself and left a healthy balance in the treasury. We hope to complete repairs on house soon.—B. W. Bass.

Tennessee.

Johnson City, Nov. 2.—I began my ministry with this good congregation the first of August, following a five-years' faithful ministry by J. Lem Keevil. Eighteen have been added to the church during the first quarter, the Sunday-school averaged 408—521 one the last Sunday in the quarter and $20 collection; $50 worth of repairs done and $120 in the treasury at the close of the quarter. We raised $100 for Church Extension—we were asked to raise $50 and $100 for state work. The outlook is very encouraging.—John T. Brown.

Texas.

Ladonia, Nov. 9.—Brother Douthit and I have just closed a meeting at Laddonia, Mo., with 51 additions. J. D. Greer, their efficient pastor, has done a good work there. We are now at Fairland, Ind., in a meeting at Brother Douthit's old home. The church will not seat the crowds that come and many are turned away. Eight confessions last night.—E. V. Spicer, Ladonia, Texas.

Waco, Nov. 9.—The work at Ennis moves encouragingly—eight additions in last two Sundays. Fifty-one since May 1. The church will contribute $100 to state missions and all missionary offerings during the year have been greatly increased over previous years. The Ladies' Aid, besides largely assisting our local work, is educating a young lady in Carlton College. It is the purpose of the church to begin very soon the erection of a fine new church building.—H. R. Ford.

Bryan, Nov. 9.—One addition yesterday by statement. Took Texas Mission offering of $28.25 and expect to get more.—James A. Challenner.

Waxahachie, Nov. 8.—We had fifty additions in a short meeting with M. M. Goode at St. Joe, Mo. There were four additions during our regular services here yesterday.—J. B. Boen.

Virginia.

Enon, Nov. 9.—J. T. Stinson, (Baptist) and myself have just closed a series of union services between the Baptist and Christian churches in this community. The fellowship was sweet, the interest good and, I believe, much good was accomplished. Three were added to the Lord. Sunday morning I spoke to Baptist brethren on "Fraternity," and was well received. It will be hard to tabulate the actual results of this gathering together of God's people. This much can be said: We know each other better now than we did formerly and we are nearer together than we were before the meeting.—W. L. Burner.

ADULT BIBLE CLASS MOVEMENT

MARION STEVENSON

Bible Schools in Colorado.

In presenting this, my annual report, I desire to give the facts concerning the Bible schools as I have found them, with such suggestions and recommendations as seem wise.

At the beginning of the year I accounted for 44 schools in the state, with a total membership of 5,648. I have been advised of four new schools organized during the year at Durango, Ordway, Fruita and Littleton, making just 50 at present with a membership of 6,317, an increase of 669 for the year. I believe other schools have been started but have not been advised about them.

Cradle Roll.

There were 19 cradle rolls at the beginning of the year. Now there are 18, showing a loss of one, with a total membership of 567. I could not learn what the enrollment was when I took the office of state Bible school superintendent so can not give the difference in membership at present. Some have understood something of the value of this department and have done splendidly, while others have given it little or no attention. I mention two extreme cases: Colorado City is the banner school, having 78 enrolled with a school enrollment of 158. Another school reports, "We have no cradle roll now, all the babies having grown out of it."

Home Department.

At the beginning of the current year there were 13 home departments. There are now 16, with a membership of 767. Colorado City also leads in this, having a greater per cent based on school enrollment than any other school, having 135 on the list.

Training Classes.

This department has made a most remarkable growth. It has been the source of a great deal of pleasure to me to know that no other state in the nation, except Kansas, has had such a striking increase in teacher training. We occupy second place among all the states in proportion of training students to enrollment of Sunday-schools. In the teacher training report at the international convention at Louisville last June, Colorado occupied second place of all North America, Nova Scotia being first, so our good state heads the list of the United States, an honor we all should well be proud of. I am especially happy over the fact that it is our training work that made this possible, for at the time the report was made up for Colorado there were 74 classes and 1,325 members in all the churches. Of this number, 20 classes and 768 members belonged to the Christian Bible schools, or more than all the other churches combined.

Less than a year ago there were only two classes in the state in our schools, one at Trinidad and the other at South Broadway, Denver, with about 20 members. Now there are 26 classes and an enrollment of 926. Some have said that our campaign for the open book was of a "mushroom" nature from which satisfactory results could not be expected. We can not, of course, hope to have all who enlist to continue through the course, but all will be benefited in proportion to the work they do put into it. A comparison will show that we are making headway and will lead in graduates as well as enrollment. We have not a single class a year old in the course of study now in use.

For your information I give the following figures, for which I am indebted to Mrs. Jean F. Webb, state superintendent training department of the Colorado State Sunday-school Association: Since June, 1906, 72 persons have passed successful examinations. Of this number 31 have been from our schools and every one within the past year against 41 from all other churches in three and one-half years. The number of training students enrolled up to the present time is as follows: Congregational, 136; Union, 68; Baptist, 102; Methodist, 246; Episcopal, 45; Presbyterian, 124; United Presbyterian, 6; Latter Day Saints, 7; Seventh Day Adventists, 30; Christian, 926. Total, 1,690.

E. M. Cosner,
Colorado State Bible School Superintendent.

So far as I have learned the only school in the state having an advanced training class is South Broadway, Denver, but others are to be started soon.

Adult Classes.

Only within the past two months has there been any special effort made to promote the Adult Bible class movement within our state, but already signs of an awakening in its interest are observed. In order that we may have a complete record of all such classes I have arranged for these papers to first be sent to the state Bible school superintendent for registration when they are promptly forwarded to the proper party for attention. I mention the following classes which have fully complied with these conditions to date: Cheerful Workers, Colorado Springs, women, 20 members; Y. P. B., South Broadway, Denver, mixed, 65; New Movement, Trinidad, mixed, 24; Excelsior, Colorado Springs, women, 14; Philothean, Fruita, mixed, 25; C. M. Morris Bible, Central, Denver, women, 126; Y. P. B., Central, Denver, mixed, 175.

I believe we are beginning to understand pretty well the value of teacher training, what it is and what it will continue to be, and I am persuaded that the organized Bible class proposition is of no less importance, and is the one thing now before us which we need to push.

State Colors and Emblem.

I have thought from the first, and still believe, that the extent of our organized work depends largely upon the measure of co-operation that may be secured, and anything that will encourage it is worth our consideration. It was with this object in view that state colors and emblem for our Bible schools was proposed. The proposition for colors was submitted to the schools of the state, requesting them to vote for a combination of three colors, and the one getting the largest number of votes by a certain date should be adopted. A goodly number of the schools were interested, and a large majority was cast for lavender, white and light green, which were accordingly declared the state colors of the Christian Bible schools of Colorado.

A design for state emblem was submitted to the state board for its consideration, and was adopted. This emblem bears the state colors, and would make a nice design for a church window. I have had in mind a state motto and a state song for the same purpose, but did not have the time to give to it.

Finances.

A larger number of schools have contributed to state work this year than ever before. While the increase in total amount given was not as great as expected, it is a good indication of larger co-operation in this important matter. Last year four schools took the offering which amounted to $471.28. This year twenty-five schools were interested with offerings, aggregating $619.66, a gain of twenty-one schools and $148.38. I believe our schools need to be educated in this matter and made to see that the most important duty and first need is our own state. I am convinced, however, from my own limited experience and the experience of others here and elsewhere, that our methods must be changed before we can expect a hearty response from the schools. The objects for which money is asked should be made more definite, and be largely expended on Bible school work in our state, as is done in other well organized states. I believe that far greater and quicker returns are to be had from an investment in Bible schools than any other department of Christian activity. In other words, more can be accomplished with an equal amount of money from this source than any other department of the church.

Recommendations.

I think it not out of place for me to make some recommendations, which seem to me should be considered by those who will be chosen to lead the work this year, therefore I suggest:

That a state Bible school board be created, consisting of state superintendent and two members of state board, for the purpose of attending to the affairs of this department.

That the state Bible school superintendent, corresponding secretary and state evangelist maintain the closest co-operation in their work.

That a superintendent for each district be selected for the purpose of aiding the state superintendent in his duties.

That the state and district superintendents be authorized to make such visits to schools as may seem wise to the Bible school board, and actual traveling expenses be allowed and paid out of the funds with the state treasurer.

That we give our hearty support to the work of the Colorado State Sunday-School Association.

In Conclusion.

The most pleasing thing I have to report of the year's accomplishments is that 244 precious lives, from sixteen schools, have been brought into the Kingdom of our Lord. There were doubtless many more, perhaps as many others, but were not reported. What a glorious harvest! Has it not been worth many times the cost in money, labor, heartaches and tears?

E. M. Cosner, State Supt.

The Great Brown Class at Bellefontaine, Ohio.

When the minister, Roy L. Brown, went to Bellefontaine three years ago, the first day he stood in front of the class there were just three men in it. The growth at the start was gradual—in fact, the enrollment of the 200 young men has been gradual. Over 300 lives have been touched by the Brown class—but, as in the city work there has been a constant moving in and out, the class has been very happy to maintain its present enrollment. With the new basement thrown open to the class for its use, which will give a seating capacity of two to three hundred, the boys are determined to fill it. This class has been made from most every profession and walk of life! The average age of the men is probably about 30 years.

Its methods of work are very simple, yet strenuous in the extreme. To get new recruits means simply to get after them, and keep after them, till you get them. Of course there are many not reached yet—however, the boys are still after them! The class has its banquets, socials, business sessions, etc., but the chief thing is the Lord's day morning lesson study! Class interest will keep up, if you keep it interesting. Big men's classes pay! In the Bellefontaine congregation, at the present time, there are between 40 and 50 men enrolled on the church books who came into the church by the way of the Brown class. And this is the chief end and aim of this class! Not to make it simply a club or social organization, but to glorify God in the lives of men. The class has devotional, membership, social, benevolent and employment committees, but their chief joy is in loyal service to God and Christ! Of course the readers will understand this is not a "happen-so" class! It came by inspiration born of a holy desire to do large things in the Master's vineyard.

The Bellefontaine Bible school also has a large class of younger men and a class of over 50 older men. The school prospers numerically, financially and, best of all, spiritually. Roy L. Brown.

A Successful Teacher Training Class.

We organized last winter with sixteen members. A few lost interest and dropped out. Some could not continue the work because they had not the time to give. Others stayed with the work to the end but did not take the examination. Four received diplomas. How did we do it? Well, it almost did itself. One of the graduates, a Methodist Sunday-school superintendent, said: "We felt the need of more Bible knowledge, and the teacher training class supplied that need. We all prayed for wisdom, and the leader made the lessons interesting. While we took all that was in the book, we did supplemental work. Often the members of the class were assigned some special work, which, as one expressed it, "was delightfully pleasant and profitable, and left us hungry for more."

Sometimes it would be prophecy and fulfillment. Sometimes it would be types and anti-types. Sometimes it would be expressions and illustrations in the New Testament drawn from Old Testament history, such as the serpent in the wilderness, John 3:14; the passage of the Red Sea, 1 Cor. 10:12; the tabernacle, 2 Cor. 5:1; fleeing for refuge, Heb. 6:18. The leader would call attention to these New Testament statements and have the pupils read the account in the Old Testament. Sometimes it would be a lesson (Bible readings) on the old and new dispensations. The leader spent much time in prayer and preparation to make the lessons interesting. Then the program was varied so the work would not become monotonous. When the work was finished, all expressed regret that we could not continue. But the leader had resigned here and there was no one to take it up and carry it on. W. H. Applegate.

RALLY DAY.

Lord's day, November 22, is home mission day in the Sunday-schools. This should be made the occasion of a great rally in our schools, and wherever possible collections should be taken for the benefit of mission work in the home field.

Half of the money collected and sent to the American Christian Missionary Society goes back into the state Bible school work, so it means much to the state workers.—Make it a great day. Report at once, sending draft, check or money orders to American Christian Missionary Society, Y. M. C. A. building, Cincinnati, O.

In the Spirit of Christian Union.

In the city of Chillicothe on November 17, 18 and 19, there will be held the Missouri Sunday-school convention, or, as we commonly say, the union state Sunday-school convention. This will be a notable gathering. Among the distinguished persons who take part on the program will be Mr. McElfresh, the recently appointed international teacher training superintendent. In such bodies as this we have the opportunity of manifesting the spirit of Christian union, and thus help on toward the accomplishment of Christian union itself. I have often felt humiliated to see so few of our people in attendance at the sessions of these union conventions. Some things may be said and done which we can not all approve, but this is liable to be true in the gatherings of our own people; but for the most part, nothing will be found calling for objection. I hope that all who can possibly do so will be in attendance at this convention, get the good which it offers and help on with its good purposes.

An Easy Centennial Aim.

The Bible schools are asked to contribute $20,000 this year to missions. Half of this is to be used in the work of the general home board and the other half returned to the several state societies. This is one of the easiest of all the Centennial aims. If four cautions are observed it will be reached without difficulty.

1. Let every Bible school that made an offering for home missions last year beat its own record this year. Of course none would think of taking a backward step in the Centennial year.

2. Let every school that ever had fellowship in this work make the offering this year a little larger than the one it gave before. The same motives that moved us to give before ought to have twofold force of the Centennial year. So we must not fail.

3. "Each One Win One." Let every school that is giving this year enlist some other school. A good thing deserves to be passed on. If we have found a way to serve the Lord and advance his kingdom let us make haste to show it to those who have not yet discovered it.

4. Let no school wait to be won. It is the Centennial year! We are pleading for the open book. We want to celebrate the Centennial of this plea by opening the Book in every home and every community in America. The American Christian Missionary Society is the agency which we have constituted to lead in this patriotic and religious enterprise. Let every Bible school be quick to volunteer an offering to advance the cause and celebrate the Centennial. W. R. Warren.

Midweek Prayer-Meeting

ENJOYING MATERIAL THINGS.

Thanksgiving Topic, November 25, 1908. Deut. 8:7-14; 1 Tim. 4:4, 5.

The note of thanksgiving is frequent and fragrant in the pages of Old Testament history. It was not strange that our New England forebears on occasion set apart days of thanksgiving, as also days of fasting and prayer. They were men and women whose lives were set about with the atmosphere of the old Hebrew history, in the midst of the dangers and difficulties of the New World in which they found themselves. Like the Israelites of old, they were wanderers in the wilderness, set about by strange scenes and surroundings, suffering privations and hardships with heroic endurance, yet not without murmurings at times. But out of all these things, with many losses and crosses, the Lord delivered them. And so they had their seasons of thanksgiving. The Lord gave them songs of deliverance in the night watches. The old sweet promises that sound exultingly through the psalms of Israel's seers and singers and find record on the pages of their history, found gracious and grateful recognition in their hearts and homes and in their places of assembly.

Our national Thanksgiving day grew out of this atmosphere and spirit of our Puritan ancestors. They were a hardy and heroic race, with much of the Hebrew lore as the basis of their religious and social life. They worship the God of Abraham, of Moses and Joshua and Caleb. They, too, dwelt among the Canaanites in this strange, new world, which they had received as an inheritance from the God of the ancient peoples. Their worship was a militant note, mingling, not unseemly, with the gentler strains of thanksgiving and praise.

And with all their austerity and the severity of their manners, and their primitive simplicity and the general harshness of the age, they enjoyed a large degree of material blessings. They were given to hospitality, and in entertaining strangers sometimes entertained angels in disguise. As usually happens, with increasing prosperity many forgot the God of their fathers and the giver of all their good, and boasted themselves of the works of their hands, as we, their children, living in an age of marvelous material prosperity. Over and over again the faithful preachers of the divine grace and goodness warned them in the words of the old prophets and leaders of ancient Israel. Still, many grew indifferent, and religion was at a low ebb at the beginning of the eighteenth and of the nineteenth century, as of the twentieth century upon which we have entered.

Evermore we need the prophet voice calling us to remember the source of all our blessings in this goodly land, which we have received from our fathers and our fathers' God. We are in daily danger of forgetting the rock from whence we were hewn, and that all these material things are not of our own making or multiplying. The God of all grace has been very merciful unto us and blessed us, not only with all spiritual, but with all material blessings in heavenly places, in Christ Jesus. How little do we realize the unmeasured and unspoken good that has come to us through the mission and ministry of the Christ of our world, and especially in this wonderful New World, preserved unto the fullness of the Gentiles, as those who read the pages of history carefully most fully believe and affirm. It was Ralph Waldo Emerson, the prophet soul of New England through the formative period of the most remarkable era in our national history—the nineteenth century—who said: "America, it would appear, is the last effort on the part of Divine Providence on behalf of the race." Would that we might catch this prophetic vision and rise to the responsibilities of our vast opportunities, lest we forget God and perish, with all the nations of them that have grown rich in material things to the neglect of the spiritual and the eternal.

Alien is a term applied to unnaturalized persons who have removed from another nation to our own. Most of the people who have sought our country have come to make it their country. They are with us for better or for worse, for time or for eternity. Over a million came last year. If the aliens passing through Ellis Island, the New York immigrant station, last year, had been made to pass in a constant stream before one standing at the entrance to the building, he would have seen 2,500 living beings passing every day during the whole year.

Where They Go.

If this army of aliens were distributed over the several states it could be assimilated and handled without the menace to our country that results from the present tendency of the aliens to settle in certain already congested centers of foreign residents.

The great city secures the larger number. New York City, for instance, is no longer an American city in nationality. There are more Jews in New York City than live in Palestine; more Italians than live in Naples; more Germans than live in any German city, save Berlin; more Irish than live in Dublin and Cork combined. Other large cities come in, each for its share. The great manufacturing institutions east of the Mississippi River, particularly in the Allegheny Mountain region, use a large per cent. of alien labor.

Immigration, Old and New.

The old immigration came from England, Ireland, Scotland, Wales, Holland, Germany and some from France and Spain. These were a sturdy stock that mingled on our shores, and from which the American people sprang, to begin with.

The new immigration is from other parts of the world, and is made up of a different class of people. In addition to the orientals, who will come in larger numbers as the years go by, the bulk of the new immigration comes from south European nations. They have been an oppressed people. It has been with effort that they have secured enough money to reach our shores. They are an illiterate people, many of them having grievances against both church and state.

Evangelization and Successful Americanization.

There are many theories of how we ought to meet the conditions created by these alien nationalities. The views held by most of the American missionary boards are that it is not enough to furnish the newly arrived alien with real estate information, instructions as to how to become naturalized, and how to exercise the rights of citizenship, and other matters, but he must be met by a man who loves him for his soul's sake, and his soul's work. His vision is narrowed by racial prejudice; he has a grievance against the church, which he holds against Christ. These blurred views will dissolve only in the atmosphere of Christ.

What Are the Disciples Doing for the Alien?

Julius Stone has for years been laboring among the Scandinavians of the northwest. He has recently closed his work at Chippewa Falls, Wis., and opened up headquarters in Minneapolis Minn. C. S. Osterhus, Ossian, Ia., has also been working for years among the Scandinavians. In addition to preaching among these people, he publishes a paper called the Bible Vennen.

At Ellis Island, Jos. Keevil, Brooklyn N. Y., has just been secured to organize the work of meeting the aliens who come through the port of New York City. He is also pastor of the Second Church, Brooklyn, which is now being organized along institutional lines. His church is located in the midst of the great foreign population. The writer counted more children playing on one side of the block in front of Brother Keevil's church, about five o'clock in the afternoon, than could have been seated in the building if it had been crowded to the doors.

Recently a Russian colony, in the city of New York, has come into touch with us through the West 56th street Church and the labors of Brother John Darsie. The pastor of this body of people united with the West 56th street Church. His name is H. Norton. These Russians have been working under the Baptists, but found themselves in all points in accord with us. They represent that in Russia the movement to which they belong numbers a million adherents. At our recent national convention in New Orleans, the American Society was instructed to take up this work. It is doubtless the largest open door among aliens ever placed before the Disciples of Christ.

"The Lord shall command the blessing upon thee in thy storehouses, and in all thou settest thy hand unto; and he shall bless thee in the land the Lord thy God giveth thee."—Deut. 28:8.

For introductory purposes we will send four issues of the WOMAN'S WORLD free in accordance with the free offer below. WOMAN'S WORLD absolutely has the largest circulation of any publication of any kind in the world—over 2,000,000 copies monthly. To give you an idea of what a great national magazine the WOMAN'S WORLD is, the following are a few of the APPEALING features in the four free issues which we will send you:

White Slave Trade

By EDWIN W. SIMS, U. S. District Attorney in Chicago. An account of the White Slave traffic of today by the official who has already obtained the conviction of many hundreds of the miserable creatures engaged in this 'business," and who, Mr Sims says, "have reduced the art of ruining young girls to a national and international system." Every woman and girl in America will be benefited by reading this article by the great federal attorney who is doing such good work to rid our land of a ' Traffic which would, by contrast, make the Congo slave traders of the old days appear like Good Samaritans."

Why Girls Go Astray

This is the subject of a second article in one of the free issues of the WOMAN'S WORLD, by the Honorable Edwin W. Sims, written as was the first "White Slave Article," strictly from the viewpoint of the lawyer, who finds himself called upon, as an officer of the law, to deal with this delicate and difficult subject.

The Sins of Society

By JOSEPH MEDILL PATTERSON, Author of "A Little Brother to the Rich," the greatest book sensation of the year. Mr. Patterson is an insider, and this article is a startling exposure of the follies and sins of the fashionable rich. Mr. Patterson says that we have in this country among these rich society people a practical Court; that society women relegate all functions of usefulness, except one—the bearing of children—and they are not inclined to discharge this function as they ought.

"The Christian Science Faith," by Mrs. Clara Louise Burnham, author of "Jewel," "Jewel Story Book," "The Open Shutters," etc.

"The Most Interesting Thing in the World," by George Ade, George Barr McCutcheon, Forrest Crissey and William Hodge.

"Love Making in Foreign Lands," by Frank L. Pixley, author of "King Dodo," "The Burgomaster," "Prince of Pilsen," etc.

"The Old Homes and the New," by Hon. Adlai E. Stevenson, former Vice-President of the United States.

"The Sins of His Fathers," by Cyrus Townsend Brady, author of "A Little Traitor to the South," "Richard, The Brazen," etc.—a powerful story dealing with "The Sins of the Fathers visited unto the third and fourth generations."

"My Beauty and Health Secrets," by Miss Della Carson, first prize winner in the Chicago Tribune's $10,000.00 Beauty Contest, also in World Contest. Miss Carson tells the secret of how she has the appearance of a girl of sixteen, whereas she is thirty.

"New Arkansas Traveler Stories," by Opie Read, author and originator of "The Arkansas Traveler."

"The Journal of Julie," the confidential and personal experiences of a young country girl winning her way in a great city.

"The Wild Rose Letters," being the heart secrets between Elaine, Countess of Wycherly, and Rose Mary of Strawberry Point (Ia.). Its sentiment is as sweet and delicious as wild honey.

Some of the other contributors to these four issues are: Margaret Sangster, Ella Wheeler Wilcox, Roswell Field, General Chas. King, Harriett Prescott Spafford, Elia W. Peattie, Elliott Flower, Stanley Waterloo, Frank L. Stanton, Edwin Balmer, Maude Radford Warren, Allen D. Albert, Dr. W. F. Waugh, Ellen Stan, John Kendrick Bangs, and many others.

Chicago Tribune says Editorially:

The revelations made by U. S. District Attorney Sims in the WOMAN'S WORLD should be given as wide a currency as possible.

As Mr. Sims says, thousands of girls from the country are entrapped each year, and he points out the pitiful fact that the parents of a great majority of these unfortunates are unaware of their fate.

What is greatly needed as a supplement to vigorous prosecution of offenders is a campaign of education. Clergymen should take up this evil and instruct parents in their congregations as to the reality and extent of the danger. In small towns there is virtually no knowledge of this evil and how it manifests itself, and there is far too little even in cities.

The problem is enormous, but it can be solved largely by educational means. The responsibility for a broad and systematic campaign of enlightenment rests with the religious and social agencies now existent in every community—the churches, the women's clubs, the civic leagues, and associations. The press, too, should give a reputable publicity and exert its influence directly and on educational lines to the end that the public may know the gravity of the evil and its conditions.

The Martyrdom of St. Turkey.

BY THE REV. S. B. DUNN.

How Saint Turkey came to sainthood,
And at last was canonized,
Is the burden of the story I shall tell;
How they grew him—
How they slew him,
And his corpse anatomized,
Till we bless him now with candle, book and bell.

Martyr was he to their kindness,
For they loved him to the death,
As other saints besides have breathed and bled;
Since they fed him
To behead him,
And to take away his breath,
As they stuffed him, living, so they stuffed him dead.

No more struts he in fine feather—
No strong pinions now has he
To upbear him even to a final rest;
But they roast him,
And they toast him,
While they bring him out to be
This our grateful nation's proud and honored guest.

Comes he steaming to the table,
Like a life on altar laid,
Veiled in incense as they bear him from the fire;
Where they greet him,
And they eat him,
While his praise is sung and said,
And the festive spirit rises higher and higher.

Blessed martyr of Thanksgiving!
May we hold thy memory dear
Long as Time shall roll its breakers at our feet!
Having crowned thee,
We'll surround thee,
Sovereign of each passing year,
As before thy happy shrine and board we meet.

An old paper tells the story of a man who was washing the large plate glass in a show window. There was one soiled spot which defied all efforts to remove it. After hard rubbing at it, using much soap and water, and failing to remove it, he found out the trouble. "It's on the inside," he called out to some one in the store. Many are trying to cleanse the soul from its stains. They wash it with the tears of sorrow; they scrub it with the soap of good resolves; they rub it with the chamois of morality; but still the consciousness of it is not removed. The trouble is, "it's on the inside."—Harry N. Crawford.

"O give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good, for his mercy endureth forever."—1 Chron. 16:34.

The interpreter had them then into another room where was a hen and chickens, and bid them observe awhile. So one of the chickens went to the trough to drink, and every time she drank she lift up her head and her eyes toward sheaven. "See," said he, "what this little chick doth, and learn of her to acknowledge whence your mercies come, by receiving them with looking up."—John Bunyan.

We praise Thee, O God, the Father and Helper of all the sons of men, who hast redeemed us and made our hearts glad in Thy presence. Every day Thou hast enriched us with blessing and spoken to our hearts in love. Thou hast turned sorrow into joy and made Thy light to shine out of the clouds of our foreboding. The peace of our dwelling has been Thy peace and Thou hast spread a table before us. Thou hast been ever of our company in friendship and in joy. By Thy strength we have labored and Thou hast given us rest and refreshment. Have pity, O God, upon the poor and troubled of the earth and sustain the oppressed, giving them release and cheer. Help us to receive Thy gifts with gratitude and to show our love by service. In the name of Christ. Amen.

"In everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known to God."—Phil. 4:6.

The Devil's Bible.

This wonderful volume is in the royal library of the royal palace of Sweden. It is a huge copy of the Bible written on 300 prepared asses' skins. One tradition says that it took 500 years to complete this copy, which is so large that it has a table by itself. Another tradition asserts that it was done in a single night, owing to the assistance of his satanic majesty, who, when the work was completed gave the monk a portrait of himself for a frontispiece.

However true this may be there can still be found the illuminated likeness of the King of Darkness adorning the front page of the work. This book was carried off by the Swedes during the thirty years' war, from a convent in Prague.—Sunday Magazine.

Mother: "Alice, it is bed-time. All the little chickens have gone to bed."

Alice: "Yes, mamma, and so has the hen."—Harper's Bazar.

Fill Thou my life, O Lord my God,
In every part with praise,
That my whole being may proclaim
Thy being and Thy ways.

Not for the lip of praise alone,
Nor e'en the praising heart,
I ask, but for a life made up
Of praise in every part.

Praise in the common words I speak,
Life's common looks and tones;
In intercourse at hearth or board
With my beloved ones.

So shall no part of day or night
From sacredness be free;
But all my life, in every step,
Be fellowship with Thee.

Thankfulness and Murmuring.

Some murmur when their sky is clear
And wholly brought to view,
If one small speck of dark appear
In their great heaven of blue;
And some with thankful love are filled
If but one streak of light,
One ray of God's good mercy, gild
The darkness of their night.

In palaces are hearts that ask,
In discontent and pride,
Why life is such a dreary task
And all good things denied?
And hearts in poorest huts admire
How love has in their aid
(Love that never seems to tire)
Such rich provision made.

"How's the campaign getting in your section?"

"Very exciting," answered the sarcastic citizen. "Next week we're going to have a joint debate between a phonograph and a graphophone."—The Louisville Courier-Journal.

Thankfulness impels to happy consecration and self-surrender, and these are blessings and bring blessings. When, moved by the mercies of God, we yield ourselves to him in glad surrender, to be his utterly and forever, we have conquered, sorrow, doubt, fear and all the gloomy shadows that selfishness casts over a life. Nothing is so blessed as to live in the sweet serenity of a continued sense of God's continual gifts, and, for his dear love's sake, to become living sacrifices. Duty changes its aspect when it becomes the expression of thankfulness. Sorrows change their gloom when they are accepted submissively and thankfully. All life is glorified when the fire of God's love kindles it into a whole burnt offering, "an odor of a sweet savor" to God himself."—Alexander Maclaren.

"What little boy can tell me the difference between the 'quick' and the 'dead'?" asked the Sunday-school teacher.

Willie waved his hand frantically.

"Well, Willie?"

"Please, ma'am, the 'quick' are the ones that get out of the way of automobiles; the ones that don't are the 'dead.'"—Labor Clarion.

A BETTER WAY

THE STORY OF AN ACQUIRED AFFECTION

By HARRIET PRESCOTT SPOFFORD

Mrs. Gilbert was one of those people who are sure they love the Lord and that the Lord loves them. She enjoyed in general a high degree of peace and satisfaction in relation to her spiritual affairs. Concerning her earthly affairs, she was not to-day quite so comfortable. She could not imagine why she needed the discipline that had just now been given her at the very moment when glancing out of the window she had been thanking heaven for the blue sky and the beautiful day.

The discipline was in the shape of her young stepmother, who was ill in bed upstairs. She had never seen the minx, as she phrased it, in her thoughts, till she was brought inside her doors on a stretcher. The little creature had beguiled her father into marrying her, a mere girl, when he was quite old enough to know better, being every day of fifty years, and Mrs. Gilbert had spoken her mind so freely about the affair that of course she could not go near them afterwards. And then her father had lost his money—without any doubt, in Mrs. Gilbert's opinion, owing to this young woman's extravagance. She must have married him for it—served her right then! And he had died suddenly, without making any sign to her. And the little widow—it was perfectly ridiculous, calling that girl her father's widow—was left with literally nothing. Mrs. Gilbert was herself very comfortably provided for by the late Mr. Gilbert; but she had not enough to take care of another person, except under her own roof.

The minister had come to her this very day and had told her the circumstances, and had asked her what she was going to do about it.

She was going to do nothing about it. Why should she?

"Mrs. Gilbert!" said the minister.

"Why, Mr. Morton, I don't know what you mean!"

"Your father's wife!"

"I don't at all feel that she is my father's wife!" and the color dyed her face as she stooped to pick up the articles her energetic movement had scattered in upsetting her work-basket.

"The Lord does," said the minister. "The church does. The community does. You might as well. Perhaps you don't perceive that when you speak in that way you cast an aspersion on your father, Mrs. Gilbert."

"My father was a deluded old man."

"An old man at fifty! That is a novel idea. I didn't know you were so modern. Your father was in his very prime, hale and handsome and uncommonly interesting."

"Well, I'm glad you think so, of course."

"And now his wife, your young stepmother"—

"My stepmother! And half my age!"

"But the fact remains. And she is suffering. You are the nearest person in the world to her."

"And it is my duty to take her home, you mean? I won't do it!"

"There is no one else."

Mrs. Gilbert gazed out of the open window, as if her thought could pierce beyond the blue. "I don't believe that can be required of me," she said.

The minister looked round on the rather sumptuous room with its shining mahogany, its portraits, its tall vases of flowers, its silver candlesticks, its mirrors whose bevelled edges repeated all at strange angles. But he said nothing.

"Mr. Morton," she exclaimed then, "she wouldn't want to come here!"

"I dare say not. I don't even know that she wouldn't prefer the almshouse."

"I must say you are vastly complimentary."

"But as she is at present in a delirious condition, she would know nothing about it, and she can't be asked."

"Oh, Mr. Morton, it does seem hard!"

"I suppose it is hard—all round. But an easy sacrifice is no sacrifice. I have heard you say you want to do something for the Lord. It is not often one can—except in the general way of fighting on his side. Here's your chance."

"I don't know."

"Sometimes the thorns are knee-deep in the path of duty," persisted the gentle minister.

"And you really think this is my duty?" she asked wistfully. "To give up my privacy, my fireside—all that makes home pleasant—to a person, too, whom I have reason to dislike, and also perhaps has reason to dislike me?"

"I think you will have to decide that for yourself. But while you are deciding, you might ask yourself what is a home for?"

Mrs. Gilbert sat down with a gesture of despair when the minister had shut the garden gate. It was a sunshiny day of June; the air blew in fresh with the fragrance of the roses that climbed over the gate and over the porch; the elms were bending and bowing in the soft west wind; the sunshine made the green of the grass vivid. But there was neither sunshine nor rose-scent for her; the sky she had thought so blue had clouded over, the world she had thought so beautiful was dull and gray. She had loved her home, her garden, her house, her seclusion, her peace. And now, must it all be destroyed? For there could be no peace with a person in the house whom she detested; and once in, of course she would never go out. There was nowhere for her to go. Must she then take her in and make the best of it? Oh, there wasn't any best to it! It was all worst! The tears started to her eyes—and Mrs. Gilbert's eyes were large and gray, with long black lashes, and tears made them very brilliant. But there, that was too childish! She dashed them away and took up some work, and tried to thread one of the twenty needles she seemed to see between her thumb and finger, winking hard to be rid of the troublesome moisture. And as she did so, she caught sight of the leaf of the calendar that she had torn off a half hour ago, yesterday's text upon it, "No chastening for the moment seemeth joyous."

For the moment. Then perhaps it might make one joyous in the end. She wiped her eyes and glanced at the calendar hanging just beside her work-table. And as the sunbeam swam round and lay upon it, there started out in letters of light the words of to-day's text, "Lo, I come to do thy will, O God!"

It seemed then suddenly to her as if a voice from the unknown, the beloved, the believed in, had spoken to her. As if a hand had been laid upon her arm. She half turned as if she might see a vision. Was this bitter thing indeed the will of God?

The minister had bade her ask herself the purpose of a home. She saw what he meant. Home was a sanctuary, a place of refuge. And to refuse sanctuary to another, to refuse refuge! Yet it stood to reason that one could not take in all the world. One was not asked to take in all the world, however—only those that had some sort of claim, or some dire need. And Scripture itself had enjoined hospitality. But it was bitter—this woman who had been the cause of her estrangement from her father, to whom she had never spoken, whom indeed she had scarcely seen! Could it be really the will of God that she should take her in?

She knelt down by her sewing-chair, and bowed her head and tried to be humble; and she prayed for strength and for knowledge. As she knelt, the sunbeam still moving touched her shoulder and laid its warmth there; it felt like a warm hand ready to lead her. And then presently she forgot that, she forgot herself, she seemed to rise and rest upon some higher plane, and she felt an inexpressible sense of divine nearness. She found and read the Twenty-third Psalm when she rose, and unconsciously lingered over the words: "Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death I will fear no evil; for thou art with me." This had been the valley of the shadow to her. But with that presence beside her? Why, with that, what could anything signify!

She put on her things and went out, a smile rippling over her face as she went, and making it lovely. And that noon the little stepmother was lying between the lavendered sheets of Mrs. Gilbert's best bed, and a nurse was in attendance, to be helped and relieved by Mrs. Gilbert herself.

In all the fever and delirium, Mrs. Gilbert could not but see what a dainty little

"Man Is As Old As His Stomach"

This Persian Epigram Is the Real Guage of A Man's Life.

The Persians were a very sagacious people, noted among other things, for their deep thinking on life and the things which make up life.

The above epigram shows the wisdom of their thought.

When a man's stomach is able to furnish new material to the system as fast or faster than the natural decay of man requires, then such a man lives his fullest and his best.

When through wrong living or disease a man's stomach begins to tax the other organs and takes from the blood strength which it cannot give back in nourishment taken from food, then begins the death of man and he decays fast. The stomach is strong, splendidly strong, and can stand an untold amount of abuse and neglect, but when it dies, man dies.

The stomach gives tons upon tons of good rich blood every year to the system and draws only 680 lbs. of nourishment for its own use. If, however, the food which it receives cannot be turned into blood which is capable of use by the body, then the stomach receives no help from the other organs.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets contain the most perfect digestive qualities known to science and at the same time the most powerful. They will mix with the poisonous juices of a sick stomach and digest food in spite of this handicap.

They will stop gas making and bad breath. They tone up the nerves of the whole digestive canal, including those of the stomach.

A single ingredient contains strength enough to digest 3,000 times its weight in mixed food.

They have stood the test of time and today are more sought after than all their imitators combined.

thing this stranger was. Her father's wife—it was impossible to believe it—this child! How gentle, even in her wanderings; she was—the little lady! Mrs. Gilbert found herself thinking that she didn't half wonder at her father; any man would have felt the charm of the little person.

One night, when the tired nurse slept, Mrs. Gilbert held the watch in the room. It was the crisis of the fever. The patient was sleeping also so deeply, so quietly, she barely seemed to breathe. If she waked, sinking, and with long slow gasps, it would soon all be over. But if she waked conscious—"Oh, Lord," sighed Mrs. Gilbert in her heart, "I have been a wicked woman! But thou hast driven rancor and bitterness out of my heart, oh, do not take away my peace! Spare her, give her back to life, make her happy again, and let me atone!" For the whispered wanderings had spoken only of cheerless sorrow.

All through the night Mrs. Gilbert sat silent, almost breathless. Where now was all that spiritual satisfaction that had once been hers? She was aware only of a superstitious fancy that if this girl recovered she might take it as a sign that she herself had been forgiven for her hardness. "Oh, Heavenly Father" she silently prayed again and again, "let me feel that all undeserving as I am, Thou dost care for me!"

The stars wheeled their hollow shell overhead, and paled and went out in the pearly dawn where one great planet retreated into brightness, as if it shone on the casque of some half-revealed and mighty spirit of good; and the gray grew to rose, and the rose to gold, and the sun hung in the east, and a cool wind of dewy morning blew, and a long level beam stole into the room and lay upon the pillow. The great blue eyes in the white, still face opened, wondering, half-frightened eyes.

"It is all right," whispered Mrs. Gilbert, bending over her, herself in shadow. "You are in your own home—where you are always going to be. You will be well presently. Now just take this, and be off to dreams again."

Love always comes an unbidden angel, for the one in weakness or illness, the child, the invalid, to whom we give care and bring relief. It was some days after that critical night that as Mrs. Gilbert, giving her patient some drink, passed her arm under the pillow and lifted the head now all sunned over with short, bright curls, that a hand crept up timidly and weakly and touched her face, and she heard a sigh, "Oh, I wanted to die! and I feel as though I had and were with angels now!" And Mrs. Gilbert stooped and kissed her—kissed her stepmother!

Several weeks had dragged their slow length along, and the little patient, now entirely well, but still tired and languid, lay in her white wrapper on the wicker lounge inside the porch, taking the air and sunshine of the perfect Indian summer day. The leaves swept about in drifts of gold, the sky melted away in purple hazes, the air was laden with the piney breath of balsams. It seemed good to her then just to be alive.

Mrs. Gilbert was sitting beside her. The minister had been there, having brought them a great stem of white lilies. "You put a black and ugly bulb into the ground, a little before this time of year," he said, "and this great miracle of white and odorous beauty is what comes of it. I don't know if a sin has in it the seed of anything good; but I know that if we bury it deep enough, we sometimes find in its place loveliness and happiness and peace. 'Like the good deeds that "blossom in the dust."'"

"Oh, we do!" cried Mrs. Gilbert, when he had gone. And she bent and kissed a color into the cheek of the dainty creature beside her. "Do you believe," she said, "that you have really forgiven me? I know I know, that if both the Lord and you forgive me, I never can forgive myself! To think I could be so cruel to my father and to you!"

Tears welled into the blue eyes till they looked like forget-me-nots filled with morning dews. "He loved you all the same," said the little stepmother. "And it is you who must forgive me—because I came between you. But I didn't mean to—and oh, I—I loved him so!"

"I never would have believed," said Mrs. Gilbert, bringing the wrap more closely about her charge, "that a sin and a rebellion could be so turned into a blessing and a delight! The dear Lord knew all the time! He gave you to me through much tribulation. And now I am going to keep you here always and thank him for you every day!" And if then they had a good time crying together, it is because words are feeble to express gladness and love, and tears are eloquent.—The Congregationalist.

THE THANKSGIVING DINNER

By I. Z. DAVIS

"What fine meadow land for pasture that west forty will be! As for the slope east of the road, it was made just for corn, and the lot adjoining will be A1 for wheat."

"Judson Trotter," and his wife looked sharply at him over the jelly she was vigorously stirring as it boiled on the stove, "You haven't said a word yet about the Lord's field. You need not think because we have come west that we are going to be heathen, even if some of the neighbors do act as if they were. Back in Massachusetts you used to say before you made son Neely a wedding present of the farm, 'that lot,' meaning the best one, 'is for the Lord. Whatever we raise on it will go for the church and missions.' How it did yield and how we were prospered!"

"Yes," replied her husband meekly, "but there is no church or missionary society here to support."

"The more's the need then," exclaimed the thrifty New England lady, as she vented her indignation at a "man's obtuseness" by stirring over some of the jelly on the stove. "Look at the Bensons," she continued eloquently, "as wild as hawks. Not a Bible in the house. There are five boys coming up and none of them have ever seen the inside of a church or Sunday-school. They say that another saloon is to be opened at the corners."

There was a moment's silence as Mr. Trotter almost held his breath while his wife poured the boiling syrup into glass jars for winter use. When the last can was placed on the table to cool, she began in earnest.

"The Mormons held a meeting down at the 'shanty' last night."

At this bit of chilling news, Mr. Trotter pulled himself together, sat up and took notice. "You have some idea, Ann. What is it?" he asked.

"We must build a church, Judson. It is our plain duty. I believe the Lord has sent us here to see the great need. Back East I never thought much about church erection. They kept the place scoured, and never a child but was hustled into Sunday-school as soon as it could walk. Here, almost the entire neighborhood is growing up without religion."

"But we can't do it, Ann, I am getting along in years."

"You had better be getting along in ears. Did you ever hear about Caleb?" she asked in a tone of irony. "Think of all the Lord's promises. The word can't is not found in one of them. With God all things are possible. We can write our home church and see if they will help. I am sure they will, for there are some wealthy people who belong."

"Well said," replied her husband. "I know if you take hold of it things will go."

"To begin with," continued Mrs. Trotter, "what will be our Thanksgiving field?"

"The swale and upland."

"That is stony and hard to work," objected his wife.

"The swale and upland is new ground," he explained. "The marsh will yield a good crop of hay. As potatoes are a staple article, I will plant the new ground in Irish tubers."

"I think we had better make it a subject of prayer. The thought has come to me to take my money out of the bank and invest it in that new kind of seed potatoes," interrupted his wife.

"Do as the Lord moves you," was her husband's reply, "and if you are going to purchase the special seed, send for it as soon as possible so we can get them in early."

In due time the field devoted to build a church was ploughed, harrowed, marked and planted. In June a fine crop of hay was harvested and sold at ten dollars a ton. By the fifteenth of July potatoes were ready to market. How they did yield! There were one hundred and fifty bushels to the acre, and twenty acres in the lot. As the fine, large tubers sold readily, a good sum was realized to help build a new church.

In the meantime Mrs. Trotter had written her former pastor of their efforts to establish a house of worship. He placed the matter before his people. They became interested at once and forwarded a check to Mr. Judson Trotter that enabled him to carry out their cherished plan.

A Christian neighbor donated the land for the site. Another, although not a church member, offered to give a part of the lumber. When the foundation was being laid, everybody wanted to help, even the children.

Thanksgiving day dawned clear and beautiful. The Trotters were happy. The large red barn was filled with grain and hay. A fine herd of cattle ranged in the meadow, and everything in the home was bright and cheerful.

Their son and his family had come from the east to visit them, and with them came the new minister who would lay the cornerstone of the church.

Whenever Mr. Trotter's neighbors ask him the secret of his prosperity he says, "Because of my Thanksgiving field that I plant for the Lord and for the extension of His Kingdom."

Tommy and "Gov'nor"

Tommy had just been delivering some freshly ironed clothes at Mrs. Perry's back door, when he saw "Gov'nor" for the first time. He had never been at the Perry's before, consequently did not know that the winding walks were so confusing that he had "lost his bearings," so to speak, and was going out of the yard on a different path from the one on which he had entered. Suddenly, as he was swinging the empty clothes basket back and forth, he uttered an exclamation of delight. Directly in front of him—as he turned into a winding pathway—stood the nicest goat he had ever seen, harnessed to a pretty little wagon.

"O!" he cried out. "O!"

No one was in sight.

"I wonder whose it is," he said, talking aloud without being conscious of it.

A man came around from the back of a shed at this moment. He had overheard the boy's remark, and now, seeing the radiant face, smiled grimly.

"You wonder whose it is, do you?" he said. "Well, I'll tell you whose it was. It belonged to little Gene Perry, who died."

Tommy's face clouded. He felt a great pity for little "Gene Perry who died."

"It's too bad he had to die and leave this cunning goat and pretty wagon," he remarked. "I'm sorry."

The man, smothering a desire to laugh at Tommy's original way of expressing sympathy, came near choking, but rallied sufficiently to say:

"Yes, it is too bad that little Gene had to go and leave us, but so far as 'Gov'nor' is concerned, I guess he'll get along all right without him."

"Who's 'Gov'nor?' questioned the boy.

The man laughed.

"'Gov'nor' is this goat—don't you see?" he said.

"O, yes, I see. Well, I think 'Gov'nor' is the nicest goat I ever saw."

"Do you?" asked a sweet voice, and Tommy, turning quickly at the sound of the voice, saw Mrs. Perry (whom he had met when he delivered the clothes) beside him.

"Yes, ma'am; don't you?"

"I certainly do," she said, a sad look coming into her eyes, "and so did my little Gene, who died."

Mrs. Perry and Tommy were alone, Flint, the man-of-all-work, having gone to the rear of the shed.

"I'm sorry your little boy died," Tommy said, real pity shining in his blue eyes.

Mrs. Perry's heart went out to him for his ready sympathy.

"You like the goat so well that you can drive him around the grounds if you want to," she remarked, to his great joy and surprise.

This was the beginning of a new life for Tommy. Flint, at a call from Mrs. Perry, appeared again, and, after giving Tommy some instructions, ordered him to jump into the goat carriage and take the lines.

Such a merry ride as that was. After it was over, Tommy went home with the clothes basket. It was a very poor home that Tommy went to—just two little bare rooms (with, O, so many things needed!), a hard-working mother and a small crippled brother. But he brought a bit of cheer with him when he told them about "Gov'nor" and his ride.

He brought more cheer as the days went by. Mrs. Perry, whose interest continued in the boy who had sympathized so readily with her, told him to come every day when he could, which, of course, he did. Then, when he expressed a desire to clean and rub "Gov'nor," she allowed him to do so, and he did so regularly. When the first week of taking care of "Gov'nor" was up, Mrs. Perry gave him some money, much to his surprise.

"What is it for?" he asked.

"For taking care of 'Gov'nor' she said, and smiled.

"I love to do that," he said. "I'd do it without pay, you know, but—but—," a thought coming into his head that made his face glow.

"But—but?" Mrs. Perry repeated.

"I'll give it to mother to help along."

One day there were some specially fine large red apples sent to Mrs. Perry. She gave one to Tommy, who thanked her, but laid the apple aside to take home, and, by close questioning, she found out that it was laid aside for Tommy's little crippled brother Fred. Soon after that Tommy was allowed to take "Gov'nor" outside of the grounds and bring Fred for an outing in the Perry grounds. Their outing was followed by many more, until the little crippled Fred's slender form and happy face were frequently seen by the Perrys and their guests.

As the days passed on, Tommy was given many little things to do on the grounds. Sometimes it was weeding, sometimes raking, often sweeping the paths. The little home of two rooms was beginning to bloom. Tommy's small earnings were "helping along." The face of the hard-working mother had become less weary, and there were often smiles on his face. Fred's little face was no longer sad, for there was something every day to divert him. He saw many delightful things when he went out in the wagon with Tommy and the "Gov'nor." He even "helped" sometimes when he was in the Perry yard, for kind Mrs. Perry had told him so, and gave him bright pennies when he helped Tommy weed. Even when he did not help she often gave him something—once some fine lettuce, once some ripe strawberries, frequently something appetizing for the family table, or a delightful toy or picture-book that had been dear Gene's.

As for Tommy, as the weeks and months roll by, he is steadily earning money, slowly, to be sure.

"But," he assures his mother, hopefully and cheerfully, "I'll be earning more and more while I am growing big, and when I am big you're not going to ever wash any more—not even one piece."

The mother laughed.

"Won't I be grand!" she said, entering into his spirit. "Who'd 'a' thought three months ago that things would have come to us as they have?" looking about the two small rooms, thankfully. "I'm thankful to the Lord for the change, and—and"—smiling at her elder son, "I'm thankful, too, to Tommy and the 'Gov'nor."—Ernest Gilmore in Western Christian Advocate.

How to Make Up.

Two little people who couldn't agree
Were having a tiff, and were "mad as could be."
They looked at each other in silence a while,
Till a sudden glad thought made one of them smile.

Said she: "Say, you ain't very mad, are you, Bessie?"
"Well, no," said the other, "nor you, are you, Jessie?"
"Then let us make up," little Jessie suggested;
Well, you be the one to begin," Bessie requested.

But that didn't suit. So the tiff lingered still,
While the small-sized disputants were claiming their will,
When, what do you think brought at last sunny weather?
Just this—they agreed to begin both together.

A Riddle for Thanksgiving Day.

When Johnny woke up Thanksgiving morning the end of his nose felt so cold he thought Jack Frost must have been taking a bite off of it.

"It's good our house has got such thick walls, isn't it, papa?" said Johnny, hugging the covers up around him.

"Here's a Thanksgiving riddle for you, Johnny," said papa, who was standing at the shaving glass, and every now and then blowing his cold fingers; "what is the difference between a house and a home?"

"That's too hard for me to guess," complained Johnny; "can't I have somebody to help me?"

"Yes," said papa, smiling, "if you can't guess it by yourself."

I don't think Johnny tried very hard; he thought Aunt Sue would tell him in a minute. So he hurried into his clothes, and knocked at Aunt Sue's door. Then he ran down to prayers, and the minute everybody got up from their knees, he called out:

"I know, papa; a home is a house with somebody living in it."

"That won't do," said papa; "a jail is a big house, and, alas! there are a good many people living in it, but it isn't a home. Try again, Johnny."

But Thanksgiving is such a full day that Johnny hadn't much time to puzzle his brain about the house-and-home riddle. There was the sermon at church and the big dinner at home, and uncles and aunts and cousins, and music and games and twilight talks, and Thanksgiving-day was over.

"Hasn't it been a nice day, papa?" said Johnny at bedtime.

"Yes," said papa, "very; but you haven't guessed my riddle yet, Johnny."

"I'm too sleepy, now, papa; you'll have to tell me."

"I'll tell you the first half—a house is meant to keep our body warm; now what is a home meant for?"

Mamma whispered something in the little boy's ear, and he cried out—

"A home is to keep our heart warm!"

And Johnny always thought he had guessed that riddle!—Sunbeam.

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST

A WEEKLY RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER.

ST. LOUIS, NOVEMBER 26, 1908.

HE that works on marble, or brass, or steel, deals with perishable material. The mausoleums and monuments reared by the hand of Art shall crumble to dust. Even the Pyramids of Egypt—the tombs of her Pharaohs—shall one day sink beneath the sands of the desert. The creations of genius which adorn the art galleries of the world will fade from the canvas in the still lapse of time. The proud structures of stone and steel in our great cities, which kiss the sky in their loftiness, shall be leveled to the ground by the hand of Time until not one stone or girder shall be left upon another. All material things shall pass away. But he who helps to mold a human spirit into the likeness of Jesus Christ is doing an imperishable work. The fires and earthquakes and tempests of earth can not harm it. It will outlast sun and moon and stars. It partakes of the life of God Himself and is therefore immortal. All honor to the world's great painters and sculptors! But we would rather be the molder of a child's character into Christ's image than to have wrought the noblest work of art in stone or on canvas.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY

ST. LOUIS.

November 26th, 1908.

To Our Subscribers,

Dear Friends:—This issue of the Christian-Evangelist is devoted especially to our great Bible-school interests, and we are reporting herein, items regarding a number of our schools, and exceedingly regret that we have not the space to report more. We will continue to publish these reports in succeeding issues of this paper, during the month of December.

For the reason that this is the time of year, when Bible-schools are making their arrangements for supplies for the new year, I am taking two whole pages in this paper, to print a copy from our recent descriptive catalogue and price list of Bible-school supplies, and we invite the careful attention of the officers and teachers of all schools, whether they have been using our supplies in the past, or not, because I am firmly convinced that our line of supplies for the new year, is, in many ways, better suited to our schools than ever before. Bible-schools, and Bible-school study, have been making such rapid progress during the last few years, that all publishers of Bible-school literature have had to "sit up and take notice", in order to keep abreast of the times. With our supplies for the new year, we believe we have made such changes as will meet the requirements of the Bible-school of to-day.

Wishing all of our schools an unlimited measure of success, during the coming year, and trusting that it may be our pleasure to assist many of them with our new literature, I am,

Sincerely yours,

WORDS OF GREETING AND GOOD CHEER

FROM

MARION STEVENSON, Assistant Editor Bible-School Department

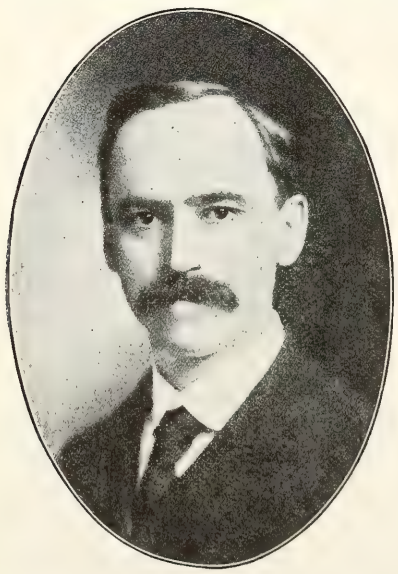
DEAR CO-WORKERS IN THE BIBLE-SCHOOL:

A conservative estimate places the number of people enrolled in the Bible schools connected with the International Sunday-School Association at 25,000,000. One can not contemplate such a multitude without profound emotion. One can not but thank God that he is identified with such a great throng of people, moved by a common purpose to study the Word of God. There is no greater concerted activity under the sun. There is no other movement fraught with greater possibilities.

Facing the year 1909 we would give glad greeting to our ever widening circle of this mighty, growing fellowship. We would have them rejoice in their connection with it, and would encourage them to be strong and full of earnest purpose for the great things of this work of God.

The first fact to be recalled and to be accepted as the foundation of all our Bible school endeavor is, that our Lord Jesus directed his apostles, through the Holy Spirit, to make the organization of a Bible school their first work in establishing the church. For it is written in Acts 2:42, "they continued steadfastly in the apostles' teaching." Upon such a basis of intelligent understanding of the will of God, the church stood and endured, as a matter of course.

In the light of the first fact, it is easy to recognize the first duty of the "good minister of Christ." If he wishes his work to prosper, and the church under his care to be strong and fruitful, his first and unceasing concern will be the Bible school. Into this he will pour his life. Over this school he will exercise vigilant care. Its interests will call for his jealous attention. He will not neglect it a single hour, for out of its increasing efficiency will come the fine quality and the rich abundanee of the fruit of his labor as a worker with God.



The minister who reads our religious papers to-day must have been impressed with a remarkable awakening in many quarters, which have been hitherto only moderately fruitful fields. If he has looked at all carefully, he has seen that renewed life followed the increase of the Bible school. He has learned that in two years one church has baptized one hundred young women from a single organized class. He has heard of a little church which became a living link after the faithful minister reported the whole church in the Bible school. Churches long unheard of have become famous. Ministers whose work attracted circumscribed notice have had their names in all the churches. And back of it all, when he sought the cause, has been found a minister who has awakened to the divinely indicated place of the Bible school in the church.

Our colleges feel the impulse. They are introducing courses of study for the equipment of their ministerial graduates in the work of the Bible school. These lines are written while we are sojourning a few days at Kimberlin Heights. In this unique school one teacher training class has been graduated. Two others are now at work, one taking the first year's work, the other the first year of the advanced course. One-half of the spring semester will be given to formal instruction in the problems of the Bible school. All our colleges are awakening.

This is good cheer to the faithful teachers and workers. Long time they have worked patiently, seeking only the approval of their Master. Now they are to be helped by the whole church, and all the influence it can command.

Thousands of pens are busy hour after hour, day after day, writing the best helps possible to devise for this great educational movement. Miles upon miles are traveled by the apostles of this mighty movement. Thousands gather in conventions and in churches to hear, and to cheer, and to learn. Day and night presses hum as they pour forth the printed page. The mail train is burdened as it rushes on to its destination. It would seem that no agency is idle in this greatest of modern movements of the church.

It is our pleasure and pride and ambition to help. It is our unceasing effort to awaken those yet slumbering. Day after day at our desk, in convention and assembly, by mouth and by pen, it is our delightful privilege to give a word of cheer to those who are marching in the front rank of this mighty host upon whose banner is inscribed the word of God.

We pray God that the year 1909 may be what is, must and will be, the greatest year in the history of the church, through the increasing excellence of our Bible schools. Yours truly,

Marion Stevenson,

AN EPISTOLARY REMINISCENCE

FROM THE VETERAN EDITOR OF BIBLE-SCHOOL LITERATURE,

W. W. DOWLING,

To Superintendents, Officers and Teachers in Our Bible Schools.

DEAR FRIENDS:—

This is the day of the Bible school. More thought and attention is being given to its upbuilding and development to-day than in any former period of its history, since its inception by Robert Raikes, whose institution was not really a Bible school, but a secular school meeting on Sunday.

The Bible school as we have it to-day is very justly regarded as the church's most efficient evangelizing agency and strongest working arm. It is not an institution separate and apart from the church, as some seem to imagine, but the church itself assembled to study and teach the Word of God; "the Berean aspect of church life," as Dr. Vincent says, "whose appropriate symbol is an Open Book and a Brooding Dove, symbolizing Light and Love."

The editors and publishers of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, our foremost weekly journal, have thought it well to devote one issue largely to Bible school interests, and inasmuch as the writer of this article has been identified with Bible school work for many years, and with our Bible school literature from its very beginning, and "having a knowledge of all things pertaining to it," it seemed good to them that he should contribute this brief historical sketch.

The Beginning.—In the month of January, 1865, while acting as an assistant to Elijah Goodwin, Editor of the Christian Record, at Indianapolis, seeing the need of something of the kind, with fear and trembling he issued the first number of The Little Sower, an eight-page monthly. Before this H. S. Bosworth had for a year or two published a little four-page monthly called The Christian Sunday-school Journal, but it had ceased for want of patronage. At the time of the appearance of The Little Sower, a small juvenile monthly called The Gem was being published in Philadelphia by that eminent pioneer preacher and writer, James Challen. It was not a Sunday-school paper distinctively, but as an evidence of good-will for the new Western enterprise, The Gem was discontinued and the subscription list turned over to The Little Sower.

The Growth.—The new paper seemed to meet a "real want," and at the beginning of the second year was changed to a semi-monthly, and at the beginning of the fourth year, in 1869, it appeared as a weekly. From that time onward until the present day, not a single week has gone by in which the same Editor has not sent out a messenger to the Sunday-school hosts. The contributors to The Little Sower in those early years included such eminent writers as Isaac Errett, Elijah Goodwin, Mrs. Goodwin, James Challen, O. A. Burgess, Dr. R. T. Brown, Prof. S. K. Hoshour, President A. R. Benton, Miss Lydia R. Putnam, Mrs. M. O. Johnson, Mrs. Maria R. Butler, F. M. Green, N. J. Aylesworth, and others equally noted, a few of which "remain until the present day, but the most of whom have fallen asleep."

Enlargement.—In the year 1869 the same Editor and publisher issued the first number of a monthly for teachers and advanced pupils, called The Morning Watch. This was the first paper among our people which made a feature of pictures and biographical sketches of ministers, teachers and prominent church workers. The Watch continued until 1880, when it was changed to The Gospel Teacher, and in 1882 became The Christian Sunday-School Teacher, and this monthly was superseded in 1891 by Our Young Folks, for three years as a semi-monthly, and after that, and until the present, as a weekly. During all these years the journal was, and still is, under the same editorial management. A few years after the beginning of The Morning Watch, a paper for the primary classes was started, first under the title of The Little Watchman by L. H. Dowling, at Bloomington, Ill. Later the office was removed to St. Louis and after a time the title of the paper was changed to The Sunny Side, and still later to The Little Ones.

The Sunday-school convention that originated the International Series of Bible Lessons met in Indianapolis in 1872. Of this convention the writer had the honor of being a member, and took part in the discussions, and cast his vote for the adoption of the series. The only other members of the Christian Church present and taking part in the proceedings were L. L. Carpenter, F. M. Green, N. J. Aylesworth and Ira J. Chase. The year following the international series began. They were expounded in the columns of The Morning Watch, and in its various successors by the Editor, and on every lesson of the series since then he has written exegetical notes, and the most of the time for the different grades of the school.

Consolidations.—In 1877, the writer removed from Indianapolis to St. Louis, and joined forces with J. H. Garrison and J. H. Smart, who were the editors of The Weekly Christian, published by the Christian Publishing Company, which then became the publishers of The Little Sower, The Gospel Teacher and The Sunny Side. In 1883, The Central Book Concern, of Chicago, of which B. W. Johnson and F. M. Call were the moving spirits, and which published The Evangelist and a series of Sunday-school papers, was merged in the Christian Publishing Company. The two weekly journals united as The Christian-Evangelist. The Little Sower became the Sunday-School Evangelist, and later The Young Evangelist, and the Sunny Side was thenceforth known as The Little Ones.

In 1886 a series of Lesson Quarterlies and Lesson Annuals was begun. The editorial work on these was shared by B. W. Johnson, until the time of his death in 1895, since which time it has been done mainly by the writer of this sketch.

Expansion.—In 1903 a new weekly, called The Round Table, a paper for boys and girls, was added to the list. In 1907 teachers' editions of the various quarterlies were inaugurated, and Marion Stevenson added to the editorial force, on whom the work on these new quarterlies has largely devolved, and by whom it has been most acceptably performed. With the advent of the new year another weekly and additional monthlies are to be inaugurated, and the editorial department of Bible school literature pledges its best efforts to hasten the dawn of the millennial days, "when the knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters do the sea."

Fraternally yours,

Wm. Worth Dowling.

Editorial

A Sign of the Times.

To the students of social phenomena in the realm of religion, there is nothing more remarkable or noteworthy than the modern revival in Sunday-school work. It is not simply a new interest in the child, and a higher appreciation of the value of early religious training, that is back of this revival; it is something deeper than that. Religion itself, and Bible teaching as a means of inculcating that religion, are being recognized to-day as never before, as normal, vital, and controlling forces in the life of man.

The adult Bible class, which is so prominent a feature of the current revival in Sunday-school interest, is vastly significant of this fact. Time was when the Sunday-school was supposed to be for children and very young people, while the grown-up members of the church felt free to remain away from its sessions unless employed as teachers. Now the feeling is gaining ground in all our churches that the Sunday-school, or Bible school, is a school for the whole church gathered together either to teach or to be taught the Word of God. Large classes of adults are now being formed in all our schools, composed of men and women who have not hitherto felt the necessity of systematic Bible study. This fact shows that the Sunday-school has gained a higher place of honor and of importance in the thought of the church than it has hitherto held. But this would hardly have been possible if there had not come, also, a deeper sense of our religious needs, a recognition of religion as an essential factor in the normal life of a normal man, and of the Bible itself as preeminently the Book of God, which contains the only true information concerning that religion.

Along with this adult Bible class movement there has come a demand for a higher standard of teaching, and a teacher training movement to meet that demand. With the example of our public schools before us, in which teachers are required to take certain courses of study to prepare themselves for the work of teaching, it is not strange that the church has come to see that its standard of teaching in the Sunday-school must not be inferior to that which prevails in the public schools if we are to retain our hold on the young men and women who are trained in the public schools. It, too, is a normal development based on sound reason and the necessity of the case.

Care must be taken to avoid the impression that this revival of Sunday-school interest, both as respects the adult Bible class and teacher training, is a spasmodic movement which can be carried forward by any hip-hurrah method. It is only in its beginnings yet, and needs the intelligent, fostering care of the church, and of experts in this line of work. We are glad to give large space this week to this important department of church work. The Sunday-school is nothing less than the church carrying on its educational and evangelistic work at the most strategic period of human life. Pastors and church officials can not give too much attention and thought to the kind of teachers employed, the character of the teaching that is being done, the kind of helps that are being used, the kind of music that is being sung, the grading and classification of the scholars and whatever affects its efficiency as an agency for Christian work. We can not too strongly urge upon all who value the future of the church, of the nation and of Christian civilization, to give their time, influence and means for the promotion of Sunday-school work.

Along with this revival of interest in the Sunday-school there is sure to come, as one of its results, more and better religious training in the home. There is, after all, no such school for planting the seeds of religious instruction in the fertile mind of childhood as the home when it is permeated by religious influence. The children properly taught in the Sunday-school, will carry their religious ideas into the home, and parents now going into the adult Bible classes will be better prepared to impart religious instruction to their children.

All hail then to the Sunday-school revival! May it continue until all the church is in the school and all the school is in the church, and both are mighty evangelistic agencies for reaching the untaught and the unsaved!

"Where the Scriptures Speak."

One of the mottoes which we all revere as expressing a great cardinal principle of our movement when rightly interpreted, is the saying of Thomas Campbell, "Where the Scriptures speak we speak; where the Scriptures are silent we are silent." Any attempt to get at the real meaning of this statement of Campbell must raise the question, "Where do the Scriptures speak?" In other words, How are we to understand the phrase, "Where the Scriptures speak"?

This motto of Thomas Campbell, uttered in the early part of the nineteenth century, is but the modern form of the older statement made by Rupertus Meldenius of the seventeenth century: "In things essential, unity; in things non-essential, liberty; in all things charity." When Thomas Campbell's motto is placed in its historic setting, it is seen to be a protest against human creeds, and an assertion of Christian liberty. It is obvious that he means by the phrase, "Where the Scriptures speak we speak," to assert the utmost loyalty to the Scriptures; and by the phrase, "Where the Scriptures are silent we are silent," to repudiate human authority in religion, and to claim the freedom which we have in Christ Jesus. That is essentially the meaning of the older phrase, "In things essential, unity; in things non-essential, liberty." The leaders in this movement also simplified the phrase, "In things essential, unity," by saying "In faith unity;" and the phrase, "things non-essential" they translated, "matters of opinion." There is perfect harmony of meaning, therefore, between the earlier saying of Rupertus Meldenius and the later motto of Thomas Campbell. They both assert, in unmistakable terms, that in certain essential and fundamental things, which constitute the faith, there must be unity in order to a united church; and that in certain other things, not essential or fundamental, there must be liberty of opinion in order to union.

This brings us now to the question, "Where do the Scriptures speak to us?" Where is to be found their message to men under this dispensation? Jesus' own idea of the value and function of the Scriptures is stated in the passage where He rebukes the Jews for their misuse of their holy writings. "Ye search the Scriptures," He said, "because ye think that in them ye have eternal life; and these are they which bear witness of me; and ye will not come to me, that ye may have life" (John 5: 39, 40). The Old Testament Scriptures to which Jesus, of course, referred, bear witness of Christ. Their chief function was to prepare the way for Christ, as it is the chief function of the New Testament to give us an authentic account of the Christ himself when he appeared. The supreme value of the Bible, therefore, as a whole, is its testimony concerning Christ, first in prophecy, then in history. Eternal life is to be found in the Scriptures only in the sense that they point us to Christ, who is "the way, the truth and the life." The Scriptures can not save us, except as they lead us to Christ, in whom alone there is life.

It is easy to see, in the light of these facts, why Jesus himself made the truth concerning his messiahship and divinity the foundation of his church, and the confession of that truth the true confession of faith. It is also clear that we do no violence to the saying of Thomas Campbell when we interpret it to mean, "Where Christ speaks, we speak; where He is silent, we are silent." The Scriptures speak only to put us under the tuition of Christ. "The law was a pedagogue," says Paul, "to bring us to Christ," the real Teacher.

The Scriptures, then, speak to us, authoritatively, in Christ, and where He speaks we speak, requiring of men, as conditions of church membership and fellowship, only those things which He requires, and imposing no new condition which He has not imposed in order to the maintenance of such fellowship. To wander away from this sure foundation, which has been laid in Zion, into the vague and uncertain problems of Old Testament criticism and interpretation, seeking to make uniformity of opinion on these mooted questions the basis of our fellowship, is to forfeit our heritage, and to lose our distinctive mission as a religious movement.

Editor's Easy Chair.

The modern, up-to-date Sunday-school is an evolution. It bears small resemblance to the institution called by that name, which some of us knew back in childhood. Do we not recall it? The superintendent always read an entire chapter, even if it contained three score and ten verses. The prayer was frequently proportionately long. The singing was usually from the hymn book and without instrumental accompaniment. Sometimes the tune was pitched too high, and sometimes too low. Two or three starts would often be necessary before a suitable pitch was hit, and as many persons would try their luck in striking the keynote! It can not be denied that there was an element of humor in all this, but we fear the element of worship was often dormant. The teachers, for the most part, were drafted into service when it was seen who were present, and classes formed according to the number of teachers. The lesson would often be selected after the school met. A few of the older brethren formed a Bible class in the "Amen corner" of the church and argued over theological questions, and wrestled with knotty passages. The children—bless their hearts!—had but little spiritual food adapted to their capacities and needs. This was before the day of maps, charts, blackboards, lesson-helps and primary teachers. But even this crude effort to hold a Sunday-school was not without good results. The habit in those days of memorizing passages planted the seed of the Kingdom in many a child-heart, which brought forth its harvest in after years. Many an active Christian man and woman, to-day, cherishes tender memories of the old schoolhouse or country church, where, in the Sunday-school, he received his first religious impressions. If, in its crude and undeveloped form, the Sunday-school, by its fruits, vindicated its right to be, how much more potent for good is the Sunday-school of to-day!

Few scenes are more animated and inspiring than a real live Sunday-school, organized after the manner of our best schools, and engaged in its work. Everything is orderly, and yet every one seems joyous and jubilant, and glad to be there. The tap of the bell brings silence, the announcement of the hymn, and then how inspiring the music! Angelic music may be sweeter, for aught we know, but nothing in the way of music on this earth sounds more sweetly to our ears than the clear, happy voices of children singing the praises of Jesus. We wouldn't wonder if angels sometimes lean on their harps and listen to the music of children voices, singing of the love of him whom they, too, worship and adore. Now comes the division into classes, and each group is intent on what its teacher is saying, while all minds and hearts seem to be centered upon the great lesson-truths of the hour. One of the sweetest and strongest ties on this earth is that which binds together the teacher and pupils of his or her class. The child, as it grows up to mature years, will forget many acquaintances and friends of childhood and youth, but the love for the Sunday-school teacher will be cherished as long as memory performs its office. The personal contact which the teacher has with his pupils gives him a leverage which only that of the parents themselves excels in its power to elevate the lives of the children. It must often be a substitute for parental influence in the cases of such children as are deprived of religious training in the home. No teacher that realizes his responsibility in this respect can fail to go before his class without invoking the blessing of God upon his efforts, after he has made the most painstaking preparation. The arrows of truth which he lodges in the child-heart will, by the grace of God, be found in the heart of the man or woman, an abiding and controlling influence in the life.

It is well to get the whole church into the Sunday-school and to form large adult Bible classes, but the fact remains that the chief glory and strategic value of the Sunday-school are to be found in the children who attend and whose young lives are influenced by it. To grown up men and women the Sunday-school is a place for studying the Bible and learning more about Christ and his kingdom. That is vastly important; but to the child the Sunday-school is more than that. It is atmosphere; it is association; it is the blending of a multitude of holy influences, which mold its life and character. One of the best things about getting the adults into the Bible school, including the parents of the children, is that their attendance dignifies the school in the eyes of the young, and enables it to retain its hold on the young men and women longer than it otherwise could. But why shouldn't the older people go to the Sunday-school for their own sakes, either as teachers or to be taught? We all need this stimulus in Bible study that comes through association with others so engaged, and we may all be profited by coming into close contact with the young. An hour or two spent in such inspiring associations and in the study of the word of God, is infinitely better than the same time spent in one's home poring over the Sunday paper, yielding not only greater happiness for the time but more enduring good for all time. This attendance of the church on its Sunday-school service will tend greatly to both deepen and widen the spiritual life of the church, and to make it fruitful in every good word and work. Better Sunday-schools and larger Sunday-schools ought to mean better churches, as well as larger churches, and a more robust and aggressive type of Christianity.

Sometimes there is a disposition to decry the value of the uniform lessons of the International Series, and the use of lesson helps. But those of us whose memories go back to the condition of the schools before the introduction of uniform lessons and lesson helps, know what a mighty impetus has been given to Sunday-school work by these agencies. No doubt the lesson helps are often abused, and they are so abused when they are made a substitute for the Bible itself; but there is no reason to doubt that the lessons are more intelligently understood and taught in the average Sunday-school throughout the world by the aid of these helps than they could possibly be without them. It may be admitted that the International Lesson Committee has been slow in adapting its series of lessons to the highest ideals of Sunday-school work, but it has, no doubt, kept in mind the actual condition of the majority of schools, and has aimed to make as rapid progress as the schools could stand. The introduction of uniform Bible lessons throughout the world we believe to have been one of the greatest strides forward ever made in Sunday-school work, and it has been a mighty factor in bringing the Sunday-school to where it is to-day, and, also, in promoting the spirit of Christian unity, which is manifesting itself in so many ways at the present time. We should, in our judgment, be slow in breaking step again and dispensing with the system that has produced so much good. It has served to concentrate the best Bible scholarship of the world on the Sunday-school topics which are being simultaneously studied in all schools. Of course, there should be the utmost care exercised that in the preparation of the lessons there should be close conformity to Scriptural teaching. The tendency to subordinate this consideration to mere cheapness, where there is a difference of only a few cents, is to be deprecated.

It is one of those gray, somber days, in which the skies are veiled with clouds and the light of the sun is dimmed by the smoke and mists which seem to fill the atmosphere. But shall we despond and allow the gloom without to shadow our spirits? We should not, for is it not certain that these clouds will vanish, and the sun will shine again with its former luster? It is often so in our moral skies. Some good brethren seem to be alarmed just now because of some dark clouds of controversy that are floating across our moral heavens as if they contained the besom of destruction beneath their black wings. These differences are to be deprecated, but they are no occasion for alarm. They have been and will be. They are a part of the penalty of being a free people. The sun would be shining to-day if it were not for the intervening fog. When the fog of misunderstanding shall lift from our Zion the sun of peace will shine upon us as of yore. What is needed just now is calm, dispassionate, clear cut thinking, to clear away the mists and fogs, so that we may see things as they are, to bring the desired peace and unity.

The First Sunday in December

In this last year of the Centennial period it is hoped a greatly increased number of churches will observe C. W. B. M. day. Counting on the response we are assured will be given by our faithful pastors in aiding our auxiliaries in their messages to the churches, we are confidently expecting the receipts from this annual offering to enable us to meet the plans outlined for enlargement this year.

Brethren, where the women are not yet organized, fail us not. Accept this season of education and prayer into full fellowship with your calendar of missionary days. Help us by giving knowledge of the work—the fields, the hospitals, the orphanages, the schools, the zenana and leper work; the evangelization work in the home land and in all lands where we have mission stations. Tell of the efforts to aid the alien brother within our gates. Yes, tell of the dire need of more workers, more women, and take an offering in silver and gold, and, if possible, an offering of women for a new and vigorous auxiliary.

Mrs. M. E. Harlan.

Developing a Missionary Conscience.

The first Lord's day in December will be welcomed this year by more people in our churches than ever before, because of the widening and deepening power of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions.

This day is designed to educate the church in the very principle of missions. It helps to make our people serious, sober and God-fearing givers. It teaches that the church exists not only as a rallying, but as a radiating center; that the goal for every Christian is not salvation, or even sanctification, but service to God and man in saving souls.

We shall be a great people when we fully realize that the "Church of Christ elected, redeemed, washed and endowed, enjoys all her rights and powers and privileges for the one great work of evangelizing the whole world."

The Manchester Situation.

The Christian Woman's Board of Missions, with E. M. Todd as its representative, went to Manchester, New Hampshire, in July, 1907, to inaugurate a work that it was hoped would eventuate in a Church of Disciples of Christ. There was absolutely nothing to begin with—no buildings, no one waiting for us, nor expecting us, nor interested in us. Mr. Todd, his mother and sister have labored faithfully, but without a building they have been handicapped. If a "faithful few" had been there, even a rented hall would have seemed a good place to establish a temporary church home. But to gather people wholly uninterested into such a place and to secure a permanent congregation is always difficult. It was decided that the continuance of the effort must involve at once the expenditure of a large amount of money for a lot and building, and that the work could not in many years be self-supporting. Promise of results commensurate with the effort and outlay was lacking, and when it was found that New Hampshire offered no strong inducements to the Disciples of Christ as a point of strategic importance, Mr. Todd advised the discontinuance of the work. Our board has heartily concurred in his decision. "Fields white to harvest" invite us in many directions, and we are unhesitating in the belief that the decision is right.

Many friends of Mr. Todd, of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, and of the cause of Christ at large, have watched this effort with deep interest. We regret exceedingly their disappointment. This plain statement of facts is meant to give them the true understanding of the situation. We have never had a record of easily giving up. The confidence of our great brotherhood is dear to us, and essential to the mighty work we have to do. God helping us, we shall still deserve it.

"In Faith, Unity: In Opinion, Liberty."

A SYMPOSIUM.

[We have asked a number of well-known brethren to answer briefly the following question: "In the motto, 'In Faith Unity: In Opinion Liberty,' where shall the line be drawn between faith and opinion?" It seems to us that when we have clearly settled that question among ourselves we shall have removed a cause of frequent controversy, and an obstacle to that complete unity that should prevail among us. We give a few of the answers this week, and shall continue the symposium in later issues.—ED.]

To your request I reply that it is in my judgment a difficult task to apply the rule infallibly between faith and opinion. By faith I understand belief in Christ and in what he clearly authorizes. I am accustomed to say: "Where Christ speaks, we speak; and where he is silent, we are silent." Opinion may apply to the incidental and it may mean the shading off of faith into the uncertain. Faith has reference to the authentic and assured; the vital and essential, particularly to the person, Christ. Faith has Christ as its center, and what he teaches and authorizes as its circumference. All outside of that circle might be called matter of opinion, in our religion.

Where the border line between the two is not clear and there be room for honest difference there should be the utmost modesty, courtesy and just deference to the right of others to differ from ourselves. In considering another who differs from us, we should allow for human limitations, for environment and the spirit of free inquiry. We should leave margin for prejudice, misunderstanding, self-interest, natural disposition and the misrepresentations of others.

And whether in connection with matters of opinion or of "the faith" itself on the part of brethren, or of our fellow-men not brethren, we can not escape from the highest law of God to be loving in our religion, after the teaching of the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians and the spirit of Christ, and to study the things that make for peace in the body of Christ.

I. J. Spencer.
Central Christian Church, Lexington, Ky.

In reply to your question, "In the motto, which we all accept and use, 'In faith, unity; in opinion, liberty,' where shall we draw the line between faith and opinion?" it seems to me that we should draw the line just where Christ and his apostles drew it. There was a common faith in the apostolic church, and that was a personal faith in Jesus of Nazareth as the promised Christ of the Old Testament scriptures and the Son of the living God. He who thus held to the head was reckoned a member of the Body. Opinions as to a thousand questions might arouse discussion, and reveal differences, but none of them was to be of sufficient importance to divide the Body of Christ. This has been our position from the beginning; and only as we hold ourselves there shall we avoid the rocks upon which previous efforts at religious reformation have been wrecked. No matter how widely any of my brethren differ from me in their opinions on matters of Biblical criticism, whether they seem to me too radical or too conservative, they are still my brethren in Christ, so long as they believe in my Savior as the Son of God and the Redeemer of men. I can read neither my Bible nor the history of our movement in any other way.

W. F. Richardson.
First Christian Church, Kansas City, Mo.

Replying to your inquiry as to the line between faith and opinion, let me say that I have the full consent of my reason to the distinction made by Thomas Campbell and embodied by the early reformers in their Evangel:—That the acceptance of the divine character and Sonship of Jesus of Nazareth is the essential of faith; that obedience to his will is the test of loyalty; and that the life bearing evidence of the dominion of the Holy Spirit is the one guarantee of genuine discipleship. Whoever so accepts, obeys and repeats Jesus Christ is his disciple.

This I understand to be our position. I believe it to be the teaching of the gospel as we have it in the New Testament. By it, every question of criticism, evidence, philosophy and interpretation is excluded as a test of faith. All such belong to the realm of opinion.

Willis A. Parker.
Emporia, Kan.

It is impossible to draw a hard and fast line between "faith" and "opinion." Every man has to draw his own line, and there will be differences in judgment to the end of time. As for myself, if a man believes in the divinity of Christ and accepts the Bible as an inspired revelation of the will of God, and has a good Christian character, I should give him entire freedom in regard to everything else.

James M. Philputt.
Union Avenue Church, St. Louis.

In answer to your inquiry concerning our motto, "In faith, unity; in opinion, liberty," let me say that it seems to me that in later days we have obscured that liberty in matters of opinion which the fathers in this reformation made so prominent. I should say, make nothing else a test of

NEW LIFE

Found in Change to Right Food.

After one suffers from acid dyspepsia, sour stomach, for months and then finds the remedy is in getting the right kind of food, it is something to speak about.

A N. Y. lady and her young son had such an experience, and she wants others to know how to get relief. She writes:

"For about fifteen months my little boy and myself suffered with sour stomach. We were unable to retain much of anything we ate.

"After suffering in this way for so long I decided to consult a specialist in stomach diseases. Instead of prescribing drugs, he put us both on Grape-Nuts and we began to improve immediately.

"It was the key to a new life. I found we had been eating too much heavy food, which we could not digest. In a few weeks after commencing Grape-Nuts, I was able to do my housework. I wake in the morning with a clear head and feel rested and have no sour stomach. My boy sleeps well and wakes with a laugh.

"We have regained our lost weight and continue to eat Grape-Nuts for both the morning and evening meals. We are well and happy and owe it to Grape-Nuts." "There's a Reason."

First Christian.

William A. Crutcher, supt.; E. J. Kell, asst. supt.; Lillian Crowther, sec.; L. Rask, treas.; Martha Schleinat, librarian; John Wells, chorister; Mary B. Roberts, pianist. Present enrollment, 350, and average attendance 275.

This school is organized according to the international standard. It has adult classes taught by Earle Wilfley, the minister, and Thomas C. Clark. The teacher-training class meets after prayer-meeting on Wednesday evening. The average collection is about $5.50, but the school makes special offerings for missions, some of the classes giving one-fifth of the regular Sunday offering to this cause. It is a down-town church, and a live one.

On November 15 a bottle illustration was used in this school, showing, by the use of chemicals, the effect of sin upon the heart of a child, and the cleansing power of the blood of Christ.

First, a pint bottle of clear glass was filled nearly full of pure water. This, it was explained, represented the heart of a child before consciously doing anything wrong. Then a few drops of tincture of iodine were dropped into the water. This stain represented the first wrong thing that is done. When one has done wrong it is easier to do wrong again; the habit grows. A little more of the tincture of iodine was poured into the water, showing the effect of the habit of sinning. This was repeated until the contents of a one-ounce bottle had been poured into the water, which became very black and ugly.

The children were then asked if it would purify the water if the outside of the bottle were washed. They, of course, made a negative reply. They were then asked if good clothes could cleanse a heart blackened by sin. It was explained that only Christ could make the heart pure and clean again. When we take him into the heart and life he drives out the sin; it can not stay in the same heart together with him. The seventh verse of the Fifty-first Psalm and 1 John 1:9 were taught in connection with this illustration, being called for by the superintendent and read by pupils.

The contents of a one-ounce bottle of saturated solution of hypo-sulphite of soda was then poured into the black fluid, which immediately returned to its natural color. It was explained that this now represented a Christian life, and that a Christian can withstand, by the power of Christ, the temptations that come in his way. A few drops of the tincture of iodine that remained in the small bottle were dropped into the water without staining it, thus showing the power of a Christian, by the aid of Christ, to resist temptation. Jesus in the life enables us to resist temptations to which we yielded before.

After the illustration the pastor was asked to extend an invitation to the school, and the children were earnestly invited to give their young hearts to Christ.

Fourth Christian.

Mrs. Evelyn Davis, supt.; W. F. Hopper, asst. supt.; W. H. Knoblock, sec.; B. F. Davis, treas.; Earle Chamberlain, librarian; William Walters, chorister; Urcil Homer, asst. librarian. Enrollment 400; average attendance 298.

The school is graded, there being primary, junior, intermediate and adult departments. It has a Junior Bible class organized, and a Berean Class of men and women. Both of these are registered with the International S. S. A. There is a teacher-training class of 60. The average collection is $9.45. The school has given this year, to the Benevolent Association, $23.15; to foreign missions, $50; to Living Link, $25; to the state Bible school work, $5.00; to city Sunday-school work, and will take a Thanksgiving offering for the Benevolent Association. The primary department has a superintendent, a secretary and four teachers, while the main school is controlled by eight officers and twenty teachers. There is a monthly business meeting, and a weekly meeting for lesson study. The surplus of the funds goes into the church treasury, and this amounts to about $150 a year. The total collections, so far this year, have amounted to about $435, exclusive of the special missionary and benevolent offerings. The school uses the Christian Publishing Company's supplies.

Hammett Place.

Elmer D. Sanford, supt.; J. C. Peers, asst. supt.; Clarke Sanford, sec.; Sidney Baldwin, asst. sec.; W. T. W. Byrum, chorister; Mrs. A. F. Anderson, pianist. Enrollment, 203; average attendance, 140.

This school is organized in 13 classes, from primary to Bible class. There is a men's class in addition to the Bible class, which is an auxiliary to the Men's Berean Association of the church proper. There is no teacher training class at present, though there was at one time. The school is well equipped as to rooms, etc. Its average collection is about $15.50. It has no treasury, but co-operates with the church. Contributions are made to both home and foreign missions. On November 29 the Orphans' Home children are expected to become members of the school, the expectation being that they will move to their new quarters on Euclid and Greer avenues by that time. The custom is for them to attend the nearest Christian church.

Union Avenue.

J. J. Searcy, supt.; W. C. Dunaway, asst.; F. M. Wright, sec.; Frank Bills, asst.: Miss Jennie Taylor, primary supt.; Mrs. George L. Williams, home department supt.; Ray Thomson, absentee sec.; Miss B. R. Moore, cross and crown sec. Enrollment, 600; average attendance, 425.

This is a graded school, having primary, junior, intermediate and senior departments. The classes receiving special attention at present are the Ladies' Adult and Brotherhood classes, both of which have just been organized, neither having a large attendance. The teacher-training course is being taught to the school in supplementary lessons. The equipment is among the best in the city, there being separate class rooms in a room specially set apart for Sunday-school work, with a seating capacity of 800. There is an orchestra of five pieces. The average weekly collection is about $13. All Sunday-school funds are paid into the building fund, and at present the expenses of the school are paid from the current expense fund of the church. This school has made the largest contributions to the Benevolent Association, the last offering being $607.58. Its Children's Day offering for foreign missions was $66.25. The offering for home missions has not been taken for this year, at the time of writing, but usually amounts to from $40 to $50. There is a Cradle Roll (photographic) with an enrollment of 50, and the home department enrolls 100. The primary is one of the best of the school's departments, having an enrollment of 110, and an attendance of 83 on Nov. 15. This department is in charge of Miss Taylor and Miss Margaret Kuhlman, both of whom are trained kindergartners and very efficient.

Compton Heights.

George H. Gibson, supt.; asst. superintendents—James E. Winterton, adult department, Miss Alma Neirather, intermediate, Miss Ila McCormick, junior, Miss Annie West, primary. Enrollment 608; average attendance 385.

This school is graded throughout. It has a Junior Bible class of young men and women, with an enrollment of about 100. They have a literary society in connection with their class work. There is a men's class, also, of about 40, and a woman's class of 60, as well as a teacher-training class. What is needed above all else is more rooms. The equipment in all other ways is good, there being maps, blackboards, charts, etc. The average collection is $12.25. There is a good mission school conducted by members of the home school. This, also, contributes regularly to mission work. F. N. Calvin is the pastor of the church, and says this is the best organized and best all-round Bible school he has ever seen. There are frequent additions to the church from the school. It will be noted that each of the assistant superintendents is the superintendent of a department. There is a regular course of supplemental instruction, and promotions from classes and departments once a year—the first Sunday in June.

Hamilton Avenue.

William S. Campbell, supt.; J. W. Perry and C. C. Cowdry, assistants; Elmer Shepard, secretary; W. W. Wagner, home department supt.; Miss Myrtle Morley, primary supt.; Paul Stevenson, birthday secretary; Fred Richt, organist.

This school has two classes. Each has perfected a class organization, with teachers and officers. The officers are elected at stated periods and regular business meetings are held monthly. One of these classes is a Bible class, with an enrollment of about 75, and an average attendance from 45 to 50. Its membership is composed of men and women of the church. J. Frank Merriman is the teacher and L. M. Tabb is his assistant. Mr. Merriman has been very successful in securing the co-operation of the adult members of the church in the Bible school work. There is a regular set of officers and committees, and the class is divided into groups of five, each in charge of a captain, whose duty is to look after those absent. Special captains are appointed for new pupils and to have charge of and look after visitors. Mr. Tabb, the assistant teacher, is deeply interested in the work. The Junior Bible class, which is taught by Dr. and Mrs. T. R. Ayars, has a large enrollment, composed of the young men and women of the church. Attention is given to social features and entertainments, many of which are held at the home of the leaders. The school is fortunate in having such faithful and enthusiastic workers as Dr. and Mrs. Ayars. The teacher-training class uses Marion Stevenson's book, and the school has the usual equipment provided by city Bible schools. The average weekly collection is about $9 to $10, and the finances are managed by the church board. The usual missionary days are observed, and $200 was raised for the Benevolent Association last Easter.

TUXEDO PARK, MO.

F. E. Sawyer, supt.; A. A. Mahoney, asst.; J. E. Bennett, sec.; W. T. Clark, treas.; Sue Anderson, pianist; Mrs. Lulu Jones, supt. of primary department. Enrollment 142; average attendance 106.

This school is partially graded. Its Adult Bible Class was reorganized in September, and has an attendance of 16, and is growing. L. P. Crigler is the teacher, and Clementine Halliday treasurer. In its equipment there are a blackboard and several good maps. The teachers are supplied with quarterlies and such special publications as are needed for individual classes. The school has taken the Babies' Home of the National Benevolent work as the especial object of its missionary endeavor. It has just started a red and blue contest, and on the Sunday before reporting the attendance was 134, and the collection for the past two Sundays more than $6. The primary department has about 30 regular attendants, and many Sundays every pupil is present. Mrs. Jones devotes much time to her department during the week.

KANSAS CITY, MO.

First Christian.

Barclay Meador, supt.; Goodwin Creason, asst.; W. Frank Gentry, asst. treas.; Bayard C. Richardson, sec.; Miss Pearl Goodwin, librarian. Enrollment, 425; average attendance 250.

This school is organized in departments. Its equipment is inadequate as to building, but good as to maps, charts, musical instruments, etc. Its weekly collection is about $7, and it observes Children's Day for foreign missions, the collection last June being $200, and Rally Day in November, with an offering last year of over $106. Teachers and other officers manage the finances as they manage other phases of the school's work. There is a lunch each Wednesday evening at 6:30 for the workers, each paying ten cents if in attendance. This is prepared by the women in twos and threes, and is followed by a study of the Sunday-school lesson, with now and again a conference concerning the work. The superintendent has a special table at the lunch, and invites certain workers to sit with him in order that he may confer with them about this or that department. There is a committee of the board of church officers which exercises constant supervision over the school. The members of this committee attend. The superintendent and the pastor of the church are ex officio members of this committee. Its work is in perfect accord with the teachers and officers of the school. As to special classes, there is an adult department with a superintendent, who is assistant to the superintendent of the school. There are seven classes in the department, including Baraca for young men and Philathea for young women, all of which are going to organize according to the international standard. In the intermediate department there has been organized a Junior Baraca for boys from fourteen to eighteen. There are five classes in the primary department, and 112 members in the home department.

Linwood Boulevard.

Charles S. Parker, supt.; William F. Stone, assistant supt.; Henry Parsons, second asst.; Mrs. Hattie Peterson, primary supt.; William Stamp, secretary; Mary Witters, organist; Pauline Campbell, assistant. Enrollment, 425; average attendance, 275.

The school has two departments, advanced and primary, each being divided into two classes, graded according to age and advancement in work. There is a Bible class and a teacher training class. There is not much equipment, as the school is new. The weekly collection is $10. There is a Sunday-school visitor, who is paid partly by the Sunday-school and church. The school contributes $50 to state work and $20 to the Orphans' Home at St. Louis.

BALTIMORE, MD.

Christian Temple.

D. C. W. Ward, supt.; D. B. Barnette, Jr., gen. asst.; John B. Showacre, asst. morning session; W. A. Waltermeyer, asst. afternoon session; A. E. Sanders, gen. sec; F. E. Buckingham, treas.; Roland Brohaun and George Pickering, asst. secretaries; V. A. Sill, asst. treas. Enrollment 783, average attendance 500.

This school has a cradle roll, beginners' primary, junior, intermediate, senior, normal, organized classes of young ladies and men, home department and Chinese department. The young ladies and young men's classes are separated and mixed, and there is one Philathea class. The school has teacher-training classes and Christian Temple Seminary, from which most of the teachers are drawn, gives a three years' course of study in the Bible. This is an incorporated body, with Peter Ainslie, the pastor, as dean. The equipment is as follows: Junior and intermediate classes in one large room, one normal class room, one room each for primary and beginners, and two for senior classes. The collection averages $12. The finances are managed by a committee in an executive session of the teachers' council. It is a thoroughly missionary school, contributing to all special causes. This school was organized on January 22, 1905, with an enrollment of 92 teachers and scholars, but since then more than 1,200 have been enrolled. The importance of the scholars deciding for Christ has always been recognized as the first issue, and fully 60 per cent are Christians. The school opens at 9:45 a. m., and closes at 5 p. m., there being three sessions—two for Americans and one for Chinese. The international lessons are used for all sessions and there is supplemental work upon which examinations are given during the month of May, and on children's day promotions are made and diplomas awarded. The Temple is admirably located, and Dr. Ward, superintendent, anticipates a larger growth than in the past years. The equipment is of the best, the rooms being large, bright and attractive. There is an orchestra of seven pieces, and the music receives large consideration. Clear, Scriptural instruction by efficient teachers is the aim. The home, cradle roll and Chinese departments add 189 to the numbers. All departments report at the monthly business council of the officers and teachers, and all business of the school is transacted at that time. The present officers have been continued in their position since the beginning of the school, and the prosperity and growth, says the superintendent, is largely due to the efficiency of these and the teachers, who have worked in perfect co-operation to the one end. They have the confidence of the church and the community, and are alive to everything that looks to the betterment of the school.

KIRKSVILLE, MO.

J. W. Hatcher, supt.; R. Minter, asst.; Miss Edna Millay, secretary; Miss Ethel Jack, assistant; Miss Juanita McGuire, pianist. Enrollment, 325; average attendance, 267.

There is no home department or cradle roll, but a general organization, with classes for the various grades of pupils. One class of girls of 15 is completely organized. The classes for normal students and students of osteopathy have proved quite helpful. A teacher training class is to be organized in January. The school is handicapped for class rooms, there being but two besides the auditorium and chapel rooms. In the near future others are to be added. Classes are supplied with graded helps, and some with maps and blackboards. The average collection is about $7.40. A minimum for each Sunday is set, and the collection never goes below that, while there are special collections for specific purposes. Through the regular church offering there has been sent $12.50 both to state missions and home missions. The Foreign Society received $53.69. The local church has been helped to the amount of over $75. The superintendent attributes much of the interest in the school to the individual work of the teachers who, he believes, on the average are as efficient as can be found in any school. There are no special features, but earnest, consecrated efforts have proved to give good results.

DANBURY, CONN.

Arthur Cattermole, supt.; Harry W. Hawley and William Rice, asst. supts; Joseph W. Wooley, sec.; Ernest Bailey, treas.; W. W. Stevens, chorister; Miss Clara Peck, pianist; Mrs. William Bard, primary supt.; Miss Kate Benedict, home department secretary. Enrollment 268, average attendance 151.

This school has primary, intermediate and senior departments, and is only partially graded. It has a young men's organized class, as well as a young women's organized class. It has a fair equipment, but its greatest need is teachers. The average offering this year has been $12.20, with a total so far of $561. There has been a steady increase in offerings. During the past three years they have been as follows: $457, $517, $649. The increase in the missionary offerings to the home and foreign field has also been marked, going from $162 up to $286, with $191 so far this year. The school supports the state work and the Benevolent Association. Mr. Cattermole thinks it is one of the most liberal according to its ability. The matter of finances has never caused anxiety. Some of the classes have taken up special lines of work, such as supporting a child in India, temperance work and home mission work. There is a good Home Department of 106 members, and each week a copy of the Young Folks is greatly enjoyed by these.

OWENSBORO, KY.

First Christian.

R. T. Whittinghill, supt.; Guthrie Birkhead and W. D. Westerfield, assistants; Miss Nancy Owen, sec.; Charles Smith, treas.; Mrs. Bessie Gillim and Lytie D. Snoddy, librarians; Miss Julia Harper and Preston Hayden, bookkeepers. Enrollment 713; average attendance 505.

The school has a good organization, there being beginners, primary, junior, intermediate and adult departments, with superintendents and cradle roll superintendent. It is graded throughout, and observes a regular promotion day. The Twentieth Century class for men is the largest in the brotherhood, with an enrollment of over 200, and an average attendance of 140. The "Ich Dien," an intermediate boys' class, has an enrollment of 50. It is organized, and has debates, drills, etc. The training class is just finishing, and about two-thirds of the original class are completing the second year's course. The equipment is good. There is a Sunday-school room with separate rooms for each class. The beginners, primary and Twentieth Century men are in rooms apart from the main school. Musical instruments, maps, charts, blackboards and a good library add to the efficiency. The weekly collection is over $15. Bills are O. K'd by the superintendent, and paid by the treasurer. The organized adult classes use one-fourth of their collection for class use. Classes make a Centennial offering in regular rotation each Sunday, and the school united with the church in the support of a foreign and home missionary.

The superintendent writes that there are two features of the Owensboro Sunday-school that it would probably be worth while to mention here.

First of these is the sense of welcome and "at-homeness" that pervades the whole school. A special effort is made at every session to make each one who comes feel welcome and that their presence is gratifying to both the officers and the teachers and that it will be a personal spiritual benefit to each one to come again. No one can enter the school building without being met with a hearty handshake and a bright "Good morning" from six or seven persons at the front door, as he enters. Whenever one is absent, a letter, postal, telephone call or visit is sure to follow the next week from the teacher, one from the absentees committee, one of the superintendents or pastor—according as it may seem necessary.

Again, this Sunday school has a complete system of bookkeeping. Separate cards are made out for each pupil as he enters for the first time. On these cards the pupil's date of entrance, birthday, church membership and place of residence are placed, together with numbers from 1 to 52 that correspond to each week in the year. When one is absent, the number corresponding to that week is checked off, and thus it is possible to find the exact date of absence of any one for the number of years that this system has been in use. Beginning the first of January, different colored cards will be used for the several departments of the school; white for adults, blue for intermediates, orange for primary, etc. In addition to this, a complete card index of each scholar is kept separate from these in the superintendent's office, which serves as a directory for the whole school.

The work of the Twentieth Century Class is well known and only one or two points in regard to it should be mentioned further. The work of the Free Employment Bureau in connection with this class has meant much for its usefulness and power in its work in Owensboro and vicinity. Within the last year seventy-two men have been given positions through this agency. The work of the new pastor and teacher, M. G. Buckner, promises to be as important and valuable as that under the leadership of the former pastor. At this writing there is under consideration a plan to build a gymnasium and social hall in connection with the Sunday-school, which can be used as class-rooms on Lord's day and as gymnasium for the young people during the week, or as a place for the social functions of the church or school.

DES MOINES, IA.

Capitol Hill.

A. J. Small, supt.; Frank Hervey, asst.; Miss Mattie Banghart, sec.; Misses Irene Evans and May Wheeler, assts.; Miss Nora Crooks supt. primary department. Enrollment 425; average attendance 340.

There is a primary department, and the general school of sixteen classes is graded according to size. The Bible class numbers 50; the young men's class 40, while a most remarkable class is one of boys from 11 to 13 years, numbering about 50. A teachers' meeting is held weekly for the study of the lesson. There are rooms for more than half the classes, but not good accommodations for the others. The primary occupies the basement of the church. The average collection is $4.75, and this is taken up in each class. A birthday collection is taken each Sunday for missions. This school is the largest on the east side of the city. For a long time this church had the largest number of any church in this vicinity. The school is seventy-five ahead of its record a year ago, and indications are for an increase this winter. It is competing with its own record, and this is creating much interest. It is hoped that the church building will be enlarged next year.

University Church.

Dr. G. A. Huntoon, supt.; Vinnie Nourse, sec.; J. A. Burton first asst. supt. Enrollment 1,500; average attendance, 800.

The school has three departments—primary, intermediate and Bible. The young ladies' class is taught by Mrs. H. M. Mitchell. This is the largest class of its kind in the brotherhood. There are two teacher training classes. Three hundred and twelve dollars has been given to missions this year. The school is in the best organized and graded condition that it has been for some time. The intermediate department is divided into a boys' and girls' intermediate, with a special superintendent for each, whose duty it is to keep in close touch with the needs. There is a live home department, and also a cradle roll. The hour of meeting has been changed from noon to 9:45 a. m. While there may be a difference for a time, the feeling is that in the long run the school will be benefitted. The superintendent reports great hindrance by lack of equipment and room, two of the college buildings having to be used; but in the near future the new building will give better opportunity for work.

SPRINGFIELD, MO.

Central Christian

R. F. McGlothlan, supt.; T. W. Edwards, asst.; C. V. Wadlow, secretary; A. D. Knobb, treasurer. Enrollment, 380; average attendance, 262.

The school is graded in part. Special classes are Baracas, Philatheas, Builders and Delta Theta. They are a helpful feature and doing good work. Besides the church auditorium, there are six separate class rooms. The primary room is equipped with charts, blackboard and little chairs. The average collection by free-will offerings is $5.75. No special effort is made, but the school contributes regularly to home and foreign missions. Music is one of the special features, the singing being always spirited, and it is greatly aided by an orchestra of from three to six pieces. After the opening exercises the classes march to their rooms and return to the auditorium at the close of the lesson study, while the orchestra plays a march. The Builders' class, consisting of an enrollment of 44 girls from 14 to 16, and taught by Mrs. C. V. Wadlow, contributed $25 this year to the kindergarten work in Japan. The school is making a steady, though not rapid growth.

school grades, and in addition there are two Bible classes, mixed, and an infant class. A teacher training class is to be formed.

L. R. Putnam, supt.; Myrtle Day, asst.; Gladys Stevens, secretary; Harvey Geery, treasurer; Neva Wall organist. Enrollment, 175; average attendance, 135.

There is no special equipment, but this will be modern, as a new church is contemplated. The offerings average about $2.50. Each class is provided with an envelope. There is a birthday box, and Children's day is observed, the entire collection going to missions. At present there is a contest between four of the classes—boys and girls. Each class has selected officers and names, the points of the contest being based upon attendance, collection and deportment. The names are printed in large letters and hung upon the wall. The girls meet at the home of their teacher after school one day each week to plan their work. The contest is creating much interest, and class pins will probably be provided. The attendance increases rapidly. Another contest is between the boys and girls of the high school grade, attendance, collection and church attendance being the points of the contest. Mr. Geery, the treasurer, says the school has found that contests with other schools are very helpful in increasing attendance.

WICHITA, KAN.

Central Church.

I. W. Gill, supt.; W. R. Nealigh, assistant; Virgil Gill, treas.; Ivan Schuler, sec. Enrollment, 475; average attendance, 360.

The school has primary, junior, intermediate and senior departments, four of the classes being organized. One hundred are enrolled in its teacher-training class, and the school is supplied with modern equipment. The average collection is $9.45, and for missions $275 has been raised. This school has been helped wonderfully by the Scoville meeting held in September. Mr. Gill seeks to impress upon his helpers five standards which a teacher should have: (1) Regularity and promptness; (2) Class visitation; (3) Church attendance; (4) Attendance upon teachers' meeting and teacher's-training class; (5) Reading books of method in addition to the great text book.

CLEVER WIFE

Knew How to Keep Peace in Family.

It is quite significant, the number of persons who get well of alarming heart trouble when they let up on coffee and use Postum as the beverage at meals.

There is nothing surprising about it, however, because the harmful alkaloid in coffee—caffeine—is not present in Postum, which is made of clean, hard wheat.

"Two years ago I was having so much trouble with my heart," writes a lady in Washington, "that at times I felt quite alarmed. My husband took me to a specialist to have my heart examined.

"The doctor said he could find no organic trouble, but said my heart was irritable from some food I had been accustomed to eat, and asked me to try and remember what disagreed with me.

"I remembered that coffee always soured on my stomach and caused me trouble from palpitation of the heart. So I stopped coffee and began to use Postum, and I have had no further trouble since.

"A neighbor of ours, an old man, was so irritable from drinking coffee that his wife wanted him to drink Postum. This made him very angry, but his wife secured some Postum and made it carefully according to directions.

"He drank the Postum and did not know the difference and is still using it to his lasting benefit. He tells his wife that the coffee is better than it used to be, so she smiles with him and keeps peace in the family by serving Postum instead of coffee." "There's a Reason."

the Bible. We quote the superintendent's note to the teachers, which he handed out on a recent Sunday morning:

Superintendent's note to the teachers.

1. Will you please be five minutes early at Sunday-school hereafter?

2. The teacher training class on Wednesday night is especially for you. I believe you can not afford to miss it if you expect to teach.

3. We study the Sunday-school lesson after the teacher training class on Wednesday night; also our Round Table.

4. We have twenty most excellent books on Sunday-school work that you ought to be reading. Our librarian, Zilla Sherman, will bring them to you if you speak to her.

I. W. Gill, Supt.

He tries to keep something of this nature before them. Mr. Gill is doing loyal service for the Bible school and is president of the Kansas state work.

Crawford Road.

Manton M. Scott, supt.; L. S. Sowers and Dr. Al Maltz, assistants; Olive Ford, sec.; Winifred Churchill, treas.; Fanny Porter, recording sec. Enrollment 275; average attendance 185.

There is one superintendent for the whole school, and under him superintendents of primary and kindergarten departments. There are organized adult classes with officers. A mixed Bible class with an average attendance of 48 is taught by Prof. H. C. Muckley. There are also two other adult classes, each having an enrollment of about twenty-five. There is a teacher-training class in the first year and one on the advanced work, both taught by the pastor. In the way of equipment there is a large Sunday-school room, with nine class rooms opening from it, and other rooms in other parts of the building. All modern devices are employed, and there are toilet rooms for each department. Collections average about $7.50, not including missionary offerings. All money is deposited and paid out by checks by order of the superintendent. The birthday offering is large. This was the only school in the state to raise its apportionment last year, and it has done this every year that it has been in existence. The secretary says: "I believe that if other schools would adopt our system of enrollment and listing of birthdays they would find that it would pay, in more ways than one. Our birthday offerings have increased more than two hundred per cent., and at the same time we have the names and addresses of every person who has attended our school during the time we have used it. Each person who attends is asked to fill out one of the cards, and especially to give us the date of his birthday; then we transcribe the information on another card, which has a little tip on it, corresponding to the month of his birth. These tips are placed on different parts of the several cards, so that the January tips are first on the left hand side, the February cards a little to the right, and so on, so that the December tip is on the right hand corner. In this way we have the names filed alphabetically, and at the same time we have all birthdays occuring in one month right behind each other. The Sunday before a birthday our secretary will hand the person a little card expressing our congratulations, and with it a smaller envelope for his birthday offering. On this envelope is printed, "Please put in the collection next Sunday," or words of similar import. Each one who makes an offering has the fact noted on his card in our files. The superintendent retains the first card for his reference, while the other card is on file at the church for the use of the minister and other teachers. We also secure a liberal offering from our visitors to whom we mail these birthday cards. Many of these come from other states. (I shall be glad to give any one information concerning this system, provided they enclose stamp for reply; or write Mr. Scott, 525 Schofield Bldg., as it is his own system, and he can tell all about it.) We have nearly 709 cards collected in our school since the first of the year.

NEW ALBANY, IND.

Central Christian.

S. H. Reid, supt.; G. W. Hanen, assistant; Mrs. Hetty Story, primary supt.; Mrs. Hattie Beaver, home department supt.; Mrs. Maud Davis, secretary; F. H. Anschutz, treasurer. Enrollment, 500; average attendance, 370.

The school has cradle roll, beginners, primary, junior, intermediate, senior and home departments. There is a Twentieth Century class of men, with an average attendance of 35, B. F. Cato being the minister. Reuben Robinson teaches the Servo women's class, which has an attendance of 50. One teacher training class meets at the Sunday-school hour, and the other, composed mostly of the teachers, meets Saturday evening in connection with the regular teachers' meeting. There is a large Sunday-school auditorium, with separate rooms for beginners and primary departments and eleven class rooms. The collection averages $10. The finances are managed by the superintendent and treasurer. The school contributes to home, foreign and state work. The superintendent says that the success of this school dates from the visit of Marion Stevenson in 1907. One of the most helpful and inspiring features of the work is the teachers' meeting, at which the time is divided between the lesson and the training course. Thirty graduates are expected for next year. Class organization has been of much benefit to this school. A year ago there was a mixed class, with an average attendance not exceeding ten. Separating the men and women and organizing according to the international standard has produced the largest adult classes in the state. At the time of our report there was to be a banquet at which 200 guests were expected, and R. M. Hopkins, of Kentucky, the principal speaker. Mrs. Cato, the wife of the pastor, is the president of the Servo class, and much of its success is due to her intelligent and untiring efforts. Under the wise leadership of Charles H. Rhusenberger the men's class has grown from a small beginning to an enrollment of nearly 100. This school is now the largest and best in New Albany.

GUTHRIE, OKLA.

E. K. Chester, supt.; Ike Underwood, assistant; Ira Irwin, secretary; H. E. Pentecost, treasurer. Enrollment, 275; average attendance, 180.

All the classes have their president and secretary and regular meetings. There is a teacher training class. The equipment includes three Sunday-school rooms besides the church. The average collection is $4 a Sunday. The secretary uses one of the Christian Publishing Company's model record books, and keeps a ledger account as well as a book account, books being balanced at the end of each quarter. The school contributes to home and foreign missions. It is growing, and in a recent meeting held by John L. Brandt forty of the scholars came into the church. The teacher training class is having fine sessions under the leadership of T. L. Noblitt, the minister, who, though recently come, is doing a great work. Regularity in the attendance of the teachers is a point about this school worthy of notice.

The equipment consists of a small, well-selected library, while there are three Sunday-school rooms besides the main auditorium. Free-will offerings by classes average $9. The school gives about $75 a year to missions. At present it is in a contest with the school at Eldon, and much enthusiasm has been aroused in the church and community. Mr. Harbit, the treasurer, thinks they have the best plan ever tried, and outlines it as follows: Three points for each teacher and officer on time; two points for each pupil on time; one point each for the following: (1) Not more than fifteen minutes late; (2) quarterlies, Bibles or lesson leaves in class; (3) Sunday-school attendants in attendance at church in the morning. There is, also, one point given for each five cents collected or major portion thereof. This produced $27.69 on the Sunday before our information was sent. W. A. Morrison is the minister.

PALESTINE, TEXAS.

George A. Wright, supt.; S. A. Taylor, supt. senior department; E. P. Gohmert, supt. intermediate department; Mrs. J. C. Stevens, supt. primary; J. E. Coryell, treasurer. Enrollment, 550; average attendance, 225.

There are three departments, besides cradle roll and home department. The organized classes are mixed ones, taught by Mrs. Mae Grigsby, of pupils from 16 to 18; the other is taught by the pastor, L. D. Anderson. The age in this runs from 19 to 25. There is an enrollment of 75 in the teacher training class. There is a good building, with ten separate rooms, there being special rooms on the second floor for organized classes. The average collection is about $5, the only effort being to make the school self-supporting. Special offerings are taken from time to time. This school is recognized as the largest among our brotherhood in the entire state of Texas. It is now undergoing thorough organization, and has as a watchword "One Thousand in the Bible School." During the past few weeks the attendance has fallen off to some extent, but for several months it ran over the 300 mark, there being as high as 400 on two occasions. At a recent teachers' meeting it was recommended that each class have class contests, and this feature has been especially helpful in building up the mixed class of the pastor, which now has an enrollment of over 100. There are teachers' meetings every Sunday. It has developed since the school has been divided into departments as a graded school, that the departments are making a special effort to outdo each other in attendance, new scholars and collections. Secretary Cohen says that Palestine is justly proud of the Christian Church Sunday-school, and within a short time those engaged in the work hope to see the one thousand in the school in reality.

Class contests have been found a good thing in creating interest and enthusiasm. A special effort is being made to induce scholars to bring their Bibles to the Sunday-school. Mr. Bates says: "We use the Christian Publishing Company's supplies and find them O. K. The Young Folks is the best out."

MATTOON, ILL.

First Christian.

Fred J. Marxson, supt.; W. E. Scott, assistant; Jessie Conder, sec.; Miss Emma Scott, treas.; Viola Benson, librarian; Frank King, organist. Enrollment 275; attendance 175.

The school has adult, intermediate and primary departments. A men's class has recently been organized, and is taught by Ollie Reich. There is, also, a young men's class, with N. M. McCormick as teacher. Two teacher-training classes meet Wednesday and Thursday evenings. The old class has 80 members and the new 30. Every available space is taken, basement and main auditorium being used. The collections average $4 by the free-will plan. The treasurer takes these and the account is kept by him and the secretary in the usual business fashion. All special days are observed and a good program given instead of the evening service. One prominent feature of the success of this school is the regular attendance of the superintendent. Though a business man, never retiring before twelve on Saturday night, only once, and then because of illness, has he missed a Sunday. He insists that the teachers shall be punctual, in order to hold their classes. His boys' classes are as much interested as the girls'. He says: "I have a class of boys, about twenty-five in number, ranging from twelve to fifteen years. They are organized into a band that has meetings and socials at the homes of the members every three weeks. My young men's class of high-school boys and others numbers 18, with a regular attendance of from 10 to 15. Mr. McCormick, one of our elders and a business man is very successful in dealing with young men. A number of intermediate girls' classes are organized into bands, or clubs, thus promoting interest. There is a young ladies' chorus, chosen from Sunday-school girls alone, which meets weekly, and though but recently organized, promises to be a source of help to church and Sunday-school work."

Three divisions meet in separate places, and there are 43 classes, seven of them being organized. The teacher training class numbers 43. The equipment is excellent, there being twenty class rooms, and each class having a table and blackboard. The school uses stereopticon, and beginners have kindergarten supplies. No special effort is made for offerings, which average something over $10. Payment is being made toward a new building, and the offerings for missions this year will be about $200. The school devotes most of its time to study. Teachers meet Monday evenings for lesson work. A great variety of printed matter is used, and the teachers feel themselves qualified to back this up. The school has doubled twice in four years.

LITTLE ROCK, ARK.

G. D. Henderson, supt.; R. W. Irwin, assistant; L. P. Coleman, supt. senior department; Mrs. L. P. Coleman, intermediate department; Mrs. F. L. Sutton, supt. primary; Charles Finne, sec.; T. O. Howland, treas. Enrollment 300; average attendance 224.

The school has three departments, each with its own superintendent and officers, meeting separately. Practically all the classes are organized. The pastor, J. N. Jessup, teaches the Twentieth Century Bible class for men, and R. P. Pray the Welcome Bible class for women. There is a young men's class called the "Henderson Hustlers" and the "Golden Links" class for young men. The teacher-training class is studying Marion Stevenson's first book. The primary and junior departments have separate class-rooms. When the new church is completed it will furnish separate rooms for every class. The average collection is $5.23. There was an Easter offering to the building fund of $553, and it is expected that another $500 will be given before the year is out. To various missionary causes $50 was given this year. This will be much enlarged when the building enterprise is completed.

DES MOINES, IA.

Dwight M. Lewis, supt.; J. E. Myer, L. Toombs, G. L. Hostetler and Finis Idleman, asst. supts.; Dwight Hill, secretary; George Gray, treasurer; J. Lichty, librarian; O. E. Miller, primary supt.; Mrs. Catherine McKrae, home department supt. Enrollment, 900; average attendance, 525.

The school is organized in departments, primary, boys and girls, senior, adult and home. The Auditorium class, taught by the pastor, has an attendance of about 200. It is under twenty captains. Philathea, a class of young ladies, has more than 100 members; the young men's class, Philo-christo, has more than 100 members. A young married folks' class is being organized and a teacher training class. There is a kindergarten equipment in the primary department. The weekly collection runs from $12 to $14 for regular Sunday-school work, such as supplies, etc., while the mission offerings have amounted to more than $800 this year. This is one of the leading schools in the brotherhood.

LOUISVILLE, KY.

Clifton Bible School.

J. S. Hilton, supt.; Fred J. Riebel, asst.; James M. Emmett, secretary; Robert Lucas, asst.; Ray Cobb, treasurer. Enrollment, 310 (main school); average attendance, 225.

There is a primary, junior, intermediate adult department, with 30 in the home department and 30 in the cradle roll. There is one teacher training class, Kennett's Men's Bible class and Williams' Housekeepers' class. These are a great inspiration and growing power. Maps are used, blackboards, and there are two pianos and three organs, a primary room, junior room and six other class rooms. Last year the school contributed $160 for missions, divided between the foreign, home, association Sunday-school work and our own state Sunday-school work. In addition it gave $6 a month for the orphans' home work. The missionary offerings are taken with the card system. There is a special missionary secretary, who receives the offerings each Lord's day, punching the cards as the money is paid, but the regular missionary days are also observed, so as to reach those who do not use the cards. There is an honor roll system employed, using cross and crown buttons as reward.

OKLAHOMA.

El Reno.

Charles L. Engle, supt.; Ferd Ellsworth, asst. supt.; Etta Farris, secretary; Lora Page, assistant secretary; Belle Godfrey, treasurer: Mamie Hoke, organist; Leora Hubbard, assistant; Lottie Neeley, librarian; Jonah DeBaum, supt. cradle roll. Enrollment, 360; average attendance, 220.

There are fifteen classes in this school. Its equipment is good and it has a teacher training class. The average collection is $5 from voluntary offerings. Mission days are observed. The home department, cradle roll and teacher training class are active and prospering. The house is too small for the school, and a five-room building across the street has been rented, payment being made from voluntary offerings. The school is in the eighth month of a badge contest, the Cross and Crown system of the Christian Publishing Company being used. Over one hundred pupils have not missed a Sunday since this contest was started, the last Sunday of March. There are more boys than girls and more men than women in attendance. Mr. Engle organized this school with twelve members fifteen years ago, and has superintended from that time. His administration has been marked by steady growth. Mr. Engle is prominent in the community as a banker, and is also a deacon of the church.

Our Budget

—C. W. B. M. day, December 6.

—"Help those women."

—We give large space to the Bible school interests.

—This is so important that we feel justified in holding over some of our regular features.

—Study what the schools are doing. These are but samples.

—We have been compelled to hold over much Bible school matter intended for this issue, but this will appear in subsequent numbers of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

—If you have any new ideas or plans of work that will be helpful to other Bible school workers, let us hear from you.

—We have examined with great pleasure the "Studies of the Books of the Bible" for the Advanced Standard Teacher Training Course by Marion Stevenson, and published by the Christian Publishing Company. It is far and away the best book for this purpose that we have seen. Its reverent spirit, its dignified style, its fidelity to the Scriptures and freedom from denominational shibboleths, ought to commend it to the brethren generally for use in the teacher training courses of our people. Be sure to send for a copy and examine it before securing another book.

—On short notice, we present our readers this week with the first special Sunday-school issue of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, which hereafter we hope to make at least an annual feature of the paper. The Sunday-school has reached a place of power and efficiency as the teaching session of the church service to justify this special prominence. We trust our readers will be interested and pleased with this number.

—We have only space this week for the beginning of what is likely to be a very interesting and valuable symposium on "The Line Between Faith and Opinion." The answers which we publish this week show remarkable unanimity of judgment, but doubtless other answers yet to come may give us something different. There is no more urgent, nor more vital question, before us just now than the one these brethren have answered so clearly and scripturally. Nor is there any more urgent duty before us than to recognize the distinction which they point out, and govern ourselves accordingly. After all, the trouble is not so much in seeing the principle involved, as it is in its faithful application.

—S. M. Perkins has been using a stereopticon in his meeting at Davenport, Iowa.

—The remodelled church building at Bellefontaine, Ohio, was rededicated last Lord's day.

—Dan Trundle is booked for three addresses to union meetings in November within ten days.

—S. V. Vance is in a meeting with W. W. Robertson at Maysville, Mo. There is an excellent interest.

—J. M. Elam, of Litchfield, Ill., can hold a meeting before the holidays. Telegraph him. Highest recommendations, terms to suit.

—Evangelist Violett and wife visited our offices last week, fresh from a great victory in the Southland and en route to another at Canton, Mo.

—Frank E. Jones, corresponding secretary of Southern Idaho, reports Brother Titus in a fine meeting at Rupert, and the work is moving all along the line.

—The church at Kent, Wash., has no minister. The superintendent of missions has been visiting them, urging them to locate a preacher for part or all time.

—Thomas J. Shuey, A. C. M. S. missionary of University Place, Seattle, Wash., has visited three outside points during the past month, and dedicated the church building at Montesano.

—C. H. Winders, of Irvington, Ind., attended the ministers' meeting at the Christian Publishing Company on Monday. He was en route to New London, Mo., to hold a short meeting.

—A. A. Doak and wife have received public appreciation for their work at Colfax, Wash., on the occasion of a reception to twenty new members. A ten-dollar gold piece was given to the pastor and his helpmeet.

—George L. Snively and C. H. Altheide are in a brief but very helpful meeting at Carbondale, Ill. Many have been turned away from the large auditorium. They begin a meeting with George B. Stewart, at Warrensburg, Mo., November 29.

—W. F. Shearer, of Angola, Ind., was to begin a meeting with the church at New Sharon, Ia., on Lord's day, where A. B. Cornell is the pastor. Brother Shearer is one of our excellent evangelists, and we hope for much blessing on the meeting.

—E. H. N. Gates begins a meeting at Greensburg, Kansas, Nov. 22. N. A. Stull will be his singer. The latter is in charge of a meeting at Macksville, Kan., both preaching and singing. There were five baptisms reported under date of Nov. 16.

—The members of the Christian Church at Braddock, Pa., have given a reception to their new pastor and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. John Crosby. A very enjoyable evening was spent. A number of ministers from other religious bodies were present. There have been eight additions to the church.

—The church at Diagonal, Iowa, has been dedicated by L. L. Carpenter, who raised, from a little band of thirty-five Disciples and their friends, $2,000, which provided for all indebtedness. The building is a great credit to the members of the community, and there is joy throughout the little city.

—S. L. Jackson reports a most excellent congregation at Dighton, Kan., where the work is well organized and the congregation eager to be represented in all the enterprises of the brotherhood. Five representatives of the congregation were present at the state convention at Topeka, the pastor being sent by the church.

—Brother Dowling, our veteran Editor of the Bible school literature, has just placed on our desk a copy of his new Commentary for 1909. It appears to have all the excellent qualities found in his editions of former years. We recommend it to Bible school superintendents, teachers, and all who are interested in a full and complete commentary on the International Lessons for next year.

—George H. Ellis, who closed his work in West Virginia last spring and went to Nezperce, Idaho, the following month, finds that field somewhat difficult but a good class of people. The Bible school has already increased from 40 to 92, under the efficient superintendency of Dr. J. H. Lewis. The C. E. Society moves forward under the faithful care of Homer Peterson, and every one in the church seems to be a worker.

—The ladies of the Jackson Avenue Christian Church, of Kansas City, are hard workers. Those who attended the convention at Kansas City will remember their efforts to provide the delegates with meals. Now we hear they have cleared about $1,000 within the past four months. Recently they served dinners at the stock show. All is done for the benefit of the building fund and to make up losses due to fire and panic. Mrs. F. A. Truitt is the president of their organization, and F. L. Bowen is the pastor of the church.

—"Old Glory," a gift of the American Christian Missionary Society, now graces the room of the Bible school of the First Christian Church, New Castle, Pa. This indicates that the school led all the rest in Pennsylvania last year in the offering for home missions. The "conquest flag" may also be seen there, indicating that this school's gifts were more than $100. We note that the average attendance for 1908 shows a gain of about 20 per cent over 1907.

—"I have had a severe strain on my faith," writes a brother, "and THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has been strength indeed to me. I can not tell you how much good it has done me nor how much I appreciate it. I like the way it combines aggressiveness and conservatism." These repeated testimonies from readers who have been helped in their religious life, are bright spots that illumine the dark and cloudy days which often shadow an editor's path.

—The marriage of Randall Farris, pastor of the Indiana Avenue Christian Church at South Bend, Ind., and Miss Estelle Lackey, an estimable young lady of the same congregation, occurred on Nov. 3, George W. Hemry officiating. A public reception at the church followed the ceremony, and next day Brother Farris and his bride left for their new field of labor at Bristol, Tenn. Brother Hemry writes: "Brother Farris has done a faithful and efficient work here. The church was a mission of the First Church when he became pastor, but at the end of his first year's ministry it became self-supporting. The hearty good wishes of a host of friends follow this devout man and his wife to their future work."

—We recently made a quotation from a reprint of an address prepared by Parker Stockdale, pastor of the Jackson Boulevard Christian Church of Chicago. It so happens that the quotation we made from his address was itself a quotation from a sermon by E. L. Powell, in a sermon on "The Minister in the Marketplace." In the body of the address proper credit is given to Brother Powell, but this did not appear in the extract which we made. Brother Stockdale requests us to make this correction, and adds that his work "at the old mother church moves along with great enthusiasm. I am baptizing almost every week. There were six additions last Lord's day. We have one of the largest evening audiences in Chicago."

—A. D. Harmon, of the First Church of St. Paul, has entered upon the twelfth year of his pastorate there. In consideration of the growing work, the church has increased his salary $600. E. T. Godd, one of the elders, says it is a great pleasure to see a church and a man grow together. At the time of the meeting both were young. They have met hard problems heroically, and have come to be a source of strength in that capital city and state. Brother Harmon recently addressed the Baptist State Assembly on our position in a conference on Christian union. It was a plain, direct, but loving New Testament message. Out of a series of conferences between these two bodies has come a plan of comity and co-operation for mission work in Minnesota. It was passed by a unanimous vote in both the Baptist and Disciple state conventions.

—"Chas. G. Kindred was successfully operated on Monday, November 9, in Englewood Hospital, Chicago. Reports since are steadily encouraging. Co-incident with the operation, in the early afternoon, many gathered at the church to pray.—W. P. Keeler."

All the friends of Brother Kindred will rejoice that he has successfully passed through the operation, which was necessary, and is on his way to recovery. Let us pray that

GOV. DRAKE AND ANNUITIES.

The late Gov. F. M. Drake of Iowa believed in the Annuity Plan of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society. He was not only a consecrated man, but very successful in business.

Concerning our Annuity Plan, he said: "I can recommend the Annuity Plan to my friends. It enables a person to make one of the safest and best investments of their accumulations, from which they can derive a double income; one in the way of interest financially, and the other, which is more, an increase in happiness on account of the good done. The F. C. M. S. meets the payment of interest as promptly as the nearest and most reliable bank or merchant; and the principal is invested not only for time, but for eternity, where it will do the most possible good."

He gave money to the Foreign Society on the Annuity Plan as follows:

Nov. 14, 1898	$ 5,000.
Feb. 1, 1902	5,000.
Nov. 14, 1902	5,000.
Nov. 18, 1903	5,000.
Total	$20,000.

He died two days after his last gift of $5,000. You may not be able to give as much as did our beloved F. M. Drake. Does not the Lord incline your heart to give something?

A Centennial gift on this plan would be altogether fitting and aid in reaching the $400,000 for Foreign Missions this year.

The income is certain. The security is perfect. The money will begin its usefulness at once. For illustrated booklet, address he may soon be able to resume his important work.

—We received an excellent account of the work of Gipsy Smith in his meeting at Baltimore, from L. B. Haskins, pastor of the Twenty-fifth Street Church of that city. Brother Power, in his article, "As Seen from the Dome," has written at length about Gipsy Smith, so we can make but a brief extract from Brother Haskins. He says that the evangelist had stirred up the old and conservative city of Baltimore so much that even the most sedate were willing to join in a midnight procession from the Lyric, the place of the meeting, down through the saloon and theatrical sections of the city to one of the large theaters, where a second meeting was held. "One touching incident was the presence of an old man and his wife in the procession, singing with all the earnestness of their hearts, 'Where Is My Wandering Boy To-night?' Some young man standing on the curb saw and heard them. He joined the procession, received a ticket, heard the gypsy, held up his hand for prayer, and the last night surrendered."

—M. L. Pontius recently closed his first year with the church at Taylorville, Ill. The report showed twenty-seven additions by baptism and a total of sixty-one, with a net gain of forty-five. The membership is 450. There is an efficient official board, a vigorous C. W. B. M., with Mrs. C. M. Meredith as president, a splendid Sunday-school, led by Prof. H. L. Fowkes, and other good organizations. Harmony prevails and the future is bright with promise. A handsome pipe organ has just been installed and this, with the repairs, cost $2,600. This is a great church, says Brother Pontius, which has not fully recognized its ability and influence. We understand there are about 5,000 people in the city who are not affiliated with any church, so that our brethren have a great opportunity. An evangelistic campaign is on hand, with W. H. Book, of Columbus, in the lead.

Dr. Moore's Twelfth Book.

W. T. Moore has written a book which has just come from the press. It is entitled, "Supremacy of the Heart Life." This is the twelfth book Dr. Moore has written. Six of these he has turned out since coming to Columbia. It is published by the Fleming H. Revell Company. The book is "A Plea for the Regnancy of Love."—Columbia (Mo.) Herald.

Oklahoma Preacher Loses All by Fire.

My heart was saddened this morning to hear from James Cage, who is just closing his work at Crescent, Okla., to begin the work at Roff, Okla., stating that he had lost all his household goods, clothing, books and almost all the money he had in the house by fire during the night of November 14. He barely escaped with his life. His family was away from home on a visit. This is indeed a sad blow upon Brother Cage whom our brethren will remember as the one who received such an unmerciful beating early in the summer at the hands of a ruffian, and suffered for weeks, hovering between life and death, finally recovering and receiving into the church at Crescent the greatest ingathering in the history of the congregation. Now, can not we who are blessed with health and vigor, do something to brighten the sad moments of this devout servant of God? The congregation at this place and at Tryon are raising contributions, and if those who read these lines will lend a helping hand it will lighten the burden resting upon this brother, who has suffered so much for the cause of Christ, and who is so deserving of your encouragement and help. Write him at Roff, Okla., and send your contribution, remembering the precious promises of God for those who help to lift the dark cloud of sorrow that rests so heavily over the soul of our unfortunate brother.

A House to be Sold for Debt.

A little congregation of 22 members, at Weldon, near Brandenburg, Meade county, Kentucky, is confronted by the advertisement for sale of their house of meeting on December 7. This is near the wonderful lithographic stone quarry of 260 acres—the finest in the world—and the only one in the United States. There will be great developments in that section and this house ought not to be sold for the $170 they owe on it. They are going to try to pay this themselves; but they despair of doing so. They have asked me to appeal to the Kentucky brotherhood to help them in this emergency. Any money sent to me will be used promptly to relieve this situation. The state board is not expected to pay money for houses, but to use the funds entrusted to them to pay for preaching. Will not enough people send at once from $1 to $10 each to pay this debt and start this work afresh? Meade county belongs to one of the Western Kentucky districts. Let East and West and North and South Kentucky "lend a hand" at once.

An Overture for Peace.

The Ministerial Association of Indianapolis and vicinity deeply deplores the controversy occasioned by certain appointments on the Centennial program.

The necessity for ignoring all personal and party peculiarities, and receiving one another in common faith without regard to opinions, is manifest, in order that our Centennial may be a magnificent celebration in which the whole brotherhood can join.

We, therefore, believe it to be for the best interests of our cause and the plea for Christian union, that all the brotherhood should acquiesce in the decision of the committee having the responsibility for the program, and that further agitation in our church papers should cease at once.

We cordially commend our missionary boards for confining themselves to their expressed purpose, and have full confidence that the brethren at large will approve their course as eminently wise.

Therefore, brethren in the Lord, let us all "endeavor to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace," and "follow after the things that make for peace and things wherewith one may edify another."

Fraternally submitted,
A. B. Philputt, Chairman.
W. L. Hayden, Secretary.
A. R. Benton.
James W. Conner.
Austin Hunter,
Committee.

This report was approved unanimously, save one, 28 present, by the association, November 23, 1908, and kindly requested that this overture be published in The Christian Standard, THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and the New Christian Century at the earliest possible date.

NOT TOO LATE.

Children's Day for Home Missions was celebrated the Lord's Day before Thanksgiving more generally than ever before. Many schools, however, were unable either to have Mr. Fillmore's "New Crusade" or to celebrate the day formally.

I am anxious that every Bible-school should be enlisted this year—THE CENTENNIAL YEAR. The names of the Bible-schools actively interested in Home Missions in THE CENTENNIAL YEAR will present an interesting historical record. I want every school, therefore, to send in an offering just as soon as convenient, a special offering—if possible—hearty and generous, taken at some agreed-upon time. But if that is impossible send us the regular offering of some Lord's Day. This is a great year and a great cause. You want to be in line, I know.

If you can fall into line—and will—write to

ALABAMA'S CONVENTION

The twenty-third annual meeting of the Alabama Christian Missionary Co-operation was held at Eutaw, November 4-6.

Eutaw is a beautiful little city down in the "black belt," with a population of from 1,500 to 2,000. The church there is comparatively young, having been organized a few years ago by the evangelist of the Alabama Co-operation. Some of the best people of the town are members of the Christian Church, and the work has every appearance of being prosperous. They have just completed a beautiful new house of worship. It is constructed of light-colored brick, is of good architecture and is very attractive. It has a separate Sunday-school room, with two or three class rooms, has baptistry and robing rooms and a convenient choir platform. It also has a basement, which has not yet been finished. The church is an ornament to the town; is, in fact, decidedly the best church building in the town, and was built at the remarkably low cost of about $6,000. The pastor, R. V. Hope, has labored very faithfully to erect this building, and deserves great credit for what he has accomplished.

The attendance at the convention was not quite as large as during the past two or three years. That was due to business conditions in part, and partly to the fact that Eutaw is near the western boundary of the state and reached by but one line of railway. Yet the attendance was good for an Alabama convention, and the actual number present at each session was as large or larger than heretofore. Delegates and citizens were very faithful in their attendance.

The convention was presided over by the president, A. R. Moore, pastor of the First Church in Birmingham.. The program was one of the best we have ever had. There were a few absentees, but the program was so full that their places were easily filled. The subject of the president's address was "The Program of Christianity." He spoke of the message, the messengers and the means. In a program where there were so many good things, one dislikes to mention one address without mentioning all. Every one on the program acquitted himself creditably.

The C. W. B. M. session was full of interest. Mrs. Ethel Pattillo, the secretary, read a splendid report, showing great growth among the auxiliaries. Several of the Centennial aims have already been attained. Mrs. M. E. Harlan made a most interesting and helpful address upon the work of the national organization, and at the close received some fifteen life memberships.

The Sunday-school session was one of the best we have ever had. Mrs. S. P. Moore spoke on "Teacher Training" Mrs. T. L. Woodruff upon "Lesson Construction," and Mrs. B. L. Berry upon "The Beginners' Department." The people clamored for more of the same sort and asked for an extension of time.

"Christian Endeavor as a Factor in City Evangelization" was very forcefully presented by H. G. Braxton, and Claude E. Hill spoke of "Our Christian Endeavor Centennial Aims." W. P. Crouch spoke upon "The Secret of the Power of Christianity," and J. D. Arnold upon the text, "I was glad when they said unto me, let us go up to the house of the Lord." These addresses were all favorably received.

The Foreign Society was well represented by W. H. Hanna, missionary to the Philippines, who spoke upon the work in those islands. H. A. Denton, of the American society, spoke of the work in our own great country. E. W. Elliott spoke in behalf of church extension and J. H. Mohorter told the story of our national benevolences.

A notable feature of the program was the evangelistic session on Alabama day. J. H. Hill spoke of the "Problems of the Country Church;" R. V. Hope handled "The Evangelist and His Message;" Milligan Earnest discussed "Co-operation;" D. P. Taylor talked upon "Taking the Cities." "The Needs of the Cause in Alabama" was the theme of S. P. Spiegel, while H. G. Sedinger told about "Evangelizing in Alabama." J. M. Cranford discussed the question, "Can We Improve Our Methods of Work?" This was one of the most helpful features of the convention and was a suitable preparation for the offering which was taken at the evening service by Claude E. Hill, who spoke upon "This Grace Also."

James Curtis and J. T. Moore were introduced to the convention and spoke briefly. P. H. Duncan gave an interesting account of his trip to Bible lands and Belt White told of the progress of temperance in Alabama.

The treasurer's report showed all debts paid, but not much money in the treasury with which to begin the work of the new year. The report of the executive committee was read by Dr. E. C. Anderson, corresponding secretary, and showed a most gratifying work. Two churches and one Bible school were organized during the year. Eight preachers were supported in whole or in part by the society. Their labors for the society aggregate 72 months of work, 53 points aided, 683 sermons preached, 136 baptisms, 112 other additions; money raised on the field, $1,844.60, making a total raised for Alabama missions of nearly $4,000. A statistical report was read, and there was some desire to separate the report of co-operating churches from others. But objection was raised to our doing anything that would have the appearance of encouraging division.

All regretted the resignation of S. P. Spiegel, who goes to Wilson, N. C. He has spent eight years in the work in Alabama and numbers his friends by the thousand, who wish him success in his new work. Regret was also expressed at the departure of R. V. Hope, who takes up the work at Columbus, Miss. We need more such men in Alabama. The planting of a church in Montgomery, our state capital, was the most important undertaking of the year. With the start already made we confidently expect to see a strong, representative church in that city within a short while.

The next convention goes to Selma. In this central city we expect to celebrate the Centennial of our movement to reunite apostolic Christianity. And there is reason to believe that this is to be the greatest year in the history of the Alabama work.

The officers and executive committee for the ensuing year are as follows: A. R. Moore, President; J. M. Cranford, Vice Pres't; Dr. E. C. Anderson, Cor. Sec. and Treas.; D. P. Taylor, Rec. Sec.; A. A. Oden, Auditor; H. G. Braxton, Supt. of C. E.; E. W. Elliott, Claude E. Hill, J. R. McWane.

A. R. MOORE.

A Centennial Challenge.

The Foreign Society has received an unconditional pledge of $500 for the proposed Bible college at Vigan, Philippine Islands. This friend lives in Illinois.

R. A. Long, of Missouri, proposes to give $5,000 for the college at Vigan and $5,000 also for the one at Bolenge, Africa, upon the condition that $20,000 besides is secured by August 1, 1909. This is a worthy challenge to all classes who are interested in making the Centennial a success and to all who are interested in seeing these great schools provided before the year closes.

We can sweep the province of Luzon, in the Philippine Islands, with the gospel message if this school can be properly equipped. Already our evangelists are going everywhere, but they need to be more firmly grounded in the faith and to be brought to a wider and more accurate knowledge of the Bible.

These schools are no wild and impractical experiment. In the past years our people have established such schools in Tokio, Japan; Nankin, China, and Jubbulpore, India. They give stability and character and all helpfulness to our work in these pagan lands.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS.

The St. Louis Letter.

Many changes have come into our work since the St. Louis Letter last appeared. Some of our dearest and best workers have gone home, and many of those left behind have shifted about in their fields of labor.——We are glad to welcome Earl Wilfley as one of our colaborers in this important field. He is already getting hold upon his work, and we are all hoping and praying for his success at the First Church.——Our ministers report their work in all departments opening most auspiciously. Brother McFarland has just had a good meeting in which he was assisted by brethren Wilhite and Gates. Brother Wilfley is now in a meeting at the First. Brother Alexander begins a meeting at the Second. Compton Heights has a revival the year round. We have additions at almost every Lord's day service; have had sixteen in the past four Sundays. Brother Harris, who came to us from Colorado last summer, is opening the work at Clifton Heights. So far he has reason to be encouraged with the results. They had nine additions two weeks ago, and have a good teacher training class. Brother Philputt is looking better this autumn than usual. His summer rest and arduous duties since he returned seem to agree with him perfectly. Brother Garrigues is still at the old stand, and has been there all summer. He is building quietly but surely and strongly at Hammett Place. W. F. Hamann is pushing his work vigorously at Tuxedo. Their work is growing so rapidly that they find it necessary to enlarge their house. Brother Ireland, our city missionary, is the busiest man in St. Louis. Brother Engle, at Old Orchard, is carrying that work forward with interest. Brother Harris, of Lansdowne, East St. Louis, is recognized as one of our ministers in the city. He is doing a good work in Lansdowne. Brother Mace, our colored brother, has returned to the colored church here. Mace is a very promising young man, and stands well with all who know him. He has some very excellent people associated with his work here.——Many of us did not get to the great convention in New Orleans, but we are now enjoying it through THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Every one is, or ought to be, enthusiastic over our coming convention in Pittsburg. Now is the time to begin to prepare for it. We want to take a whole car load from Compton Heights. F. N. Calvin.

North Carolina.

Your correspondent had the privilege of attending the great national convention at New Orleans, and met some of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST staff there. From the Old North State we met W. G. Walker, the corresponding secretary, and D. W. Arnold, pastor at Greenville.——The North Carolina State Convention is being held at Kinston, Nov. 17-19. P. B. Hall is still preaching there, but expects to leave for Lynchburg, Va., in the near future. I thought, in writing my last notes, he had gone.——Our Piedmont District Union did not meet on Oct. 29, 30, on account of the rain.——D. H. Petree, of Lagrange, closed a meeting recently at Rural Hall, with three additions. He also held a meeting with Corinth church, with several added.——W. B. Hendershot begins a meeting at Winston-Salem, Nov. 16. He has had some successful meetings in Virginia. He is located at Martinsville, Va.—The young men of Atlantic Christian College who do not use tobacco have organized an Anti-Tobacco Club. They will try to use their influence on young men against the use of the weed.—The Colored Christian Church of this city has graduated eight members of the Teacher Training Class. They had an elaborate program. Our Bible school here is organizing three classes, two beginners and one advanced. J. A. Hopkins.

Winston-Salem, N. C.

Western Pennsylvania.

The Western Pennsylvania churches held one of the best conventions they ever had. They met in the beautiful new building at Turtle Creek. The financial report showed a falling off last year of $800. The financial stress has been felt heavily in all of our churches. Secretaries Muckley, Ranshaw and Mohorter were there and aroused the people. C. J. Tannar, of Detroit, told us what we needed to plan for in entertaining the Centennial convention.

The monthly meeting of the local Centennial committee was attended by the members of the general committee. They were unanimous in urging them to prepare for 50,000 people next October. Our churches are being aroused to the task.

On Monday, November 2, Rev. Warren G. Partridge, of the Fourth Avenue Baptist Church, Pittsburg, read a paper before our ministers' meeting at Braddock, on "The Union of the Baptists and Disciples." His ringing denunciation of sectarianism, and his plea for the union of the Baptists, Free Baptists and Disciples received hearty approval from Baptists and Disciples present.

One of the greatest victories is the work of Brother Hughes at Bryn Mawr, McKeesport. In two and one-half weeks of his vacation he baptized seventeen, received two by statement and three from the McKeesport church. Two have since been added, making twenty-four in the new congregation. They will continue the services for the present in the Union Sabbath school building, which they have for a year without rent. Brother Hibler, of Homestead, has been preaching for them for more than a year and will continue to do so.

A series of state missionary rallies will be held this fall and winter to arouse our churches in this Centennial year.

Howard Cramblet.

School of Evangelists.

The School of Evangelists sends greetings to its many friends and supporters. We had a glorious opening. Our openings are like great family reunions. There is a "something" here that binds us closer to one another than ordinary school ties usually do. What joy it was to meet in the chapel and hear the singing and prayers! One young man, hundreds of miles from home, said: "What singing that was! It seemed that every one was joining in with his whole spirit. I never felt so much like singing, and all the others were apparently of the same mind." But why shouldn't we sing? "Jehovah hath done great things for us whereof we are glad." We have seen his power in our midst, and we could not do otherwise than rejoice.

Young men are here from thirty of the states besides three foreign countries. We have an enrollment of one hundred and forty, of whom at least one hundred and twenty are preparing for the ministry of our Lord and Savior.

Brother Romig brought us a message and a call from the great Northwest. The probabilities are that a company of twenty-five men will go from here to Canada next spring to help take that promising field for Christ.

Brother Johnson returned from the convention just in time to attend the funeral of his mother, who passed away after a long and useful Christian life. He brought us many words of cheer from the great convocation at New Orleans. Best of all, he brought two men with him. One of these was Nelson Trimble, of Baltimore, who gave us two uplifting addresses. The other man is a young brother who heard the plea for the first time during the convention, and of whom Brother Trimble has written. It made our hearts glad to hear him make "the good confession," and to see him become obedient to the Savior's command.

We are looking forward this year to visits from many of our representative men, who always bring messages of power and cheer.

I spent October in Meigs county, at Bradford and Rockville, country churches near Middleport, preaching at Bradford fourteen nights, with 37 added and 31 confessions. On October 18 I baptized 24 persons in the presence of more than five hundred. In point of additions and attendance, this was the largest and best meeting in the history of this old country church. People came for miles and crowded the house until at times the most hindering feature was an overcrowded house. If any one thinks that the country is no longer an inviting field, his mind will be changed by an earnest application of evangelistic zeal and the old time simplicity of the Gospel.

I was ten days at Rockville, with ten added. O. O. Olney, of Quaker City, held a meeting here with some thirty additions less than a year ago. H. A. Pallister, of Iowa, located with this church during the meeting, and will divide his time with Bradford.

Middleport, Rutland and a number of other churches in the eighteenth district are pastorless. The Crooksville church is prospering under the leadership of J. P. Ewing. They are building a fine house. C. B. Thompson, of Crooksville, preaches at Carbon Hill and Walhonding. These congregations thrive under his ministry. E. K. Vanwinkle is in a good meeting with home forces at McConnellsville. The work there is in a hopeful condition. T. J. White, state evangelist for Southern Ohio, is doing efficient work. J. H. Scholes, minister of the Newark church, is marshaling his forces in an evangelistic campaign. L. O. Thompson.

A Ginger Ale From Milwaukee.

I have not removed to Milwaukee, though I am here. Both the presidential nominees have been here; nor is that all. The convention of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew has closed. Down in Missouri, at least the part in which I grew up, St. Andrew was not very well known. I don't remember to have heard very much about him in my early life. Paul, Peter and James were a little better known to us boys in the interior.

Bishops, rectors and laity from all over the earth were here. The biggest churches in Milwaukee were thrown wide open, and Pabst opened wide the doors of his big opera house to the admirers of St. Andrew for a great mass meeting. Pabst is greatly loved by most Milwaukeans, for he makes the "beer that made Milwaukee famous." He is a very rich man, mostly from the contributions of widows and orphans, and to satisfy his own personal ambition he built the biggest play house in town. In this mass meeting the Bishop of Kentucky preached. A bishop is supposed to preach a great sermon, and as good as this sermon was, it did not compare with the sermon that Charlie Winders preached down at New Orleans, and Charlie never pretended to be a bishop. If Charlie and I had kept up as we started, it might have been better for us, but we lost courage. Each of us purchased a vest that buttoned up to the collar, but we never turned our collars. We abandoned the idea early and have felt better ever since. Charlie, however, has kept on preaching, while I have followed somewhat the bent of my maternal ancestor, who, though a business man, was ever an active preacher of the gospel.

The convention was delightful. It is good, now and then, to be with brethren of other religious bodies and see how they do things, hear what they are thinking about, and get a grasp of the problems they are dealing with. "They may be right and they may be wrong," but I am not yet convinced that they do not want to do the right. The Episcopal brotherhood, in which flourishes the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, is a brotherhood of great power in the cities. Its forms and traditions go back into the centuries, and its adherents are bound by a strong tie, religious, political and educational.

My removal to Milwaukee is a little like that of the Easy Chair editor to the shores of Lake Michigan when the summer solstice appears—temporary. My home, my interests, my hopes are tied up in the good old state of Missouri. I am hoping soon to be free, and if so, I propose to hold a meeting somewhere in the state for some poor, struggling church, at my own charge. I shall expect my board, and should like to get my railroad fare, but I think I shall be so glad to get back that I can stand that. I hope all the struggling churches will not speak at once; for I wish to emphasize that this is not a real joke—I mean to do it! The plan to be adopted is a success, though it is seldom worked. Many of the preachers would like to work it more than they do, but their wives and children object. I am willing to try it, and try to do again what I have succeeded in a number of times—see a weak church grow into a strong one.

R. L. (Bob) Wilson.

Some Autumn Leaves in Kentucky.

W. J. Cocke was at Trenton, Todd county, and Pembroke, Christian county, for meetings. These churches paid for their work and made an offering for state missions. There were eighteen additions. Dr. Ferguson was ordained as preacher of the Pembroke church and one of the elders. Six other good men were set apart as officers of the church. The secretary was with them on this occasion and helped in the matter.——W. J. Hudspeth did some fine work, adding twenty-six at two points, Falls of Rough and Pleasant Hill. He is in great demand for meetings, and has dates for a long time ahead. All that region recognize his value in evangelistic work.——The month was a great one for D. G. Combs. He is in the evangelistic field entirely now; 108 added and much other good accomplished.——J. W. Masters was in the field half time; added five and is now engaged in a meeting in southeastern Kentucky.——G. H. Thomas, who was selected as district evangelist in Lee and Owsley counties, baptized 33 and added four otherwise. He is commended as a worthy and efficient man for that field.——Nine added by H. L. Morgan in Clay and Laurel counties.——Three added by the labors of J. P. Bicknell in Wolfe and adjoining counties.——Fourteen added in Pike county, as reported by H. H. Thompson, and much other good accomplished.——The work at Jackson moves on about as usual. Some repairs are being made on the house of worship. C. M. Summers has been absent part of the month.——Jellico had one addition, and R. G. Sherrer reports the work as doing very well.——Six added in Breathitt county by J. B. Flinchum.——Three added by Robert Kirby in Cumberland county.——Work moves on about as usual at Bromley, as reported by L. A. Kohler.——Latonia work is progressing well, as indicated by H. C. Runyon.——Lebanon is almost making a new house in the remodeling of the old one. W. P. Walden is doing a fine work there. W. J. Cocke will dedicate the house November 22, and follow with a meeting.——J. B. Lockhart, of Clarence, Mo., has received and accepted a call to the South Louisville church, and began work there November 8. He is highly commended and a good work is hoped for.

H. W. Elliott was at New Orleans during the convention, but aside from the time spent there he has been at work all the time. He attended two of the South Kentucky conventions and received a most cordial welcome. The collections since the Hopkinsville convention amount to $861.01, an amount unprecedented in the records on file. Some of this was money that did not reach us before the convention, but for the most, collections made on the new year's work. The November offering has only fairly begun. Let us make it the greatest in our history. Do not let anything interfere with attention to this matter now. This is the best time to attend to it. Five hundred churches in line for November offering would be a great victory. Remit promptly. At the earliest possible moment let us hear from your effort.

H. W. Elliott, Secretary.

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism," or "by letter."

California.

Santa Barbara, Nov. 14.—The first week of our meeting closes to-day. We have had good interest, with six added—all confessions but one. The promise of large results is most cheering. We continue two or three weeks. The pastor is doing the preaching, assisted by Professor Stout, singing evangelist.—Sumner T. Martin, pastor.

Colorado.

Denver, Nov. 16.—There were seven added to the East Side Church yesterday—five confessions. Charles G. Stout begins with us on November 29.—Jesse B. Haston.

Idaho.

Rupert, Nov. 17.—Just closed a four-weeks' meeting with home forces. Some bad weather and election excitement were the serious drawbacks, but our church, two years old, has learned to work well. We had fourteen accessions. I commence a meeting at Deweese, Neb., next Sunday.—D. B. Titus, pastor.

Nezperce, Nov. 11.—There have been seven additions by letter and statement the last two Lord's day mornings. We have a splendid sprinkling of Catholics out to our evening services, and hope that the seed will take root and grow.—Geo. H. Ellis, minister First Christian Church.

Iowa.

Keokuk, Nov. 17.—I am in a meeting here. Fourteen added to date.—N. E. Corey.

Goldfield, Nov. 16.—Evangelist Organ, of Des-Moines, closed a splendid meeting with the Goldfield church. Twenty-four came during the meeting, and on last Sunday one more was added. Twenty-three came by confession and baptism. Many friends were made for the church and the spiritual life was greatly deepened. The outlook for the work here never was better—Robert C. Moore, minister.

Ottumwa, Nov. 14.—Closed a good meeting on November 10 at Marble Rock, where B. W. Hampton ministers. There are about 500 people in the town. As a result of the meeting 70 were added—eight by letter and statement, nine from other bodies and 53 by primary obedience. This doubles the membership of the church, and everybody seemed happy at the close. We were given a unanimous call to hold their meeting in 1909, and agreed to do it. Begin at Argyle November 15, where we have no church, and only three families who are Christians only.—C. E. Chambers, state evangelist.

Illinois.

Sumner, Nov. 16.—J. L. Reed closed a two-weeks' meeting at Willow Branch, with two additions by letter.—Dr. W. R. Dale, superintendent temperance department, Lawrence County Sunday-school Association.

Lynnville, Nov. 16.—Twenty-seven added here during the past month—twenty by confession and baptism, four otherwise. Just graduated a training class of ten, and am taking steps to organize a class in the advanced work.—G. W. Thomas, pastor.

Chapin, Nov. 13.—I am here with the pastor, T. L. Reed, in one of the most promising revivals Chapin has ever had. The meeting is 12 days old, with 12 added—all adults. The large enthusiastic chorus is doing good work.—J. Wade Seniff.

Hoopeston, Nov. 17.—Two more additions here Sunday, both by letter.—Lewis R. Hotaling.

Danville, Nov. 8.—Just closed a short meeting with the Watseka, Ill., Church. This church is one of the best in Northeastern Illinois. It has a fine church building, modern in style and complete in its appointments, with a membership of about 400 in good working condition. Elmore St. Clair, a recent graduate of Eureka College, is its minister. He is one of the most promising young men of my acquaintance. The church had engaged an evangelist to assist in a meeting, but after one week appeal was sent to me to assist in closing the meeting, which we did in ten days, with 30 additions to the church. It was especially delightful to be with Brother St. Clair, since I knew his parents many years ago near London, Ontario. The Lobo Church, from which he came, has sent out a number of good ministers, Dr. W. E. Macklin, of China, being of the number. Brother St. Clair belongs to the volunteer band and if his life be spared will be heard from in days to come in a favorable way. In the meantime we expect to hear of his success in leading the Watseka Church in the very best service of its history.—Andrew Scott, Danville, Illinois.

Cuba, Nov. 13.—What promises to be a splendid meeting has just been started. This will be my second meeting with the church here within a year. A. I. Zeller is the pastor and is doing a splendid work.—J. R. Golden.

Indiana.

Indianapolis, Nov. 18.—During my brief term of supplying the Sumner and Bridgeport, Ill., churches, 92 were added, three teacher training classes organized, two Christian Endeavor societies organized, one church worth at least $2,000 saved to our people, more than $100 given for missions, and $46.26 given for Illinois missions. The Sumner church has paid for the best building lot in the town, and will erect a modern church soon. It is my desire to give my time to the work of winning souls.—Willis M. Cunningham, Indianapolis, Ind., 517 North New Jersey street.

LaFontaine, Nov. 17.—Am in a meeting with H. H. Elwinger and Andrews Church. Good crowds—two confessions. The meeting has just started. Twelve baptisms recently not reported. The work is in fine condition at LaFontaine.—A. L. Martin, pastor.

Poseyville, Nov. 14.—I closed a five-weeks' meeting with the brethren at Peebles, O. There were 42 additions, and at the close money enough was raised to employ a pastor. It will be a nice field for some consecrated minister. Write to Elder D. A. Morrison, Peebles, O. I began a meeting with the "Old Union" congregation near this place, November 8. There is much interest manifested and splendid crowds. We look for good results. Address me here.—Morton H. Wood, evangelist.

Kansas.

Oswego, Nov. 14.—Closed a week's meeting at Altamont, Kan., with seven additions—two by baptism.—T. W. Cottingham.

Great Bend, Nov. 16.—Nine added so far in our meetings here with H. W. Nicholson.—Ingle-Zimmerman-Fuller.

Lebanon, Nov. 16.—Good interest is being manifested in the church here. Three were added to the church at Sunday morning service and one at the evening service. We are getting ready for a meeting in the near future.—L. W. Scott, pastor.

Cheney, Nov. 18.—Meeting 18 days old with 71 added. We continue with increased interest.—W. J. Myers, minister; Edward Clutter, evangelist.

Glasco, Nov. 17.—There have been two additions here since we began work in this field last month. There is an increase in interest and attendance in all departments.—J. F. Hay.

Wellington, Nov. 17.—Four additions to this congregation yesterday; eight one week ago; 20 not previously reported.—L. T. Faulders.

Williamsburg, Nov. 9.—Evangelist Wallace M. Stuckey has just closed one of the greatest meetings in the history of this church. The church has a broader view of Christianity. There were 23 accessions—20 confessions and 3 by statement. Sister Ethel Stuckey rendered us good service as soloist.—N. S. Franklin, minister.

Stockton, Nov. 7.—Just closed a fine meeting at a country schoolhouse near here. Twelve were added and work thoroughly revived. We have had several additions this summer and recently purchased site for a new church.—J. M. DeSezene, minister.

Kentucky.

Houstonville, Nov. 16.—Our meeting here began October 27 and closed November 10. E. J. Willis, of Kirksville, Mo., greatly helped and pleased this people with his excellent preaching. There were 17 additions—15 baptisms. Our training class and Sunday-school continue to grow.—Walter S. Willis, minister.

Massachusetts.

Everett, Nov. 15.—One confession November 15—a Roman Catholic. There was also one confession on November 8—a young lady rode forty miles to be at the church services. The Lord is blessing us abundantly, and I hope we will not forget that the honor of our success belongs to him.—Albert Hesse, clerk Union Christian Church.

Missouri.

St. James, Nov. 19.—Closed here last night with 34 additions and the cause greatly built up. They are ready to employ a pastor. This is a promising field. Professor Dawdy and wife, of Topeka, Kan., had charge of the music, while S. D. Harlan, of Iowa, greatly assisted us with illustrated talks to children. Union Mills, Ia., next.—E. M. Romine.

Bethany, Nov. 17.—The Christian Church is just beginning a revival meeting—two accessions. Andrew P. Johnson, the minister, is doing the preaching. Charles E. McVay is the song leader and soloist.

Weston, Nov. 16.—Evangelists Wilkinson and Ridenour have just closed a successful meeting for us here. There were 26 additions to this congregation—23 baptisms and three by letter. The Bible school has passed the 200 mark in its enrollment; the home department has reached 59. We are to begin a meeting for the Salem Church, one of our strong country churches five miles from here. This place and Salem once worked together, but it looks as though Weston will never be willing to go back to half time after this six months' trial of full time. Salem has no minister now. We hope for a good meeting.—J. E. Wofe.

Milan, Nov. 18.—Just closed a meeting at Holliday, Sullivan county, under control of Bi-County Board. Twenty-one days—nine by statement, five by baptism. The church had been without preaching for years and was inspired to work.—O. W. Jones.

New York.

Niagara Falls, Nov. 17.—Our meeting closed last night; the minister did the preaching and Miss Una Dell Berry had charge of the music. In all 29 came forward. Three of these had been of our own people and took a new start for Christ; three were Baptists not having a church home here; the remainder made the good confession. When we planned for our meeting sev-

A Symposium.

Christian fellowship than faith in and obedience to the Lord Jesus Christ, as set forth in the New Testament scriptures.

The whole difficulty, as it appears to me, arises from the fact that we have not been sufficiently discriminating in the essentials of our religion and in matters pertaining especially to the peculiar position of the Disciples of Christ.

Liberty, as understood by many, means the warrant for attacking any and all who are not in perfect harmony with standards that they themselves have erected. This, it seems to me, heads in the direction of anarchy, and is contrary to the genius and spirit of the Disciples of Christ. I believe in standing by the Book, yet with that charity toward others who accept the Lord Jesus Christ, and who do not agree with all the positions I assume, that should characterize broadminded and catholic Christianity.

ADULT BIBLE CLASS MOVEMENT

MARION STEVENSON

The Class That Started the Fund.

We publish on this page the Berean Bible class of the Christian church at Ft. Smith, Ark. This is the class that sent the original challenge to the Home Missionary Board that they would be one of the 500 classes to give at least $5 a year to home missions. The suggestion was made by F. E. Gilmore, the teacher, and the Home Society took the matter up at once, and quite a number of schools promptly accepted the challenge. The object, of course, of this class was simply to try to help the American Christian Missionary Society to raise the $25,000 they have asked from the Bible schools this month. If the five hundred Bible classes were to accept the challenge it would mean one tenth of the whole amount. Brother Ranshaw suggested that the fund should be named the Berean fund, and used in some special field, if 500 classes would unite in the work. The Ft. Smith class became more interested than ever when they began to see the possibilities of their suggestion. The Bible school of the Independence Boulevard Church, Kansas City, wrote, saying that twenty-one classes of that school had accepted the challenge, and congratulated Brother Gilmore's class on the plan. Twenty classes of the Ft. Smith school accepted.

F. E. Gilmore and Berean Bible Class.

Brother Gilmore is a great believer in organized class work. In response to our inquiry, he sends the following statement: "The class becomes so much more interested and interesting, and the teacher has only to suggest something that ought to be done, and the members enter heartily upon the work. The Berean Bible class was among the first in Arkansas to become a member of the International Sunday-School Association, and since that time we have contributed to state Sunday-school work, to foreign missions, to our living link home missionary, to church extension, to our church debt to the church extension board, and almost every Sunday a dollar to our Bible school. Before we became an organized class and had our committees, we did nothing. What we have done others can do, and while there are no doubt many classes that have done much more than we have, we all know there are hundreds of them that are doing nothing in the direction indicated above, though it is so easy. We have not lost sight of the spiritual side of our work. Seven members of the class have confessed Christ in the last few months, and others are thinking seriously of doing so. Under the leadership of E. B. Bagby, who is now our pastor, we are expecting great things."

This is a day of great Bible classes. Rev. James M. Gray, D.D., dean of the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, teaches about 1,500 members each week in Grand Rapids, Mich. This class, composed of representatives of all the churches, is held in the opera house, now the headquarters of Melville Trotter's great rescue mission work in that city. B. B. Tyler is teaching a large interdenominational class of Sunday school teachers in Denver, on Saturday of each week. I. J. Spencer of Lexington is teaching a teachers' training class of 123.

How It Was Done.

I have been asked to tell how our class was organized, held together, and the work successfully completed.

The class was organized under very trying circumstances and unfavorable conditions. The Church and Bible school were not only without enthusiasm, but without interest in any thing that required work to make it a success, and the Bible school superintendent ridiculed the idea that such a class could be organized. He not only refused to have anything to do with its organization, but afterwards opposed the work. Brother DePew assisted me in getting the work started. At the end of two days of hard work we had seventeen who had promised to take the work. We set the date when the work of the class was to begin a month ahead, and commenced a determined and systematic effort to work up a larger membership. The class was announced at every church service and in every issue of our two town papers. The nature of the work was explained, the course commended, the text book praised, and the work outlined time after time The homes of the friends and members of the church were visited and all the members of the family urged to take up the course. By the time the class met for the first lesson, thirty-one had promised to take the work and thirty-five were present. We were well pleased with the result of our work.

I conducted the class myself, because I could not find any one else who would do it. The first thing that we did was to set apart one evening of the week for the work of the class, with the understanding that nothing would be allowed to conflict with that meeting. It was understood that the class should recite if there was only one member present, and that a new lesson would be assigned whether the old one was recited or not. These rules were firmly adhered to and had much to do with the success of the work. The meetings were opened with prayer, followed by the calling of the roll This was followed by the members reciting from memory verses of scripture, an exercise in which every member of the class was expected to take part. For this part of the work I wrote out a scripture reference for each pupil; he was to commit the verse and give it at the meeting following, and then to exchange his reference with his neighbor. This gave each pupil a new verse of scripture to commit each evening and by the time the class had finished its work, each member had committed to memory thirty-one choice passages of scripture. We would frequently have contests in finding the different books of the Bible; this was a very helpful and much enjoyed exercise. We also had drills in spelling, in which the difficult Bible names were mastered not only in spelling, but also pronunciation. Each pupil was compelled to draw from memory on a blackboard a map of all the Bible lands, locating all the lakes, seas, rivers, mountains, and cities of any importance.

The drill and test questions were also studied and restudied, recited and recited again until they were as familiar as the multiplication table in arithmetic. In that part of the text-book that dealt with Theory and Practice of teaching, each member of the class was expected to answer all questions first in their own words and to illustrate their answers before they committed the answer given in the book. In all my teaching I tried to do and say the unexpected thing. I kept the class guessing what I would do, or say, or require of them next. This held their attention and made them interested in the class and they would frequently come back to the next meeting just to see what I would do the next time. In addition to this I kept continually before the members of the class the good that would come from the course of study and the diploma that they would receive at the end of the course.

Some Illinois County Superintendents.

Four county superintendents of Illinois are sending good reports of their work: Miss Alice Hornbeck, Pike county; H G. Waggoner, Hancock county; L. G. Crandall, Schuyler county, and G. S. McGaughey, of Crawford county. Others are doing well, but these four are in the lead just now.

H. G. Waggoner's class, recently graduated at Hamilton, was the first class in teacher training ever organized in Hancock county, and the graduating exercises were the first the county teacher training secretary of union work had ever witnessed. All the city pastors were present, and some expressed surprise that such work was being successfully carried on so extensively. Brother Waggoner has nearly made it unanimous in our twenty churches in Hancock county before the others knew what was going on, and our classes are the only ones in the entire county, but it won't be that way very long. It's contagious, you know. January 1, 1909, the class at Denver, H. L. O'Brien, will graduate, and the county secretary and yours truly will see that it is done just right. Clarence L. DePew.

Oh, Dear, What Can the Matter Be?

Oh, dear, what can the matter be?
Oh, dear, what can the matter be?
Oh, dear, what can the matter be?
When Sunday-school's only for kids.
The elders and deacons don't seem much inspired;
The trustees and leaders are often too tired,
And every last one of them ought to be "fired."
When Sunday-school's only for kids.

The preacher, himself, needs a little awakening,
The fathers and mothers all need a good shaking,
And all the church officers need a good raking,
When Sunday-school's only for kids.

THE CONSOLATIONS OF GOD.

Topic December 2: Job 15:11.

"Are the consolations of God too small for thee?
And the word that dealeth gently with thee?"

These are the old heart-searching questions—old as the sufferings and sinnings of the race. It becomes us to answer them in humility. For, with all our seeking after knowledge, and with all our advancement in what we call our modern civilization, we are still face to face with the tragedies of human lives, of which the great epic of Job is a most dramatic representation. And, sooner or later, the trial of our faith comes to most of us. Well for us, if, when that time comes, we know where to flee for refuge and for consolation. The pathetic thing in all this tragic experience of human life is that so few ever learn the source of true consolation, or turn to the God of all grace and comfort in the hour of trial. For the most part, men and women give way to grief, sorrowing in a sort of hopeless way, or else set their faces as flint against the calamities of this world and cultivate a kind of stoical stolidity, and that, too, in Christian America. Some there are that literally "curse God and die."

Multitudes seek to drown their miseries, their shame and the bitterness of memories that will not die, in the cup that deadens but to destroy; or, if it does not kill, yet blunts all the finer sensibilities of the soul and despoils the spirit of its peace and its sense of the presence of Him who only can satisfy the deeper longings of life.

Again, there are those that seek satisfaction in the social whirl, both in high life and in low; albeit, the distinction between "high" and "low" life may not be very clearly drawn, though the contrast is sometimes striking and startling, even heart-breaking. Recently I read a description of a night's experience in New York City. It gave a vivid picture of "the Great White Way," as Broadway is frequently called, under the glare of electric lights. The palaces of the millionaires and multimillionaires are illuminated with thousands of flashing lights in all colors of the rainbow; the restaurants were thronged with the late diners, who in the earlier hours of the night had thronged the theaters. There was music and laughter and small talk, mingled with the sham and shame and senselessness and misery and madness of it all. From just these circles come the Thaws, with all the mockery of manhood and degradation of womanhood, ending in murder and madness. Such is a picture of "money-mad Manhattan."

On this same night the writer went down Broadway to Twenty-fifth street, where he found a hundred "down-and-outs," lined up four deep, waiting for a place to crawl in for the night—poor unfortunates who were "sleep-starved" as well as starved in body and soul. And such scenes are repeated over and over again in New York City and in every large city in America, the richest land in the world. Recently I have been reading Jack London's "The People of the Abyss," giving a vivid description of the way the inhabitants of the "East End," London, live. It is the most appalling revelation I ever read. And that, too, in Christian England, in this the twentieth century, in the days of Edward VII, king by the grace of God.

But what of it all? It can only be that we have not even begun to learn the ethics of Christ nor the economics of the Gospel. We are far from realizing, certainly from practicing, the golden rule of Jesus, not to speak of the golden rule of his own matchless life—the giving of himself for others. What this old world needs is the Gospel of grace incarnate. Men need Christ first of all, that with him God may freely give them all things.

CHURCH EXTENSION NOTES.

Statement of receipts for October, 1908, compared with October, 1907:

	Churches.	Individuals.
For last year	$3,992 24	$1,126 04
For this year	4,750 61	3,278 10
Gain	$ 758 37	$2,152 06
Total gain	$2,910 43

Our comparative statement shows that we have made a gain of $758.37 from the churches and $2,152.06 from individuals during October, as compared with the same time last year. The board is glad to record this gain, and it is grateful to the churches and individuals who have helped to make it. We have also gained 66 in the number of contributing churches. There are many churches that have not yet sent in their offerings, and it is hoped that they will be sent in during November. Remit to G. W. Muckley, Cor. Sec., 500 Water Works Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

During the month of October the Church Extension Board received three annuity gifts: One to the amount of $500 from a brother in Michigan; one of $250 from a friend in Missouri, and another of $2,000 from a brother in Illinois. This last gift makes $4,000 that this brother has given to church extension, and his gift constitutes the two hundred and thirty-seventh gift to church extension on the annuity plan.

"Oh, that men would praise the Lord for his goodness and for his wonderful works to the children of men!"—Psa. 107:8.

Why Thanksgiving Services Fail.

These celebrations often fail to create a deep and lasting spiritual impression because of the entire lack of a sense of proportion. The temptation is, of course, very great to magnify such an opportunity of enhancing the beauty of a sanctuary by extra decorative display. There is an ineffable charm in the combination under various symbolic devices of the effects produced by exhibiting the choicest products of garden, orchard, field, and conservatory. We must not lose sight of the fact that a double appreciation of the most legitimate kind is involved in the preparation of such a picture as can thus be presented. It honors the Lord of the Harvest in his capacity as the bountiful Giver, and it acknowledges gratefully the fact that man is permitted by a high electing grace to co-operate with the divine Creator. One of the most signal marks of God's goodness is that he constantly condescends to call man into co-operation with himself. There could be no harvest excepting where God and man unite together. Thus, the great annual thanksgiving is not only a tribute of praise to Jehovah as the great Giver, but it is also an ascription of gratitude to heaven for the goodness which makes man's service an agency in the fulfillment of the divine covenant. Therefore, the decoration of places of worship at such seasons has its appropriate place.—The Homiletic Review (November).

The Last Course.

BY MARY WHITLOCK.

After having done justice to, and while still lingering around the Thanksgiving table, a pleasant diversion may be offered by considering a few other tables:

What table is worth mentioning? Notable.

What table may be regulated? Adjustable.

What table is deserving of regard? Respectable.

What table is very pleasant to the taste? Palatable.

What table is to be carried about? Portable.

What table can not be changed? Immutable.

What table belongs to a town? Constable.

What is the most grateful table? Thanksgiving table.

What table sometimes makes the small boy frown? Multiplication table.

A One-Minute Story.

There was not one of Mr. Beal's family who did not try to devise a system of mnemonics for him, from his wife down to his youngest daughter-in-law; but none of the systems proved satisfactory. It was his wife's idea to tie strings on Mr. Beal's fingers, and one afternoon he appeared before his youngest daughter-in-law with the thumb of his left hand wound about with yellow cord.

"Will you give me a cup of tea, Marian, so I shall have strength enough to go home and confess I can't remember what this thumb was tied up for?" he asked, ruefully. "I'm getting worse and worse, and I presume my wife is about discouraged with me."

"Why, Father Beal," said the pretty daughter-in-law, compassionately, "your thumb is all red! You just let me untie that cord and bathe it with alcohol and water."

"Oh, it's all right!" cried Mr. Beal, joyfully. "That was what I was to get. I remember now—alcohol for the chafing-dish!"—The Youth's Companion.

I awoke this morning with devout thanksgiving for my friends, the old and the new. Shall I not call God the Beautiful who daily showeth himself so to me in his gifts?—R. W. Emerson.

My Thanksgiving.

For the joy of work. For the chance to hit hard—when necessary. For the goodness and the grit of the fellow who may disagree with me. For the test that shows wherein I may grow stronger. For the thought that "Each new day may be as the beginning of life." For the power of Christ whom I serve. For the final victory which I know shall be mine.—Charles Stelzle.

THE OPTIMIST.

By Thomas Curtis Clark.

O a bad old world,
And a sad old world,
Is this world of sighs and tears;
With its hopes deceived,
And its hearts bereaved,
And its flood of fruitless years!
But for you and me
'Tis the best can be,—
Is this bad old, sad old world.

O a fair old world,
And a rare old world,
Is this world of deeds and dreams;
With its love-crowned days,
And its nights ablaze
With the starlight's glory-beams!
Friend, for you and me
'Tis the best can be,—
Is this fair old, rare old world.

Hurrying Him a Little.

The steamer was moving very swiftly up the broad, swift river. Several miles ahead, where there was a bend, a sharp point of land projected a considerable distance into the stream. It had been in sight nearly an hour. On the upper deck sat a young couple, engaged in earnest conversation.

"Lucinda," he was saying, "we've known each other a long time, haven't we?"

"Yes," she answered.

"Five or six years at least, isn't it?"

"I believe so."

"Don't you think a girl ought to know a fellow pretty well by that time?"

"Why, yes, of course."

"You've never heard anything bad about me, have you?"

"No."

"And in five or six years a young man ought to know a girl pretty well, oughtn't he?"

"I suppose so."

"We've been together a good deal, too, Lucinda—"

Then there was a long pause.

"And, of course, you must have suspected—"

Another protracted silence.

"Anybody would naturally suspect—though I've never been in a position until lately—and yet my mind has been made up all the time—and I can't tell you how much I—"

Then Lucinda spoke.

"Henry," she said, "do you know you remind me of this steamboat?"

"Er—how?"

"It takes you such a long time to get to the point."—Youth's Companion.

THE PEACEMAKER

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER

A Thanksgiving Story.

If anywhere on the Atlantic coast there is a more lonesome place than the lighthouse on the reef at Maybury Point, I do not know it. I shall not exactly locate the point nor tell you where it is on the map, but the lighthouse was built many years ago, that it might warn ships of dangers if they approached too near a treacherous coast. Year after year successive families have lived there without neighbors, receiving their supplies by little boats from the mainland, and cut off in summer and winter alike from any company except that of their own circle. Year after year the keepers have climbed the winding stairway to the high tower and have lighted the great lamp that has sent its flaming golden signal far out to sea, so that it has been as a star of hope and a pledge of safety to the toiling mariners hard pressed by stormy wind and blinding waves.

The lighthouse stands on a firm foundation and has resisted numberless tempests, but it has not always sheltered peaceful hearts, nor been able to dispel the gloom that falls on a group wherein there are those who have been estranged by the misunderstandings or who have cherished grudges until they have become feuds.

It is now nearly thirty years since the lighthouse at Maybury Point was occupied by a man and his wife who, beginning life with a certain capital of mutual love and confidence, had subtly grown apart until a root of bitterness had sprung up between them.

John Dillingham was naturally a silent man, and the solitude of the lighthouse life had fostered and strengthened his innate reserve until it had cramped and fettered him as if with bands of iron. When he married Ruth Fletcher, he had given her all the devotion of a strong soul, but it was not in him to be demonstrative, and he expected her to take his loyalty and affection for granted, and caresses and sweet speeches were not in his line. She was a bright, buoyant creature, who had grown up as one of a large, merry and rather boisterous family of boys and girls. Her home had been inland, and when John brought her to the shore, she did not care for the life of the sea or the beat of the surf, and on wild stormy nights she was filled with dismay and dread. Nevertheless, she came with him to live in the lighthouse with its seclusion, and she could have been happy there, lonely as it was, had she felt that her husband loved her as he had promised to do when she plighted her troth.

The little home was always as neat as a pin, and there was no lack of provisions for either body or mind. John was fond of reading, and books, magazines and newspapers found their way to his home. When the boat came every week from the mainland, a goodly store of reading and letters came over along with sugar, salt, bacon and whatever else the housekeeper wanted. Little by little, however, the husband and wife had ceased to have much intercourse, except as they briefly addressed one another, when this was an absolute necessity. Sometimes for days together they hardly spoke, and John grew daily more morose and austere, and Ruth more melancholy until she at last began to feel that she was on the verge of madness. The only companion she had that gave her any comfort was her big yellow cat, and he was growing old. She would look at him as he blinked lazily in the sun, and wonder what she would do, if anything happened to her only pet, whom she considered as almost her only friend. Her people did not often write, and what with storms and the roar of billows and John's silence, she was almost in despair. They very seldom went to church, although there was a church on the mainland to which John could have taken her had he been so inclined, but he cared little, he said, for religious forms, and as is common with those who make this assertion, he cared little, too, for the spirit that makes forms vital, and links us in close and helpful communion with our divine and loving Father.

They had almost lost the habit of keeping Thanksgiving and Christmas and other anniversaries, but it happened one year that Ruth felt herself so near the end of her endurance that she resolved for once to do as she had been accustomed to in earlier years. She told John that she meant to have a Thanksgiving dinner, and she wrote on a bit of paper a list of the provisions she wanted for a feast. He merely glanced at them and nodded, but he brought back in his boat everything she had asked for, and in addition gave her a blooming plant, one they used to call a monthly rose. He gave it to her awkwardly, in silence, but her sad face flushed and she smiled as she had not done in a long time. Ruth loved flowers, and they always bloomed for her. As her smile woke an answering gleam in his rugged face, she put out her hand and took his, and for the first time in months he stooped and kissed her. "I am glad you like it, little woman," he said. "Somehow those pink flowers looked like you."

John's guardian angel was very near him that day. He did not dream how his little gift and little compliment had turned the tide of Ruth's emotions and saved her from an idea that was rapidly settling itself in permanence in her mind. The idea had been to have one Thanksgiving dinner with John, and then in the darkness of that evening to step into a boat without oars and drift far out to sea and be seen no more. The devil that tempted her to this was daunted that day by no greater thing than a delicate flower, the work of God's hand.

The night before Thanksgiving one of the wildest storms that ever had broken on the coast, came roaring down from the north. John faithfully lit the lamp, and as he sat smoking his pipe beside the fire he pondered on the peril of those who ventured too near the shore on a night when the four winds were unleashed. Suddenly, Ruth put her hand on his arm. "What was that?" she said. They listened, and presently John hurried on his thick pilot coat and tied his cap over his ears, slipping his feet into his fishing boots. Ruth gave him the lantern she had lighted, and he set out into the darkness. They knew full well what that cry had meant, the cry of human beings in sore anguish and terror. As John expected, he found that a little fishing smack had been blown in upon the reef. A man and a boy and a little fair-haired child had been tossed from it like driftwood on the beach, and they would have perished had not help arrived in time. The child was unconscious when John picked her up and carried her into the warmth of his home, and the man and the boy had battled with the waves until they were almost exhausted. Ruth had made hot coffee and had blankets ready, and before very long she and her husband were working side by side for the relief of the shipwrecked trio. John had his own opinion of a fisherman who had known no better than to take his children out in such a night, but later he found that they had started when all was fair and that a succession of misfortunes had overtaken their tiny craft.

When the man could speak, he told his host that the little girl was no kin to him or his boy, and that they, too, were alone in the world. "My wife died," he said, "three years ago. The lad and I have kept together since and have done what we could. This baby was sent to us one night in a storm like this. We do not know anything about her except that her parents were lost off the coast in the gale that wrecked so many ships year before last. We took the little thing and have done our best for her, but I suppose in the end she will have to go to an asylum; the rough life we can give her is not fit for a girl, and now that I have lost my boat, Bob and I will have to shift somewhere else to earn our daily bread."

When morning came, it dawned bright and beautiful over the sea, the winds had ceased and the sun poured its radiance down over the creaming tide, making every ripple like a rainbow in its translucent coloring, and glorifying the long line of shore just as if heaven's own splendor had crowned it.

Ruth had washed and dressed the little maid, her fingers lingering over the task. She had dried the small garments before the fire and the little girl had slept in a night-gown of hers. As she curled the fair hair, she thought longingly what it would mean if she could have this bright little being for her own. She and John had never had a child of their own. The gift she most yearned for had been withheld, yet she had the mother heart and it seemed as though she could not help opening its doors to the waif that had been sent her in the storm. She flitted about with light foot and deft hand, cooking her Thanksgiving dinner. How glad she was that she had the turkey to roast, that her golden pumpkin pies were made and her cranberry sauce and celery were ready for the table. She brought forth from a drawer where it had been lying long her best tablecloth, and she set the table with her best dishes. It had a holiday aspect unwonted in that house. John proved himself like other men in the interest he took in her preparations, and as he sat beside the range he lifted the little child to his knee, and bent down to stroke the cat that purred at his foot. "This is more like home than usual, little woman," he said. "I wish it could be so always."

Ruth glanced at him. He read the appeal in her blue eyes. "You would like to keep this lassie, wouldn't you, wife?" he said.

"Yes, John," she answered. "It would seem very pleasant to have little feet running over the floor, and a little girl to sew for and teach, and," she hesitated, "to call me mother and you father. I should really hate to send her away to an orphan asylum, wouldn't you, John?"

Just then the little maid put up her dimpled hand and pulled John's shaggy beard. "Me stay nere," she said. "Me stay here all the time. Me love everybody."

* * * * * *

So it was settled. The little peacemaker had entered the lonesome home and the magic of child life and love melted all that had been cold and hard in the lives of the two who had grown apart. The gulf between them was bridged. Gradually and far more quickly than any one could have imagined the new interest and the new delight scattered whatever had been repellant and drew them close together. John's moodiness and Ruth's melancholy could not resist the sunshine of a child's mirth and gladness. The little thing took their hearts by storm, even as a storm had swept her within their doors Their house for her was God's orphan asylum and from the day she came to them they dated the beginning of their real thankfulness and real thought of God.

For as John and Ruth had once been children in Christian homes, they could not bring up this child of their adoption without a Christian education, so Ruth found the little child's catechism that she had used when she was a little one at home, and taught it to her golden-haired Bessie. Then on sunny Sabbath days the boat was made ready and they sailed to the mainland and went to church. Before another twelvemonth had slipped over their heads, it had been verified in their experience that the kingdom of heaven enters hearts that are childlike, and by the hand of a little child they had been led back to love and peace and home.

A THANKSGIVING DAY

By Virginia S. Alston.

"Oh, dear, I wonder why it invariably rains when a body has made plans for an outing. Now, here we are, cooped up in the house, with nothing to do to vary the monotony." And Blanche Edgecomb placed her elbows upon the table in front of her and her hands went up to the face that was turned toward the rain-spattered window pane.

"Brace up, Blanche; I know what we can do," said her brother Percy, who, being just past his nineteenth birthday, was beginning to assume some guardianship over his pretty young sister, who was two years his junior.

"What is it, Percy?"

"Why, we will just get Cousin Tom to come and give us one of his interesting stories, and you know that is always a treat."

"Well, go at once and see if he will come," hopefully replied Blanche.

"So, I am to fill up a blank place and chase the blues away, eh?" These were the words, uttered in a quick, cheery voice, that fell upon Blanche's ears a few moment's later, and at once she began to feel that this was not to be a lost day after all. "Cousin Tom, we want a real true story this time," said Blanche.

"Yes, and tell us something about your boyhood days, please," interrupted Percy.

"Well, let's see," and the pleasant-faced gentleman whom Percy had escorted to the room looked thoughtfully for a moment, and said: "As to-morrow is Thanksgiving, I believe I will tell you of something that happened on that day a good many years ago, and of which I was thinking a little bit before you came to me; in fact, there never comes a Thanksgiving day but what my mind jumps right back to it, and I almost imagine for the moment that I am the boy again, with all the glad feeling and the rest of it. I was very fond of hunting, and one day I had permission to go out in quest of game. I had generally been pretty lucky, especially during the rabbit season, but that day I couldn't hit a thing and was getting discouraged, when I ran up on something that to my boyish mind was far ahead of any other day's hunt, so I dropped all thought of further game and hurried home to show my mother my trophy. What do you suppose it was, Percy? Nothing less than a tiny squirrel just three inches long. I thought it was the cutest thing I had ever seen. I never doubted that it would strike mother just as it had me. Imagine my surprise to see instead a look of unutterable sadness, and to hear her, in shocked tones, say: 'Oh, Harold, how could you?' I always wanted a pet squirrel, and I am going to have this one and raise it, mother."

"'Harold, you surely ought to know that it is too young to live without its mother; it's too bad to have taken it from its rightful home.'

"My joy was all turned to bitterness of heart at mother's words, and I wanted to be alone to think over what was the best thing to do about it. I was sorry I had not thought more seriously about it before capturing it, but now that I had, it must not die; surely there was a way to raise it, to save its life; so I sat and pondered. Suddenly I had a thought and I said aloud: "That's just the thing." Away I flew to the old woodshed. Tabby, our old Maltese cat, was housed there with her five new baby kittens, and I waited near by until I saw her leave them for a few moments, and I felt that my only chance was right there and then. I tenderly laid my tiny hairless baby squirrel down beside the kittens. I was feeling relieved and sure I had solved the question of how to raise it, when it occurred to me I should have removed one of the kittens that she might not look upon my pet as an intruder if she found an addition to her family. So I quickly went back and took out a kitten.

"Cousin Tom," Blanche exclaimed, horror stricken, "you surely didn't drown it?"

"Oh, no; I had been in sackcloth and ashes enough for one day through harm to a helpless creature. I had promised it to a girl friend next door, so off I went with it, and I hastily returned to tell my news to Mother. She could not help laughing at me this time, for she said it was such a ridiculous thing I had done. "Why, who ever heard of such a thing as a cat raising a squirrel?" When she saw how badly her words made me feel, she changed and said, 'Well, who knows? We can but hope for the best, and any way you couldn't have kept it; so cheer up and come with me to do some Thanksgiving shopping.'"

I wasn't a very happy boy, you can well imagine, nor did I get to sleep that night without much wondering as to what was going on in that woodshed. I had asked God in my prayers that he would watch over the life of that motherless little squirrel, and some way I took comfort in my heart that he would. The next morning I could not get into my clothes fast enough, and soon went flying down to the old woodshed. Fortunately, I saw Tabby scampering off in another direction, and I knew the coast was clear; and yet, when I got to the place I just felt like shutting my eyes for fear of—I knew not exactly what. When I did muster up courage to look, there lay nestled together my pet and the four kittens. Joy, think you I felt? Well, that didn't half express it; but what do you suppose was the first thing I did?

"You ran quickly to your mother to come and look," said Percy.

"No, not until I had knelt there and thanked God for answering my prayer and

Charcoal Removes Stomach Poisons

Pure Charcoal Will Absorb One Hundred Times Its Volume In Poisonous Gases.

Charcoal was made famous by the old monks of Spain, who cured all manner of stomach, liver, blood and bowel troubles by this simple remedy.

One little nervous Frenchman held forth its virtues before a famous convention of European physicians and surgeons. Secheyron was his name. He was odd, quaint and very determined. His brothers in medicine laughed at his claims. Thereupon he swallowed two grains of strychnine, enough to kill three men, and ate some charcoal. The doctors thought him mad, but he did not even have to go to bed. The charcoal killed the effects of the strychnine and Secheyron was famous. Ever since that day physicians have used it. Run impure water through charcoal and you have a pure, delicious drink.

Bad breath, gastritis, bowel gases, torpid liver, impure blood, etc., give way before the action of charcoal.

It is really a wonderful adjunct to nature and is a most inexhaustible storehouse of health to the man or woman who suffers from gases or impurities of any kind.

Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges are made of pure willow charcoal, sweetened to a palatable state with honey.

Two or three of them cure an ordinary case of bad breath. They should be used after every meal, especially if one's breath is prone to be impure.

These little lozenges have nothing to do with medicine. They are just sweet, fresh willow, burned to a nicety for charcoal making and fragrant honey, the product of the bee. Thus every ingredient comes to man from the lap of nature.

The only secret lies in the Stuart process of compressing these simple substances into a hard tablet or lozenge, so that age, evaporation or decay may not assail their curative qualities.

You may take as many of them as you wish, and the more you take the quicker will you remove the effects of bad breath and impurities arising from a decayed or decaying meal. They assist digestion, purify the blood and help the intestines and bowels throw off all waste matter.

Go to your druggist at once and buy a package of Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges, price 25 cents. You will soon be told by your friends that your breath is not as bad as it was. Send us your name and address and we will send you a trial package by mail free. Address F. A. Stuart Co., 200 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

preserving the life of my pet. I then did what you guessed, and I don't know which was the happier, when we stood together looking at them. She was glad for me, you understand."

"Did it live?" Blanche interrupted.

"Yes, strange and miraculous as it seems, the squirrel thrived and grew, and it was a wonderful sight to see that old cat leading it around just as she did her kittens. It knew no other mother, and played around her as they did, but sometimes I imagine that when it would run up a tree, or show some of the squirrel instinct, she wondered at it. People came from all over the country to see the cat leading around such a queer family. It was a curiosity, indeed. That day was about as happy a Thanksgiving day as I have known, children, and I guess you don't wonder at it."

MAKING OTHERS THANKFUL.

Said old gentleman Gay, "On a Thanksgiving Day,
If you want a good time, then give something away."
So he sent a fat turkey to Shoemaker Price,
And the shoemaker said, "What a big bird, how nice!
And since such a good dinner's before me I ought To give Widow Lee the small chicken I bought."
"This fine chicken, oh, see!" said the good Widow Lee.
"I would like to make some one as happy as I—I'll give washwoman Biddy my big pumpkin pie!"
"Just to look at its yellow face gladdens my eyes.
Now it's my turn," said Biddy, "and a sweet ginger cake
For the motherless Flinnigan children I'll bake."
Said the Flinnigan children, Rose, Denny and Hugh—
"It smells sweet of spice, and we'll carry a slice
To little lame Jake, who has nothing that's nice."
"Oh, I thank you, and thank you!" said little lame Jake;
"Oh, what a bootiful, bootiful cake,
And oh, such a big slice! I will save all the crumbs,
And give them to each little sparrow that comes."
And the sparrows twittered as if they would say,
Like old gentleman Gay, "On a Thanksgiving Day
If you want a good time, then give something away."

Advance Society Letters.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

The question that presents itself to my mind is this: If Felix had stayed in Missouri would he now be sitting around with one of his ears bent back at half-mast, showing plainly that he has been into an Arkansas fight? The other day Felix came creeping into the house with that ear all bloody and battered. It waved about his rounded sheeplike nose like a gory battle-flag carried through the heat of carnage. His ear said, "We have met the enemy," and his whiskers seemed to boast, "But they are ours." I am not so sure of that, for I regret to say I can not always trust Felix's word. I am sure that if Felix triumphed in that encounter the other cat must have very few lives left to go upon.

I have here a letter from one who joined the Advance Society before Felix came to me as a nameless stray in the land of my Taft and Stone Missouri home. Those who knew the Av. S. in past years will remember Madge Masters, who now writes from Charlestown, Ark.:

"Dear Advance Society Workers—It has been so long since I wrote to send in a quarterly report, that I scarcely know where to begin. I am not now at Ozark, Ark., but am teaching in a public school. I have the intermediate department, and like the work very much. How is Felix getting along?" (His ear seems to have healed, but I fear very little hair will come out on it. The tip points backward, giving him a comical air, a touch of humor, which is far from being reflected in his feeling.) "I am grieved very much over the fact that I will have to part with my beloved Pyramus next spring, for the family is going to Modesto, Cal., and I am afraid the climate would not agree with him, so he must be left behind." (He might find a Thisbe down there, in which case the climate would be nothing to him. But who is Pyramus? Has he ever been introduced to us?) "I did not send anything for Drusie's shower in August, but will now. Mamma sends 50 cents for Charlie and Drusie, each; I send the same; and I also send 90 cents for an Av. S. gold pin. I lost the one I had." (I will order the pin to-day. The pin is a small stickpin, representing an open book with the letters "Av. S." engraved thereon. I order them from New York, so it usually takes about a week to get them.) "How are Charlie and Drusie getting along?" (I'll let Drusie speak for herself in a few moments; but Charlie is studying so hard I don't like to interrupt him.) "Have you had any 'possum and sweet potatoes this fall? I have had the sweet potatoes, but not the 'possum, so far." (I too, have gone just so far.) "Where are Bertha Underwood and Margaret Sturges, now? I would like to hear from them, and from some of the other Av. S. members. I am sending in my report for my twenty-fifth quarter."

Our election was November 2. Prosperity set in on November 3 with this from Ruth Moos, Parkland, Wash.: "I am a little girl eight years old. I live near Tacoma, Wash. My papa takes THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, and we read the Advance Society letters. Enclosed find 50 cents for Drusie."

Health is still fine at Colorado Springs. From there Isabelle Pimes, of 415 North Corona street, writes: "Enclosed find a one-dollar bill for Charlie. Wish it could be multiplied a hundredfold. I enjoy the Av. S. letters very much, and read them all. May God bless this great work of faith and labor of love."

From Kimball, Minn., writes Mrs. W. P. West: "I must say I am trying to live a Christian life, too. I have been reading the Av. S. letters, and I feel thankful when I read about so many good people who give so much to a good cause. I am much interested in orphan Charlie and missionary Drusie, and want to help them, so enclosed find 25 cents for each. The Av. S. is surely a grand work. May it live long, is my prayer."

Two days after the election, Missouri was still able to lift up her head, look the nation in the face, and write to the Av. S., in the person of Mrs. Kate Keithly, of Center. Center, by the way, is in Ralls county, and when I hear of Ralls county I always think of Rensalear. When I was a very little boy I used to go to Rensalear to make connection with my aunt's farm over in Marion county. Oh, what fun it was to spend the summer on my aunt's farm, after nine months in the coal-sooty city! And once we drove to Ralls County Cave, and after that we children dug caves of our own. There was a big pond on my aunt's farm and a boat on the pond, and me in the boat; dear me, it was so long ago! I was only about six years old, the last time I went to Rensalear, and likely enough they have forgotten me there by this time. Well, there weren't many there to forget, when I saw that city last. But Mrs. Kate Keithly will not be thanking me for taking up all this space when it is she who writes the letter:

"Enclosed find a few belated drops ($1.10) for Drusie's shower. None of us are members of the Av. S., but I presented the matter to my Sunday-school class and all responded most cheerfully.

For Thanksgiving.

Six little turkeys, and all in a row!
Now what they were hatched for, they didn't know;
Our grandmamma did, but she would not tell;
She watered and fed them every day well.
But not one of the six heard her once say
She was fattening them for Thanksgiving Day.

Six little turkeys! From morning till night
They would run away and hide out of sight.
Grandmamma's sunbonnet scarcely at all
Found time to hang on its peg on the wall;
For they kept her all summer watching about
The byways and hedges, calling them out.

Six large, fat turkeys, and all in a row
On Thanksgiving morning! One was to go
To Sam, one to Tom, another to Lu,
(Dear little grandchildren, loving and true);
One was to be sent to poor Widow Gray,
With six helpless children to feed that day.
Our Betty cooked one for lame little Joe—
His mother is sick and feeble, you know.
Grandmamma was so happy she didn't mind
Running all summer the turkeys to find;
She knew when the Proclamation came round,
The very best place for each would be found.

For Coughs

Never hesitate to ask your doctor about Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. It is a regular medicine, a strong medicine, a doctor's medicine.

It would be very interesting to know how many years your family physician has prescribed Ayer's Cherry Pectoral for coughs, colds, and all forms of lung troubles. Ask him the next time you see him. We know physicians who have used it for over half a century.

J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.

The following send their dimes with mine: Misses Fannie Clark, Edith Turner, Mabel Layne, Maggie Foster, Laura Rigg, Kate Blater, Nina Scanland, Mrs. Mothersead, Mrs. Sperry. My grandmother, who lived near Mt. Sterling, Ky., was Miss Elizabeth Ellis, and her mother was a Breckenridge. I close with best wishes to all connected with the Av. S." (My mother was a Breckenridge, and her mother was an Ellis; Nancy Ellis, of Campbellsburg, Ky. But I do not know anything about poor Felix. He was just a stray, the first time I ever saw him.)

You will remember little Clarissa Jacobs, of Kalona, Ia.; she is too young to read, but she is being carried through the Av. S. by her mother. Here are some of the quotations Clarissa learned, which were sent with her quarterly report:

"True politeness is to do and to say
The kindest thing in the kindest way."
"Little children, love one another."
"In God we trust."
"Be kind and you will receive kindness."
"With Christ in the vessel,
I smile at the storm."
"Order is heaven's first law."

It is interesting to note these quotations memorized by a little girl who has not yet reached the age that will allow her to go to school. Ponder this fact well, then tell me that you can not keep the Advance Society rules! I do not so much wonder that our dear little friend Clarissa belongs to the Av. S., as I do that so many mothers all over "this land of ours" (pardon the effect of stump-speaking) are doing nothing for their children, except feeding and clothing them!

Clarence, Mo.: "Some belated drops ($1.80) for Drusie's shower from class No. 2 of the Christian Sunday-school." (It will be remembered that in our last page we credited this same Sunday-school class with $1.60.)

So Deneen is elected governor in Illinois once more, and Mrs. Ernest Adams, of Dietrich, says: "Enclosed find 50 cents for Drusie. May God bless her efforts."

Oklahoma, which took such a leading part in the national drama that closed November 2, has a word to say from Apache; the writer is Mrs. T. W. McComb: "I have been a reader of the Av. S. since the organization came into being. How I do enjoy reading it all, watching its advancement, and the good deeds done by our young people! I am wishing great things for Charlie. Drusie has chosen what would have been my life-work, had I had the opportunity that girls have to-day. I know, dear Drusie, what it is to have the burden of souls on one's heart. I have worked a great deal among Sunday-school children. I have worked from the primary work up to superintendent and loved it all. I had the desire of my heart to be a foreign missionary. So I send you a mite to aid in your shower; ten drops from Apache, Okla., with my prayer that you may be all I desired to be, and far more. Yours is a great opportunity; may you keep humble, and may God richly bless your labors."

Daisy M. Smith, Johnson, Ark.: "I am much interested in Drusie. Her letters indicate a consecrated heart and 'a life hid with Christ in God.' Enclosed find a check for $5, which please send Drusie, and the prayers of my husband mingle with mine that she may accomplish much for God in China. I am a sincere friend of the work and a sister in the church."

I think in our next page we can print the very last of the letters that helped in Drusie's shower, and give the sum total of drops. We will close this week with a word from our missionary Drusie.

Dreams.

If a little child be ever so good,
As good as a child can be;
Wee Willie Winkie comes over the hill
With his sack of dreams—comes he.
One little dream of a truly train,
One little dream of a candy cane,
One little dream of a woolly sheep,
One little dream of a doll to keep,
One little dream of a rub-a-dub drums,
One little dream of a top that hums,
One little dream of a trumpet red,
One little dream of a brand new sled.
One litttle dream of a chocolate drop—
Dream upon dream, and they never stop.
If a good little child be ever so good,
As good as a child can be;
Wee Willie Winkie—why, here he is!
"Shut your eyes, quick," says he.

—Carolyn S. Bailey, in The Congregationalist.

"The beautiful wild flowers, roses, honeysuckles and pomegranate blossoms brought by the girls, keep our rooms full of sweet fragrance. Here at the mountains, when the baby-girl of one of the missionaries died, the school girls brought enough flowers to twice cover the casket. The people are unusually friendly. Women and children come alone or in twos and threes, and sometimes a dozen at a time, all during the day. All day the evangelist is kept busy in the chapel where men come to inquire, or to buy gospel literature. Several of my girls frequently come before I have finished breakfast. Our most regular meetings are those at early morning and late afternoon. I hope to study from 9 to 12, and three hours each afternoon, until I have mastered a working knowledge of Chinese. Besides study and meetings, I shall try to do some house visiting. And there are household duties to be done. I hope to devote a sort of 'children's hour' each day to Mrs. Nowack's two children (age 2 and 4), filling it with Bible stories and children's classes. Then we go walking together for our daily exercise. The children enjoy this very much, being such little prisoners in the small compound. If any one could help me add pleasure to these lonely ones, deprived of homeland—childhood's joys, I shall appreciate it. It takes so little to give them joy. Ruth and Esther often ask me to 'read' to them—meaning to tell stories or poems. They are trying to learn the alphabet. The other day 2-year-old Esther grew lonesome and came to me saying, 'C!'—which is her way of saying she wants to repeat her A, B, C's. She repeated the entire alphabet nine times before she grew weary of it." (Never did I suspect our rather tiresome and commonplace English alphabet capable of giving so much comfort and enjoyment.) "The bridge over the river at Hannow (our foreign port) washed away, and for about ten days we have had no mail from Hankow." (I hope that dress goods I sent you is safely waiting to get to you from there.) "I hope some pictures, catalogues, etc., are on their way here. My girls enjoy them so much."

A later note from Drusie, dated September 7: "Here we are at Kio Shan once more. You may remember that it is the place I had to wait eighteen days last winter, when en route to Pi Yang. We have left the mountain resort and are on our way to our station (Pi Yang) for another year's work amongst our people. In a way we regretted to leave our little mountain cabin. It is lovely to be in the mountain air, with the hills, valleys, clouds, wild flowers—and with the dear missionaries. But all of them are hastening away for another year of labor, and oh! how eager they seemed to start for their beloved work! Only the intense heat and the cholera kept them in the mountain so long. Around Hankow, our province capital, the natives died by the hundreds and seven foreigners died.

To Our Subscribers,
Dear Friends:—

In answer to numerous inquiries, I desire to say that our offer to send The Christian-Evangelist for three months, to any new subscriber, for 25c, is still effective; and this offer will remain open for acceptance, during the month of December, closing with the advent of the new year.

In this connection, we desire to heartily thank so many of our subscribers, who have taken advantage of this opportunity to introduce this paper to their friends who were not subscribers, some of whom were members of the Christian church, and some not. There is no better missionary work, than to put one of our religious journals in a home that is not thoroughly acquainted with our plea, and before the first of January, 1909, we are hoping that we may add to our subscription list, several thousand new names, and this can be readily done, in a remarkably short time, if every one interested, will act quickly.

Now, the proposition is simply this: Send us four new names and a One Dollar bill, eight new names and a Two Dollar bill, or twelve new names and Three Dollars in currency. Don't bother to go to the Post Office and get a money order; just send us the money, and we will be responsible for it reaching us. This, of course, applies only on this special offer, and not for the payment, or prepayment, of regular subscriptions.

Sincerley yours,
W. Daviess Pittman
Business Manager.

We all agree with Pius X in his view about women singing in choirs. An announcement has been made which a Catholic Editor says "will be of general interest." The Holy Father was recently asked whether female voices are permitted in the choirs of Catholic churches in this country. We know that it is not customary to have them in Europe nor even are there many Episcopal churches in Great Britain where mixed voices are used. The Pope's reply was that the "female voices may be retained provided the women give no scandal by their conduct, and sing in a pious manner." The Pope's reason is a sound one, but the boot can be put on the other foot as well. The same reason ought to obtain whether male or female voices be in question. Correct conduct is what is required by a choir, whether the singers be men or women or boys or girls. We do not expect a preacher to be indecorous in the pulpit. We do not expect a congregation to act with levity in the pews. The house of God is a place where reverence and good order should prevail. When a choir in its usually conspicuous position in the building fails to realize that it is participating in an act of worship and is not in some grand-stand or theater parquet, the services of that choir may very well be dispensed with.

Not all Catholics are agreed upon the subject of the Missionary Congress which recently convened in Chicago, and which was opened with the most imposing ceremonies. The aim of the gathering seems to have been to strengthen the faith of those within the fold of the church rather than discuss mission methods proper. The significance of the event is in the fact that there is recognition of an appalling loss to Catholicism in the falling away from the faith. It has been estimated that up to the present at least three millions of those who have come to the United States from abroad have given up their faith. We believe these figures are far short of the real numbers. To stop this leakage seems to be at present more the consideration of the leaders of the church than any strictly missionary ideals. The Catholic church, in a large measure, has ceased to be a missionary force. Now and again we read of perverts to that faith from churches most akin to it, but its winning converts outside of those raised within its fold is somewhat limited; and its anxiety over its own losses is one that is shared by all religious bodies. The subject which the Catholics are now concerned about is one worthy of the serious thought of all of us.

The stirring of the dead things goes on in the East. A few weeks ago we reported the introduction of electric lights in the tomb of Mohammed. Another interesting event is reported from far-off Nazareth. When the news of the granting of the Turkish Constitution reached that little town there at once convened an assembly of leading Moslems and Christians. After reading a portion of the Koran the Moslem governor, who presided at the gathering, made an address, in which he emphasized the duties of love and equality which all Ottoman subjects are henceforth to show to one another. He then invited the native pastor of the English Mission church to speak. This is the first instance in Palestine when a Christian sermon was preached in a Moslem pulpit, for the meeting was held in the Mosque. The English preacher said, among other things, that the ideas of liberty, brotherhood and equality among men, which the new era has ushered in, were the very principles which the "Son of Mary" had come into the world to proclaim. The significance of such an event is great, indeed. At the very time when American Christians, through their representatives, are in conference over the things wherein they can work together more sympathetically and effectively than through the divisive frictions of the past, comes the news of the approach of Moslem and Christian in the East.

New Life in the Orient.

It is very difficult for the party man to look over the party fence without seeing "bad things." Here is some kind of an agreement between Japan and the United States announced, and at once there is the cry of "spooks." Because George Washington acted in such a fashion, some people think the United States to-day must govern itself in foreign relations as he did. They overlook the fact that the diurnal revolving of the earth has shaken old countries almost unheard of by Westerners in Washington's time into new life, and that America faces new conditions. The fact that Europe almost universally approves the Japanese-American "agreement" ought in itself to count for much. It is true that the United States and Japan ought not to need to proclaim their friendship. Yet it has not been many months since there was talk of war between them when the great American fleet sailed for the Orient. The trouble with nine out of ten Americans is that they do not know one iota about old world polities. The single comment of the well-informed, but conservative Standard of London, is worth any amount of American editorial party opinions. The Standard says: "In plain English, it means an alliance for military and naval operations, when the American and Japanese governments agree to communicate with each other as to advisable measures in event of the disturbance of the status quo. The object is so laudable that no outside nation can take offense." The "agreement" is for moral influence, not for war purposes.

The president-elect on the water wagon! Why not? That seems to us a more reasonable question than, why? Some comment was made at a dinner party a few evenings ago on the fact that Mr. Taft's glass was turned down. "It is going to stay turned down," he is reported to have said. "I am not going to drink anything ever again," he added. Whereupon there is a newspaper hubbub, and we are treated to the information that this is purely a personal matter, that there has been no teetotaler regime in the president's house since the days of Mrs. Hayes, that this does not mean the banishment of liquor from public dinners, and so on. Whatever the reason of Mr. Taft's action, the action is commendable, and will be so regarded by the mass of the American people. Mr. Taft is doubtless not ignorant of the fact that county after county in his own state has voted out liquor within the past few weeks. He knows that the temperance sentiment of the United States never was stronger. Even as a matter of policy, his action in turning down his glass shows good judgment. We have the greater faith in the real sincerity of his motives in that the action is not by demand, but has been taken in a quiet way and after his election. It is a strong indication of the caliber of the man and of his realization of a new relationship. The oldest literature in the world abounded in warnings against drinking of wine, and the oldest temperance document on record is in Book X of the "Shu King." It ascribes ruin of states, great and small, to the free use of spirits. It concludes: "As to the ministers and officers who have been led to it and been addicted to drink, let them be taught for a time. If they keep my lesson I will give them bright distinction. If you disregard my lessons, then I, the one man, will show you no pity. As you can not cleanse your way, you shall be classed with those who are to be put to death." Mr. Taft, maybe, has been reading the old Chinese. If so, he has run across another saying of that Oriental people:

Taft's Glass.

> "First the man takes a dram,
> Then the dram takes a dram,
> Then the dram takes the man."

Whether this be his inspiration to the turning down of his glass or no, we are sure that the American people are not going to turn him down for taking such a sensible step.

Concerning Faith and Opinion.

There is every indication that our symposium on "Faith and Opinion," which we are continuing this week, is to be a memorable one in the history of religious discussion among us. Both the principles of Christian liberty and the practicability of Christian union are involved in this discussion. We had supposed, until a few years ago, that there were very clearly defined convictions among us as to the meaning of the motto, "In faith unity; and in opinion liberty." A number of things have occurred in recent years leading to a different view. Especially have recent events convinced us that there is need for a restudy of this cardinal principle of our movement, to the end that we may urge with greater force of conviction and clearness of discrimination, our plea for union.

Most of the writers in this symposium, it will be seen, agree in making Christ the object of faith, and obedience to his plain requirements a test of loyalty, and the possession of his Spirit the measure of Christian character. In other words, they accept the Christo-centric view of our position and our plea. Some of the replies, however, are more vague and less satisfactory upon this point. They press the necessity of agreement as to the value and meaning of every part of the Bible. They do not seem to distinguish clearly between what may justly be regarded as helpful and even important, and what is essential to Christian faith and character. One view of the Old Testament may be more helpful than another view in our understanding of Christ and of his religion; and yet whoever accepts Christ, no matter what may be his particular view as to the Scriptures as respects any theory of inspiration, date or authorship, is to be regarded as a Christian. In other words, it is our attitude toward Christ that decides our Christian character and standing, and not our views of a hundred other questions that may grow out of Biblical history. The capital mistake of the creeds of Christianity was that they failed to make this distinction. They pronounced upon such recondite problems as foreknowledge, foreordination, final perseverance, free-will, falling from grace, original sin, theories of the atonement, etc., as if these views were equally binding as the inspired statement concerning the Christhood and deity of Jesus of Nazareth. Granting that these positions might have been true, it is clear they do not belong to the category of faith—the faith that is essential to salvation—the things upon which we must agree in order to be one.

The greatest stride forward made by the pioneers of our movement was their clear recognition of the central position of Christ in the Scriptures, and in Christianity, and that to believe in him as the Christ of God was to accept all that was vital and necessary to Christian life and conduct. This has been the strength and hope of our plea for Christian union. It is the growing recognition of this truth in other religious bodies that is bringing the people of God closer together. It is no time, therefore, for us to entertain vague notions about what the faith is. The faith is faith in Jesus Christ, and that faith involves obedience to his requirements. This faith in Christ and obedience to him, brings us into free citizenship in the kingdom of God, where all truth lies before us, and where we are free to make continuous progress in the knowledge of the truth, without let or hindrance. We may differ, but we differ as brethren.

This is the position of the Disciples, and we can not surrender it without disloyalty to the plea of the fathers and to Jesus Christ himself.

The Man and His Appendix.

Brother Chilton is always thoughtful and thought-provoking. His letter, to be found elsewhere, in reply to the question of our symposium, helps to clarify the situation. His dislike of "the attitude toward Christianity into which our question leads," grows out of a slight misapprehension, both of the purpose and meaning of our question. We do not discredit or undervalue the importance of opinions and of theology. We believe there is vastly too little, instead of too much, theology, of the right kind. It is not a question whether this or that view is important, but whether it belongs to the class of subjects upon which we may differ and be brethren. That in what the "line" between faith and opinion signifies. Not that one is allowable and the other disallowable, but simply that the one represents that in which there must be unity, and the other that in which there may be liberty for difference of opinion.

Brother Chilton's reference to the vermiform appendix illustrates the point. He prefers to have his. We agree with him. But suppose he should attach so much importance to his appendix that he would refuse to recognize, as a man, one who had been so unfortunate as to be deprived of his appendix. That would be moral appendicitis! In that case it would be necessary to admonish Brother Chilton that a man might surrender his appendix, and be a man "for a' that," and be entitled to his recognition as such. The same is true of an eye, of an ear, of an arm, or a leg, or any other part of the human body. They are all of them important, but none of them essential to manhood.

In the estimation of Prof. Willett's critics he has lost or surrendered certain views which many of his brethren yet hold as important. Is it the vermiform appendix, figuratively speaking, that he has lost, or some more important but still non-essential view? Or has he lost that which is essential to Christian faith and Christian character? Can we call him a Christian and treat him as such, even though we may regard him in error on some points? Or shall we discard him because of certain views which he has discarded? That depends, you see, upon whether the things on which he differs from others among us are matters of opinion, wherein there is liberty, or matters of faith, wherein there must be unity. The Centennial committee, in reaffirming his appointment to a place on the Centennial program, did so on the ground that his differences with his brethren relate to matters about which there must be liberty of opinion, and concerning which there can not be uniformity—not, at least, until we attain a higher degree of perfection than we have yet reached. We believe the committee acted in perfect harmony with the genius and spirit of our religious movement in doing so, and that it could not, consistently, have done otherwise.

The purpose of our question, then, as to the line between faith and opinion, was not to limit the minds of the brethren to the things of faith, wherein there must be unity, but rather to secure liberty for the widest range of thought in all the wide realm of God's infinite truth. This is the liberty which Brother Chilton claims and exercises, and which makes him the free and independent thinker that he is. This is "the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free," and wherein we must "stand fast" if we are to achieve the work to which God has called us.

"Supremacy of the Heart Life."*

This is the happy title of Dr. Moore's latest book. Nothing is more beautiful and gratifying than to see one grow old in years, not only gracefully, but thoughtfully, living abreast of the times and keeping in touch with its thought. Dr. Moore has been able in a remarkable degree to do this. He is not only a wide reader of books, but a close student of the current movements of thought, both among ourselves and others. There are many men of his age who are stranded in the shallows of their own thought and life because they have not kept in touch with the advancing thought and life of the world.

Dr. Moore treats his subject historically. He shows that the trouble with the race from the beginning is that the intellect has often advanced at the expense of the heart, and the moral life has been sacrificed on the altar of mere knowledge. This leads him to deal with the problem of evil in the world. The author believes in a personal devil over against a personal God, but does not exalt his power so as to make a dual government of the world. He sees in the existence of evil the essential condition of that conflict, without which the race could not have made the progress which it has in moral achievement. God is not the author of evil, but He is the author of man, whom He created free, and who, in the exercise of that freedom, sinned. This was unavoidable if man was to be a free being. Besides, suffering has its place in the moral education of the race. Jesus himself was made perfect through suffering. How much more does the ordinary man require the discipline of affliction to work out his moral redemption!

Dr. Moore is a free and fearless thinker, and his readers will not be able to follow him in all his theories; but when he has presented his theories, he always comes down to solid facts, about which there can be no dispute. He believes the Bible is a trustworthy record of God's dealings with man, and accepts its history and its facts without explanation. The strength of his faith is equal to the freedom and discursive character of his thought.

Jesus Christ is the solution of all our problems—the hope of the world. "He was the fulfillment of all the types, prophecies and hopes of the ages preceding his coming. He met, in his great personality, all the conditions necessary to restore man to the position which he had lost by the transgression in Eden. Indeed, the program of Christ involves much more for man than that which he enjoyed before the fall; and it is this fact which helps to justify and explain the long period of suffering intervening between the first paradise and the second; for this suffering was not only the preparation of man for the 'Coming One,' but has, also, been a means of man's development under the reign of Him who was Himself made perfect through suffering" (p. 179). The author's treatment of the mission of Christ is suggestive and instructive to a high degree, but our space forbids lengthy quotation. Needless to say, the transcendent character of Christ is duly emphasized, and his authority made supreme. Through it all runs the thought of the title —"Supremacy of the Heart Life." Vain is all our education which does not result in the purity of heart by which we see God! Vain is all our pretension to religion if it does not cleanse the heart, out of which flow the issues of life!

No work, we think, that has ever emanated from the brain and heart of this eminent servant of God will do more credit to the author and more good to the world than his latest book. We commend it to our readers for its clearness of thought, its strength and sweep of argument, its emphasis on the heart life, and its exaltation of Jesus Christ. May its ripe and experienced author live many years yet to write other books that will point men, as does this one, to the "Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world."

Let us not doubt for a moment but that the sun of truth will soon dispel whatever fogs may have beclouded the minds of brethren, and we shall see the path of duty clearly, and walk therein cheerfully and triumphantly. Let us never forget that there is an unseen Presence which is guiding all honest seekers after truth, and that under his guidance we shall come to know the truth, and the truth shall make us free—free from bigotry and uncharitableness, as well as from the paralyzing influence of error.

Notes and Comments

A correspondent writes wishing to know if it is true, as it appears from the protests which he sees printed in the Christian Standard, that the Centennial committee has placed on its Centennial program an "infidel," or one who denies the divinity of Christ and the inspiration and authority of the Bible. The question is pertinent and important. Our answer is, in behalf of the Centennial committee, that it has done nothing of the kind, if it knows what it has done. We guarantee that the committee will unanimously request the resignation of any man on that program who can be shown to be an infidel or a disbeliever in the deity and Lordship of Jesus Christ, or who denies the inspiration and authority of the Scriptures. If he should refuse to resign, we guarantee that the committee will declare his place vacant, and will fill it with a believer.

What, then, is the obvious course for those brethren to pursue who charge the committee with having appointed such a man on its program? They should take steps at once to ascertain whether the man, or the men they have in view fill the description above given. Prof. Willett, who is the one usually named as denying these truths, has just made a statement through the Christian Century, answering these charges, and setting forth his real position. In all fairness the Christian Standard ought to publish at least the substance of this statement. Referring to the Four Gospels, he says:

"I accept their statements regarding the birth, youth, ministry, miracles, teachings, character and purpose of Jesus. I believe the book of Acts to be a reliable record of the origin of the Christian Society, and especially as illuminated by the epistles of Paul, an authentic narration of that apostle's ministry. * * *

"But what I wish to affirm with emphasis is my belief that the New Testament, whatever its origin and literary history, is a collection of documents with a single message—Jesus is the Son of God, the word made flesh, the revelation of the Father's life, and thus our only sufficient interpreter of the nature and purpose of God. Jesus has made to the world a disclosure of the true life of a child of God and by his sacrificial life and death has shown how men may live in relations of sonship and happiness with God. The Gospel is the 'good news' of this way of restoring men to filial estate, and the message of Christ, wherever proclaimed and tried, has proved its divine nature and power. The New Testament did not create the church, but it is its most precious possession as the record of its beginnings and of the teachings of the Master which are the norm of Christian life."

Of course, if one wishes to form his estimate of Prof. Willett's views from the garbled report of the daily papers rather than from his own deliberate explanation of his position, the foregoing extracts will be lightly dismissed as unconvincing; but fair-minded brethren, who wish to know the exact truth, will be disposed to accept the Professor's own statements at their face value, and judge him accordingly. Prof. Willett has an article defining his view of our religious movement, which would be acceptable in any of our religious conventions, and which, as a matter of fact, has been presented in substance and received with enthusiasm by such conventions. At the meeting of the Centennial committee at Pittsburg, before the vote was taken on his retention on the program, Prof. Willett declared that he "accepts not only the inspiration of the Scriptures, but their plenary inspiration; that he accepts the atonement and all the facts of our faith, including the miracles of the New Testament and the divine character of our Lord."

Now, if the brethren who are so free in making their "protests" will ask themselves, seriously, whether a committee charged with the duty of preparing a program that would represent all classes of our people, would be justified in rejecting, on account of his opinions, one who can make the foregoing declaration of faith, they will realize the situation. Would that course have been consistent with the position of the Declaration and Address, the centennial of which we are to celebrate? If those brethren would think more clearly and a little more deeply they would realize the responsibility which the committee faced, and be less free in their criticisms.

It is idle for our Cincinnati contemporary to go on publishing "protests" against placing an "infidel" on the Centennial program. If these protests are to be continued, let it be explained that they are directed against men who, while accepting the inspiration and authority of the Scriptures, and the divinity and Lordship of Jesus, with all that the New Testament says of him, hold some views of historical criticism which these protesters can not accept. If these statements of Prof. Willett do not satisfy these protesting brethren, let them nominate a court of inquiry to ascertain whether or not his religious position excludes him from our fellowship and from a right to appear on the program of our conventions. In all consistency, they can not continue to criticize the committee's action without adopting some means of determining whether Prof. Willett is guilty as charged.

Let it be remembered that the question is not whether Prof. Willett's views of historical criticism are true or not, but whether one holding to his faith in Christ and the authority of the Scriptures as he declares he does, and maintaining a Christian character, which even Prof. Willett's critics will not deny, is entitled to our recognition as a Christian brother, and to be treated as such, even though his opinions of biblical criticism may not harmonize with ours. That question goes to the very foundation of our plea for Christian union. We can not, we must not evade it.

Editor's Easy Chair.

One of the frequent inquiries that come to us, and generally, too, from professing Christians, is how they may strengthen their faith. They usually ask us to recommend some book which we think would remove their doubts, and give them a clearer and stronger grasp on spiritual realities. There are books, aside from the Bible itself, which often prove helpful in this direction. But after all, there is "a more excellent way." The trouble with most of those who have come to realize a weakening of faith and a loss of religious enjoyment, is not so much the lack of information as it is the lack of downright, honest dealing with God and with their own souls. In other words, it is the lack of loyalty to the truth which they already have, and to the light which has been made to shine upon their paths. Unfaithfulness to known duties and obligations is the breeding-ground of doubts. As the sure path to faith is walking in the light, as God gives us to see the light, so the way to maintain that faith is continuous obedience to what we believe and know to be the will of God. There are church members who neglect the daily reading of the Bible, who seldom pray in secret, who are careless in their church attendance, and whose lives, in general, are not different from those of the men of the world about them, who wonder why their faith is not as strong as it once was, and why they get less enjoyment out of their religion than at one time in their lives. It is a plain case of cause and effect. God has ordained certain means for our spiritual growth and development, as he has for our physical sustenance. If we neglect these means of grace we suffer spiritual leanness and sickness, just as the body weakens and suffers decay in the absence of its proper food.

What is needed among all church members and professed followers of Christ is to get down beneath all pretense and form and profession, to the bed-rock of reality. We need to ask ourselves such questions as "How has God manifested Himself to me?" "What is there in my religious experience that assures me of the reality of God, and that I have been in actual communion with him?" "What change is there in my character, my habits of life, my temper and disposition, my choices, my desires, my purposes and plans, to prove to me that God has entered into my life and is transforming it?" It is not simply a question of what Jehovah did for Abraham and Jacob and the prophets and the apostles, but what he has done for me that enables me to testify in my own consciousness not only to the reality of God, but to the power of his truth and grace to cleanse and transform my life. It is the neglect of so many church members to face questions like these honestly and relying too much on external testimony, that accounts for so much vagueness and weakness in their religious beliefs. The man who was born blind, and whose eyes Jesus had opened, answered all his critics and questioners with the statement, "Whereas I was blind, now I see." That one fact dispelled all doubts from his mind and was the one unanswerable argument which the enemies of Jesus could not meet. Thrice blessed is the man who, when questioned about his reason for believing in Christ as the Saviour of men, can say, "Whereas I was morally blind and dead in trespasses and in sins, mine eyes have been opened and I have been quickened spiritually and have received strength to live a new and better life, because of my faith and trust in Jesus Christ." When our faith rests on this bed-rock of reality, buttressed by the testimony of millions of others, and by the inspired record of God's Word, we shall not be troubled with doubts and fears concerning the truth of Christianity.

What, think you, would have been the future of Saul of Tarsus, if, after he had seen that vision of the risen Lord near Damascus, he had closed his mind and heart against the truth therein revealed to him, and had determined to continue in his old life as a persecutor of those who had taken upon them the name of Christ? Whatever sincerity or honesty there may have been in his conduct prior to that day, would have vanished, and the process of moral deterioration would have set in rapidly; and after a brief career of persecution he would have sunk out of sight as an ignoble, insincere and bigoted Pharisee, too mean to have maintained the respect of his own people. Verily, he stood at the parting of the ways on that memorable day, and it was with no little gratitude and pardonable pride that he said to Agrippa, long afterwards, "I was not disobedient to the heavenly vision." Here was the secret of Paul's greatness. When he saw the light he turned from darkness to embrace the light, and to walk in it loyally, though it brought him tears, persecution, imprisonments, shipwrecks, stripes, stonings and martyrdom at last. Hence his name shines as a beacon light among the immortals on the page of history. What might have been the destiny of that young man that came to Jesus and asked what he should do to inherit eternal life, had he gladly accepted the advice of the Master, and left all to follow him! It is reasonable to suppose that he would have been enriched and ennobled with many spiritual blessings and Christian graces, so that his example and, perhaps, his written words, would have been an inspiration to struggling souls through all coming time. But, failing to meet the test to which he was subjected, his name and future history are lost in obscurity.

We are accustomed to think of these testing times and turning-points in life as belonging to the heroic days of the past, when martyrdom was the price paid for fidelity. Not so, however. These are testing days in which we live. We are just now, as a religious movement, passing through one of these periods of testing which come to all persons, and to all religious movements. Shall we shrink or grow? Shall we go forward or backward? Shall we be obedient to the heavenly vision of truth which has come to us, or shall we turn away from it, to walk in the narrow and devious paths of sectarianism? Shall we manifest the large spirit of toleration and of liberty, which marked the teaching and example of Jesus, or shall we imitate the narrow, bigoted spirit of the scribes and Pharisees? Shall we be true to the original plea our fathers made for unity in faith and liberty in opinion, or shall we attach to opinions the sanctity of divine authority, and reject from our fellowship those who do not agree with us? In a word, shall we be true to the great reformation of the nineteenth century, which was conceived and brought forth in the largest spirit of brotherhood and unity, or shall we prove degenerate sons of noble sires, who are incapable of maintaining the breadth and catholicity of the movement, and permit it to dwindle into the proportions of a narrow sect? These are questions which are upon us today, and they are trying us "as by fire" The issue which has been created by the opposition to the Centennial program has not come an hour too early. It is time we had determined whether or not we are a free people. It is well that this question be determined before the celebration of our Centennial. Better to go to Pittsburg with diminished offerings from every department of our work, while maintaining our freedom in Christ, than to go there with the shackles on our minds and hearts, even though our missionary coffers be overflowing.

But, above all things "Let nothing be done through strife or vain glory." Let us all keep sweet and be reasonable. The fact is, it is time for thinking calmly and dispassionately. Time is an important element in the solution of our vexing questions. No doubt things will look very differently to us a few months hence from what they do now. We are adjusting ourselves to a new situation. It may take some time before the adjustment will be made. We shall all get in line for the Centennial, and we believe we should get in line with the principles of the Declaration and Address which we are going to celebrate. The Unseen Hand that guides the course of men and movements will not desert us in this time of need. Let us not fail to seek counsel from above and be kind to one another, and the issue will be all right. God reigns and truth is immortal. These lines are dictated just on the eve of our starting to Philadelphia to attend the Federal Council—a great meeting in the interest of the unity and co-operation of God's people. Our readers shall hear about it.

C. W. B. M. Day By Mrs. Anna R. Atwater

The Christian Woman's Board of Missions is an organization distinctively of the church. It can do its great work only under the approval and by the loyal support of the entire church. This it covets next to the approval of the Master, whose we are and whom we serve. For this reason it welcomes with joy the one opportunity of the year to present its work in the churches, that all the friends may know what is being done and may have the opportunity to make offerings for the support of its missions.

The natural growth of the work demands every year a larger outlay of money. Besides this growth, there continually come appeals for new work in new fields, so that the demands are always beyond our ability to comply with. We never had so much work to do as we have undertaken for this present year, and never were the appeals for help from all our fields, both home and foreign, so urgent. We come before the churches with an earnest prayer that they may hear our call and give help, so that we in turn may do the things expected of us.

Jamaica still pleads for the rebuilding of her ruined churches. Some of this work has been done, but much more must be done before our people are sheltered. Their self-sacrifice for the work has touched our hearts deeply, and the whole church must be stirred to know how they have given out of their poverty, not only for the maintenance of the cause on their island, but for world-wide missions. We must help them to restore their chapels at once.

Not one of our ten stations in India has enough workers. Several of our missionaries are to come home on a much-needed furlough this year, and the great question with those that remain on the field, and those that come away, is, how shall the work be cared for in their absence? We ought, in justice to our workers, to have ten missionaries on their way to India within the next few months. We ask the churches to consider this need and to hear the appeal of those who are so sadly overworked. One of them says: "We are praying in faith that a man and his wife may be sent out this year for this place. Please ask the brothers and sisters at home, who have it in their power to answer our prayers, if we must pray in vain. Must these poor, deluded people continue to lie in the dust at the feet of their dumb idols, asking for bread and receiving a stone? We can not believe that those who before have nobly answered to the cry of need will disappoint us now, but we believe that before the year is over we will hear of more workers on their way to India."

Every letter that comes from Mexico we open with the keenest interest, and yet with a sense of fear lest we may not be able to meet the new demand that has arisen. Congregations spring into existence so easily there, the people readily respond to the Gospel invitation. Opportunities present themselves every day to our workers and make them long for reinforcements that they may do the things so much needed. The places where strong gospel work could be done in S. G. Inman's field in southern Texas and northern Mexico are numberless. In Monterey our schools are crowded. Last year one hundred pupils were turned away for lack of room. This year our workers say: "Pupils beg to come to our school. Children slip in. Parents say they will send chairs when told there are no more seats; or they say that children of the same family can take turns sitting and standing and so rest each other. It requires much patience, much nerve strain, and not a little hardening of the heart to turn away from these pathetic appeals and hold to the principle of receiving only the number we can care for." Mexico is a ripe field. Help us to do a worthy work there.

In Porto Rico some of our promising stations have had to be closed for lack of missionaries. We must send within the next few months at least three more workers to that field. It is cruel to overwork those who are giving themselves so willingly to the service.

South America must soon have more help. Ohio's Centennial will bring a much needed new building, but this will not supply the needed missionaries. We must depend upon friends who hope to see the pure Gospel taught to these in this priest-ridden land, for help.

Mrs. Anna R. Atwater,

The financial stringency of the home fields has made the calls for help to weak and struggling churches more urgent than ever before. To many places we have been constrained to give help because the cry came that unless we granted their petition the doors of the church must be closed. We have made appropriations sometimes when we felt that we had no means with which to make them. Will the church not stand by us in this attempt to do work in our needy homeland?

Our negro schools and mountain schools grow larger, and, like growing children, their needs increase. With many who attend these schools it is the only opportunity of their lives for an education, and their appeals are pitiful.

The observance of C. W. B. M. Day in our churches should bring to our treasury, at the very least, $30,000 this year, and more than this, it is the time when we are calling especially upon the women of the churches everywhere to come into this great work, for we would see during this month a great advance made toward the accomplishing of our watchword for this year: "Womanhood Enlisted and Equipped; the Race Redeemed; the Christ Crowned."

BE STILL AND KNOW THAT HE IS GOD.

By Thomas Curtis Clark.

Be still and know that He is God,
O soul world-weary, sick of strife;
Ye who in death would seek release,
Look unto Him, and know His Life.

Be still and know that He is God,
When all thy hopes seem lost in night;
Still shines above the Sun undimmed,
Look unto Him, and know His Light.

Be still and know that He is God.
When all men hate thee, Look above!
There still abides the Faithful Friend;
Look unto Him, and know His Love.
St. Louis.

An Army of Peace.

It is not merely a peaceable army, but an army of peacemakers. Its task as such is not merely to reconcile particular enemies, but to make the principle of peace dominant in all the world and for all time. To this laudable endeavor it brings an excellency of membership, a thoroughness of organization and a strength of purpose that guarantee its success. For the third of a century it has been in the field, growing and developing all the time and winning new victories every day. The prestige of its magnificent record is one of the elements of its power in the fourfold campaign which is being waged this year.

The objective point of this campaign is the redemption of the human race and the enthronement of the Christ in every land. Under the wise and practical leadership of the general staff, certain definite fields are being occupied. These are located in strategic points of the United States and in Mexico, South America, Jamaica, India, Africa and Southern China. In order to more rapidly advance the conquest, and at the same time complete the dominance of the Christ at home, a special campaign of recruiting is in progress. Thirty thousand new members must be added to the ranks before the first of October, 1909. The very act of securing these recruits will materially aid in the discipline of the 55,000 members that are already enrolled. Abundant provision is being made otherwise for the instruction and equipment of both new and old members.

Let every one who knows tell of the advantages that come to the church in any community from having the women of its membership organized as an auxiliary to the C. W. B. M. If this open secret were widely enough known, two thousand new auxiliaries would be organized this year. Let every one who knows tell of the advantages and privileges of membership, the delightful meetings, the inspiring reports from the fields, and the uplifting fellowship into which even the newest member is introduced, and not merely 30,000 but 50,000 new members will earnestly seek membership in the auxiliaries before the Centennial.

The first Lord's day in December is the annual field day for this army of the Lord. As woman's place in the home, in the church, and in the state is vital, so should the men of the church, especially the leaders, earnestly co-operate with the officers of the C. W. B. M. to make this Centennial C. W. B. M. day a glorious success.

Bonjolongo, the Ex-Cannibal Soldier, Now a Soldier of Peace

By ROYAL J. DYE

In the early days of our mission at Bolenge, Injolo was a village to which our people of the river side dared not go, so wild and grossly cannibal was its reputation.

As the little church grew in numbers and its zeal carried it to still farther sections evangelizing, two of Bolenge's intrepid evangelists went to the big village of Injolo preaching. They trusted in that Lord they had learned to love and who said to them, "Go," that he would fulfill the promise that goes with the faithful obedience of the command, of "Lo, I am with you alway."

They preached up and down the populous streets of Injolo for many months. Some pooh-poohed, others openly cursed them, while others violently persecuted them. Of the first class was big strapping Bonjolongo. He was the head of his proud family and was only recently returned from a period of several years service as a state soldier, the dreaded "Bula Matadi." He had gone on many a government punitive expedition to the far distant back villages. In one instance in particular he had raided a small village of possibly a thousand people, and not only had killed many in the bloody contest but some had been carried off captive and the grewsome cannibal feast had been celebrated at the close of the raid. Bonjolongo took a prominent part in this affair and was recognized by the villagers of Isaka as a native of Injolo their feudal foe.

The evangelists preached up and down the streets of Injolo the plain old Jerusalem Gospel story, and Bonjolongo scoffed at it and them. "You couldn't stuff him with any such hoax as that." But finally he came to the mission at Bolenge, more out of curiosity than anything else, and laughed at this and that. He tried to tempt the various members of the young native church so recently removed from the very life he reveled in. Neither men nor women could he get to join in the old practices. Failing in these ways, he came to the missionary requesting some of that medicine we gave those others to make them refuse the old life. He was laughingly told that if there was any such medicine, he should certainly have all there was, but there was no such medicine. "Oh, yes," he said, "you would not give it to me. But if you let me into the secret of this society, I will go back to my big village and bring you up a great crowd. It will pay you to accept me into your society." He was told there was nothing in it and that there were no secrets, that there was but one way to get in and that was the "way of the cross." He came more constantly to the meetings and finally the light dawned on his soul and the Gospel transformed his life. He was baptized, together with his wife, who had been a faithful seeker, and another Injolo native. He went back to his great village not as a political propagandist but as an evangelist, burning with a zeal for souls. He preached up and down his own village streets, and what counted for more he lived the remarkably transformed life of a Christian. In the transformation of his life he had given up all of his wealth of wives and slaves. He redeemed his own little daughter less than six years old, whom he had sold off as a wife to a lecherous old chief, a great honor in the old regime. He brought her up to the mission and asked the mission mother if she would not take her and teach her as she taught all the orphan children.

Bonjolongo had the great joy of bringing his own old gray-haired mother to the Savior. Several others of his family followed, and he built up in that wild village of bloody cruelty and bestiality a little Christian community. When one of the missionaries went back there to establish them in the faith, he helped them erect their own chapel for prayer and praise to the Father they were learning to love. Bonjolongo came back to Bolenge, on one of his regular visits, with the desire to go to Isaka, the village he had raided in the old days. But we said to him, "They will kill you." He replied: "That may be, but I must go." We prayed together over this desire, and his resolve remaining firm we prepared him for the trip.
